GARRATTONIAN PHILOSOPHY: WHAT IS IT?

"He is not the discoverer who first utters a truth, but he who says it again and again until he compels mankind to hear him!" So said Sydney Smith.

The Odo-Magnetic method of healing is therefore not an experiment upon public credulity; its principles were recognised and employed (though imperfectly) for therapeutic purposes years ago. From the first introduction of Odo-Magnetic treatment to the present date it has received the marks of continuous and increasing favour. By it many who had despaired of their recovery from disease have become an astonishment to their friends and themselves; while some not perfectly cured, because absolute cure was not possible, have yet found their condition so ameliorated as to make life tolerable, if not enjoyable. In many instances it has so energized the nervous system that unavoidable pain has been borne with greater fortitude, and the unqualified testimony on all hands is that none of the remedies yet provided for human ills have conquered such a varied array of diseases, or have been so simple and comfortable in application.

The credit of this remedy is involved in each case treated; therefore we do not regard any labour as irksome which assists us in forming a clear idea of the patient's requirements, enabling us to suggest the form of application and degree of Odic Force which experience has shown to be effectual, according to the particulars communicated. We have no difficulty in this respect when our Case Forms for describing symptoms are filled in by our correspondents. Patients at a distance need entertain no scruple in writing to us freely, as all communications are strictly confidential and private. The secret of our success is simply that we make it a point to be informed of the details of cases, offer suggestions and advice, and insist on the adoption of our prescription in full if at all. We have known patients who had purchased and used Galvanic or Magnetic Appliances for some time without proportionate benefit, but who after reading carefully the instructions contained in our pamphlet, applied to us for the proper treatment, and having implicitly followed our advice, derived marked benefit in a few weeks, although they had formerly worn the self-selected appliance for months without benefit. For although Magnetism is applicable to a variety of diseases, if it is applied indiscriminately a patient may be disappointed, and thereby discredit, instead of increased confidence, may accrue to a remedy which is fully capable of meeting all his requirements. There must be special selection and adaptation to the diagnosis of each case.

This system of treatment is based and carried out on scientific principles, and is a practical thing. Theory and argument, discussion and speculation, belong to the past. Those who are able to realise the inevitable operation of Magnetic influences in the human organism, will allow our conclusions to be correct. Those who regard our treatment as an experiment may, by a full and fair trial of this remedy, prove for themselves the reality of the oft-repeated statement made by others, "that it has been the most satisfactory expenditure yet made in the pursuit of health." Very many patients have given us this experience, whose statements are either spurious, and mean nothing, or they are authentic, and mean that Magnetic treatment has availed where that of the ordinary practitioner has signally failed.

(To be resumed.)

Mr. Garratt will always be happy to confer with any scientific or medical gentlemen, either personally or by letter, upon any phase of the subject, or any case for treatment, and will send a private list of 900 names as referees to any address.—B. WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK

CASE of Mr. J. RANSOM, of HASTINGS.

This patient (whose full address is Arlington House, St. Thomas'-road, West-hill, Hastings), writing me, March 13, on behalf of a poor man, says:—

"Your medicine saved my life, under God's blessing. You will remember you reported my case as one of Bronchitis, Diseased Lungs, with Liver Affection." (This was so; and on account of the complicated nature of the case I was not sanguine as to his recovery.) "I had been under three doctors, and their opinion as to the nature of my disease coincided with yours. I thank you for your great kindness to me. Through your advice and medicine I have been completely cured, and I am now as well as I ever was in my life. I have advised several persons to write to you, and shall do so."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

The Christian.

CONCENTRATION AND UNITY THE NEED OF THE TIMES.

THERE is no lack just now of schemes and agencies for meeting the gigantic evils which are rife in our midst. For dealing with the unbelief and irreligion that prevail there are churches enough; numberless schools and Mission rooms exist, and Christian institutions, admirable in their respective spheres, abound on every hand. For battling with the evils resulting from strong drink, Temperance organisations, sound in the principles they adopt, and strong in their influence for good, are to be found wherever we turn. For every other kind of social and national reform we see active exertions put forth, and fresh forms of activity constantly being developed.

Yet we fail to keep pace with the advancing tides of error and of sin. Is there not a cause? May not the cause be found largely in the lack of concentration and co-operation on the part of those who, having one end in view, are yet working as though there were no links of fellowship between the servants of the one Master they serve? Between the various apparent divisions of the enemy's camp there is real union, as is soon seen when the enemy's cause is really endangered. Hence the power which is wielded on the side of error, and in favour of that which is evil and contrary to godliness. The hosts of darkness work together, they direct their energies with one consent, and so, in a great degree, obscure and check the march of the hosts of light.

Multitudes of earnest workers are so taken up with, and absorbed in, their own plans of action and separate spheres of labour, that they fail to realise the enormity of the evils with which they have to contend, and also the true amount of force which is required to successfully cope with them. At the same time they also fail to comprehend how much power is on the side of righteousness, if only it were well directed and definitely employed. They are, consequently, weak when they might be strong, and often depressed when they might otherwise be encouraged. Guerilla warfare may serve a purpose sometimes, and under some conditions it may be safe and needful, therefore wise, to divide our army, and even our regiments, for separate action, and in minor operations, but it is essential to triumph and success that the power of massing the troops at will, and concentrating their efforts in one direction, should be maintained. Occasions arise when, if this is not so, the enemy triumphs, and the cause is lost.

Our own times are of such a character as to require far more of this centralisation of moral and spiritual force than we seem able to secure. Denominational Unions doubtless serve a purpose, but union on undenominational lines is sadly wanted. Numbers of earnest workers yearn for it. While not prepared to surrender their conscientious convictions as to points of doctrine wherein differences of opinion always have existed, and always will, so long as this dispensation lasts, they nevertheless fail to see that these should prove separating barriers between brethren in Christ. Not to break up churches or found new sects, but to bring together in true fraternal conference and hearty co-operation those of all communities who are animated by this desire, is the great object to which it is requisite that the prayerful and earnest attention of thoughtful Christian leaders should be given.

Many are feeling the pressure of circumstances arising out of the growing worldliness and political furore which prevail in connection with modern church life. They can do little to correct these evils in the spheres they are called to occupy; their protest, by reason of fewness and isolation, is weak. If such could be drawn together in friendly conference, mutual action be promoted, and general agreement as to further open testimony for Christ and the spirituality of his kingdom secured, many who now feel alone, and, like Elijah under the juniper-tree, ready to give up, would gain fresh heart and new hope. Finding a reserve force far larger than they supposed possible, like-minded with themselves and ready for the field, they would go forth in renewed vigour and might to assert the claims of their Lord, and to confront the degenerate spirit of the age.

The apostle of infidelity is summoning his followers to concentrated effort by organising a crusade throughout all the cities and towns of the land, in order to secure the legal status, and parliamentary influence for himself and his opinions he has as yet has failed to obtain. Vigorous as were the efforts made by his opponents in the recent struggle on the Affirmation Bill, and strong as are the feelings of many of them now, action seems on their side to have ceased. Yet the need for it is as great as ever, if the danger is to be permanently averted.

It is for want of centralisation, and for lack of united and concerted operation, that in this, as in other directions, effort is relaxed. There are many, very many, who are prepared to band together for the cause of God and truth, as opposed to Bradlaughism and all anti-Christian forms of error, as well as on behalf of spiritual religion as opposed to formalism and unhallowed mingling with the world on the part of the Church. They thirst for union on orthodox grounds, while they refuse to adopt it on the latitudinarian lines for which so many plead. They long to stand shoulder to shoulder, and link heart to heart, hand to hand, with those who are like-minded with themselves. Let such pray, and pray fervently, that the Lord may open the way for calling out and forming into solid phalanx all who are prepared to take such a stand for the name of Christ and the glory of God. At the same time let it be theirs to show, by their spirit of forbearance, conciliation, and love toward those of their respective churches who differ from them, that it is in no mere spirit of opposition, but simply out of fidelity to conscience, and devotion to their Lord, that they take a position of separation from what they cannot regard as being in accordance with the will of God.

A PLEA FOR OUR FISHERMEN.

I ASK your permission to plead to-day for a field which has long lain fallow for people for whom nothing has yet been done. In the summer of 1881 the attention of the Thames Church Mission was directed to the religious destitution of the many thousands of men employed in the Deep Sea Fisheries. By the kindness of Messrs. Hewett and Co. some agents of the Mission were allowed to take passage in their steamers to the fishing smacks employed near the Doggerbank, and occasional services were conducted amongst the crews. In the summer of 1882 the good providence of God opened up a way by which a sustained and continuous missionary work might be carried on, especially amongst these vessels (known as the Short Blue Fleet), with results, in part made known to your readers, which have been most gratifying. I speak of the arrangement made by the kindness of the owners of the Ensign, which has become in effect the floating church of the Thames Church Mission.

But this happy enterprise has only touched the edge of the great necessity which has been made manifest by the experimental efforts of the Thames Church Mission on behalf of the Deep Sea Fishermen. There are seven other fleets occupied after the same fashion, in which about 10,000 men and boys are employed under circumstances of toil and hardship and of constant danger, which can only be appreciated by those who know the roughness of the Northern seas and the inevitable risks of the fishing craft. While the Committee were longing to extend their work in this direction, the owners of two new vessels, the Cholmondeley and the Edward Auriol, now on the stocks, came forward and with great generosity offered them for service amongst these outlying fleets. The cost of their maintenance and management as Fishing Smacks will be entirely sustained by the owners, but they are being so fitted as to become, like the Ensign, floating churches furnished with all requisites for the work of Bible and Tract distribution and of Temperance advocacy, and with libraries of books suited for circulation amongst seamen. They will also be supplied with medical necessaries and comforts. The Committee of the Thames Church Mission (Offices, 31, New Bridge-street, London, E.C.) have gladly accepted this offer, and have made themselves responsible for all these missionary and benevolent agencies, in full confidence that your readers will aid them by contributions to their "Fishermen's Fund," which they now propose to create as a branch of their general work.

What need I say to move on behalf of these fishing fleets the generous concern of those who are never slow to recognise their obligations to all who serve the public weal? Far from home, which they only see at long intervals; employed in a calling which is full of danger always, and which presents a death-rate of startling magnitude; exposed to much temptation by the agencies of sordid men who trade upon their weaknesses and their helplessness; with no opportunities for rest or recreation, for the worship of God, or for social intercourse with their friends, the men of these fleets toil, and eat, and drink, and sleep, and toil again, in a laborious monotony of destitution of all that most men understand of life and comfort. Is it not clear that our blessed Lord and Master has still a voice for the Fishermen, like those in whose labours He most often bore company? and may we not hope that many another Simon and Andrew, and James and John, may follow Him at his call, borne to them by these "Church Smacks," not "leaving their nets," but finding in the pursuit of their present duty and calling the opportunity for proving the blessedness of his service, and of becoming also "fishers of men." This is an apostolical succession which all may joyfully unite to sustain and to perpetuate.—Yours faithfully,

CHOLMONDELEY, Vice-President.

"IT IS FINISHED."

(JOHN xix. 30.)

By CHRISTMAS EVANS.*

THIS exclamation derives all its importance from the magnitude of the work alluded to, and the glorious character of the Agent. The work is the redemption of the world; the Agent is God, manifested in the flesh. He who finished the creation of the heavens and the earth in six days, is laying the foundation of a new creation on Calvary. Four thousand years He has been giving notice of his intention to mankind; more than thirty years He has been personally upon earth preparing the material; and now He lays the chief corner-stone in Zion, exclaiming, "It is finished."

Consider the import of the exclamation—

(1) "It is finished." This saying of the Son of God is a very striking one; and, uttered as it was, while He hung in dying agonies on the Cross, it cannot fail to make a strong impression upon the mind. It is natural for us to inquire, "What does it mean? To what does the glorious Victim refer?" A complete answer to the question would develop the whole scheme of redemption. We can only glance at a few leading ideas.

The sufferings of Christ are ended. Never again shall he be persecuted from city to city, as an impostor, and servant of Satan. Never again shall He say, "My soul is exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death." Never again shall He agonise in Gethsemane, and sweat great drops of blood. Never again shall He be derided by the rabble, and insulted by men in power. Never again shall He be crowned with thorns, lacerated by the scourge, and nailed to the accursed tree. Never again shall He cry out, in the anguish of his soul, and the baptism of blood—"My God! my God! why hast Thou forsaken me?"

The predictions of his death are fulfilled. The prophets had spoken of his crucifixion many hundred years before his birth. They foresaw the Governor who was to come forth from Bethlehem. They knew the Babe in the manger, as He whose goings forth are of old, even from everlasting. They drew an accurate chart of his travels, from the manger to the cross, and from the cross to the throne. All these things must be fulfilled. Jesus knew the necessity, and seemed anxious that every jot and tittle should receive an exact accomplishment. His whole life was a fulfilment of prophesy. On every path He walked, on every house He entered, on every city he visited, and especially on the mysterious phenomena which accompanied his crucifixion, it was written—"that the Scriptures might be fulfilled."

The great sacrifice for sin is accomplished. For this purpose Christ came into the world. He is our appointed High Priest, the Elect of the Father, and the desire of the nations. He alone was in the bosom of the Father, and could offer a sacrifice of sufficient merit to atone for human transgression. But it was necessary also that He should have somewhat to offer. Therefore a body was prepared for Him. He assumed the seed of Abraham, and suffered in the flesh. This was a sacrifice of infinite value, being sanctified by the altar of Divinity on which it was offered. All the ceremonial sacrifices could not obtain the bond from the hand of the creditor. They were only acknowledgment of the debt. But Jesus, by one offering, paid the whole, took up the bond, the handwriting that was against us, and nailed it to the cross; and when driving the last nail, He cried, "It is finished."

The satisfaction of Divine justice is completed. The violated law must be vindicated; the deserved penalty must be endured, if not by the sinner himself, yet by the sinner's Substitute. This was the great undertaking of the Son of God. He "Bore our sins," that is, the punishment of our sins—"in his own body on the tree." He was "made a curse for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him." There was no other way by which the honour of God and the dignity of his law could be sustained, and therefore "the Lord laid upon Him the iniquity of us all." He "died unto sin once;" not merely for sin, enduring its punishment in our stead, but also "unto sin," abolishing its power and putting it away. Therefore it is said, He "made an end of sin"—destroyed its condemning and tormenting power on behalf of all them that believe his sufferings were equal to the claims of justice; and his dying cry was the voice of Justice Himself proclaiming the satisfaction. Here, then, may the dying thief, and the persecutor of the holy, lay down their load of guilt and woe at the foot of the cross.

The new and living way to God is consecrated. A veil has hitherto concealed the holy of holies. None but the high priest has seen the ark of the covenant, and the glory of God resting upon the Mercy-seat between the cherubim. He alone might enter, and he but once a year, and then with fear and trembling, and the sprinkling of atoning blood after the most careful purification, and sacrifice for himself. Christ has filled his hands with his own blood, and entered into heaven itself, there to appear in the presence of God for us. The sweet incense which He offers fills the temple, and the merit of his sacrifice remains the same through all time, superseding all other offerings for ever. Therefore we are exhorted to come boldly to the throne of grace. The tunnel under the Thames could not be completed, on account of an accident which greatly damaged the work, without a new subscription for raising money; but Jesus found infinite riches in Himself, sufficient for the completion of a new way to the Father—a living way through the valley of the shadow of death to "the city of the Great King."

The conquest of the powers of darkness is achieved. When their hour was come, the prince and his host were on the alert to accomplish the destruction of the Son of God. They hailed Him with peculiar temptations, and levelled against him their heaviest artillery. They instigated one disciple to betray Him and another to deny Him. They fired the rage of the multitude against Him, so that the same tongues that lately sang, "Hosanna to the Son of David!" now shouted, "Crucify Him! crucify Him!" They filled the priests and scribes with envy, that they might accuse Him without a cause; and inspired Pilate with an accursed ambition, that he might condemn Him without a fault. They seared the conscience of the false witnesses, that they might charge the Just One with the most flagrant crimes; and hardened the hearts of the Roman soldiers, that they might mock Him in his sufferings, and nail Him to the cross.

Having succeeded so far in their hellish plot, they doubtless deemed their victory certain. I see them crowding around the cross, waiting impatiently to witness his last breath, ready to shout with infernal triumph to the depths of hell, till the brazen walls should send back their echoes to the gates of the heavenly city.

But hark! the dying Saviour exclaims—"It is finished!" and the great dragon and his host retreat, howling, from the cross. The Prince of our Salvation turned back all their artillery upon themselves, and their own stratagems became their ruin. The old serpent seized Messiah's heel, but Messiah stamped upon the serpent's head. The dying cry of Jesus shook the dominions of death, so that the bodies of many of the saints that slept arose; and rang through all the depths of hell the knell of its departed power. Thus the Prince of this world was foiled in his schemes, and disappointed in his hopes, like the men of Gaza, when they locked up Samson at night, thinking to kill him in the morning; but awoke to find that he was gone, with the gates of the city upon his shoulders. When the Philistines caught Samson, and brought him to their Temple, to make sport for them, they never dreamed of the disaster in which it would result—never dreamed that their triumph over the poor blind captive would be the occasion of their destruction. "Suffer me," said He, "to lean on the two pillars." Then he bowed himself, and died with his enemies. So Christ on Calvary, while the powers of darkness exulted over their victim, seized the main pillars of sin and death, and brought down the temple of Satan upon its occupants; but on the morning of the third day He left them all in the ruins, where they shall remain for ever, and commenced his journey home to his Father's house.

(2) So much concerning the import of our Saviour's exclamation. Such was the work He finished upon the cross. We add a few remarks of a more general character.

The sufferings of Christ were vicarious. He died, not for his own sins, but for ours. He humbled Himself that we might be exalted. He became poor, that we might be made rich. He was wounded, that we might be healed. He drained the cup of wrath, that we might drink the waters of salvation. He died the shameful and excruciating death of the cross, that we might live and reign with Him for ever.

"Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to have entered into his glory?" This "ought" is the ought of mercy, and of covenant engagement. He must discharge the obligation which He had voluntarily assumed. He must finish the work which He had graciously begun. There was no other Saviour—no other being in the universe willing to undertake the work: or, if any willing to undertake, none able to accomplish it. The salvation of one human soul would have been too mighty an achievement for Gabriel—for all the angels in heaven. Had not "the only-begotten of the Father" become our Surety, we must have lain for ever under the wrath of God, amid "weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth." None but the Lion of the tribe of Judah could break the seals of that mysterious book. None but "God manifest in the flesh" could deliver us from the second death.

The dying cry of Jesus indicates the dignity of his nature, and the power of life that was in Him to the last. All men die of weakness, of inability to resist death—die because they can live no longer. But this was not the case with the Son of God. He speaks of laying down his life as his own voluntary act, —"No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." "He poureth out his soul unto death"—did not wait for it to be torn from Him—did not hang languishing upon the cross, till life "ebbed out by slow degrees;" but poured it out freely, suddenly, and unexpectedly. As soon as the work was done for which He came into the world, He cried—"It is finished!" "bowed his head, and gave up the ghost." Then the sun was darkened, the earth quaked, the rocks rent, the graves opened, and the centurion said—"Truly, this Man was the Son of God!" He cried with a loud voice, to show that He was still unconquered by pain, mighty even upon the cross. He bowed his head that death might seize Him. He was naturally far above the reach of death, his Divine nature being self-existent and eternal, and his human nature entitled to immortality by its immaculate holiness; yet "He humbled Himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross"—"He bowed his head, and gave up the ghost."

We may regard this last exclamation, also, as an expression of his joy at having accomplished the great "travail of his soul," in the work of our redemption. It was the work which the Father had given Him, and which he had covenanted to do. It lay heavy upon his heart, and oh, how was He straitened till it was accomplished! His "soul was exceedingly sorrowful, even unto death;" "and his sweat, as it were, great drops of blood, falling down to the ground." But upon the cross, He saw of the travail of his soul, and was satisfied. He saw that his sacrifice was accepted, and the object of his agony secured—that death would not be able to detain Him in the grave, nor hell to defeat the purpose of his grace; that the gates of the eternal city would soon open to receive Him as a conqueror, and myriads of exultant angels shout Him to his throne, whither He would be followed by his redeemed, with songs of everlasting joy. He saw, and He was satisfied; and, not waiting for the morning of the third day, but already confident of victory, He uttered this note of triumph and died.

And if we may suppose them to have understood its import, what a source of consolation it must have been to his sorrowing disciples! The sword had pierced Mary's heart, according to the prediction of old Simeon over the infant Jesus. Her affections had bled at the agony of her supernatural Son, and her wounded faith had well-nigh perished at his cross. And how must all his followers have felt, standing afar-off, and beholding their supposed Redeemer suffering as a malefactor! How must all their hopes have died within them as they gazed on the accursed tree! The tragedy was mysterious, and they deemed their enemies victorious. Jesus is treading the wine-press in Bozrah, and the earth is shaking, and the rocks are rending, and the luminaries of heaven are expiring, and all the powers of nature are fainting, in sympathy with his mighty agony.

Now He is lost in the fire and smoke of battle, and the dread artillery of justice is heard thundering through the thick darkness, and shouts of victory rise from the troops of hell, and who shall foretell the issue of the combat, or the fate of the Champion? But lo! He cometh forth from the cloud of battle, with blood upon his garments! He is wounded, but He hath the tread and the aspect of a conqueror. He waves his crimsoned sword, and cries: "It is finished!" Courage, ye weepers at the cross! Courage, ye tremblers afar off! The Prince of your salvation is victor, and this bulletin of the war shall cheer myriads of believers in the house of their pilgrimage, and the achievement which it announces shall constitute an everlasting theme of praise!

"It is finished!" The word smote on the walls of the celestial city, and thrilled the hosts of heaven with ecstacy unspeakable. How must "the spirits of just men made perfect" have leaped for joy, to hear that the Captain of their salvation was victorious over all his enemies, and that the work He had engaged to do for them, and their brethren, was completed! And with what wonder and delight must the holy angels have witnessed the triumph of Him, whom they were commanded to worship, over the powers of darkness! It was the commencement of a new era in heaven, and never before had its happy denizens seen so much of God.

"It is finished!" Go, ye heralds of salvation, into all the world, and proclaim the joyful tidings! Cry aloud, and spare not; lift up your voice like a trumpet, and publish, to all men, that the work of the cross is finished—that the Great Mediator, "made perfect through sufferings," has become "the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey Him"—"is of God made unto us, wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption!" Go, teach the degraded pagan, the deluded Mohammedan, and the superstitious Papist, that the finished work of Jesus is the only way of acceptance with God. Go, tell the polished scholar, the profound philosopher, and the vaunting moralist, that the doctrine of Christ crucified is the only knowledge that can save the soul! Go, say to the proud sceptic, the bold blasphemer, and the polluted libertine, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." Preach it to the gasping sinner upon the death-bed, and the sullen murderer in his cell! Let it ring in every human ear, and thrill in every human heart, till the gladness of earth shall be the counterpart of heaven!

For the Young.

MORE ABOUT EVA AND DOUGLAS.

LIKE all children, they delight in Bible stories, and their remarks are amusing. Telling them about "the one little ewe lamb," and how, just as the rich man of many flocks and herds took away the poor man's one treasure, so God took away his baby boy, Douglas growled out, "Serve him right!" and Eva said, with an almost vindictive gleam in the big blue eyes, "I'm very glad!"

The Prodigal Son is another favourite tale. "Tell us about the boy who spent all his money." I suggested "wasted," but the distinction is too fine for them. Douglas's look and gesture of disgust at the Prodigal longing to eat even the swine's food are comical, and the softened radiance of their faces when "the Father runs to meet him" is pretty to see, and Eva's little confident nod of her head, as she says, "Our papa do that too!"

Sunday is really a "happy day" with them. On the morning of last Sunday King Baby was brought to say good-morning, preceded by Douglas, walking backwards, in true court style. "How bright he looks!" said I. "Because he knows it is Sunday," said he, in a triumphant tone.

Their evening prayers are often very long, as any event of the day must be duly mentioned. Having seen a woman ill-treating her child in the street, they said: "Do make that woman kind to her little boy;" and on telling Eva about a little girl who was blind, and would never see the flowers and sunshine, she burst into tears, and would not be consoled until told that she might pray for her, so every night she says, "And do take the little blind girl soon to heaven, where she can see everything." SHELTERING HOMES OF LIVERPOOL.

Our Homes have both been as full as a hive all winter. The church next door has been crowded with our widows' class, who have met together through the kindness of our Liverpool member, Mr. S. Smith, and every Wednesday had a meat tea and sixpence for two hours' sewing.

It is blessed work to receive the poor children, wan, cold, ragged, and starving, as they are. In the space of half-an-hour we are able to transform their outward appearance; and then we tell them that Jesus loves them; and that is why we love them too. The last girl I admitted took tea with me in my sitting-room. Before commencing, I tried to get her to shut her eyes and fold her hands while I asked God to bless our meal. She folded her tiny hands, but her bright eyes she kept fixed intently on me, and the moment I had finished, she exclaimed, "Who are you talking to with your eyes shut?" I replied, "To God." "And will He hear? I don't see Him." "Oh, yes! He will hear, for He loves us." She then said, with a great sigh of relief and such a sweet smile, "Oh! I am glad He loves us, because He won't hurt us, will He?"

On March 22 our band of lads was taken to Canada under the care of our teacher, Mr. Edward Carter. They were very speedily placed in good homes and situations by our admirable co-worker, Miss Meiklejohn. At Halifax they were met by our good friend, Dr. Clay, of Halifax, who said that he had visited over a thousand children, and that they were all doing well.

Our second band left on the 26th of April, the day of the Liverpool Convention, and quite a cloud of prayer ascended to God for them. They arrived safely, and are placed. Our third party will sail on the 31st inst. in the Sardinia. We ask all who love this work to seek the Divine blessing upon us as we go on the great deep with our precious charge to seek loving, happy homes for them in the bright land of Canada. Rev. R. A. Lundie is also sailing with us, and his testimony about the work as carried out on the other side will be most acceptable to all our friends. LOUISA BIRT.

RAGGED CHURCH AND CHAPEL UNION.

EXETER HALL has been turned to good account during the month of May; but never did it more worthily fulfil its purpose than on the evening of Wednesday, the 23rd inst., when the Committee and friends of the Ragged Church and Chapel Union celebrated the thirtieth anniversary of that useful society. There are no less than 106 Mission halls in connection with the movement, yet £400 was all that was raised last year for this God-like work. A deeply interesting report was read by the Hon. Secretary, Rev. Burman Cassin, of St. George's, Southwark.

Mr. George Williams, of St. Paul's Churchyard, occupied the chair, and showed from the marvellous growth of London the need of increased effort. Among the speakers were Revs. R. C. Billing, G. D. Hooper, and W. Tyler, with Colonel Sandwith, Mr. G. Holland, Major John Smith, and Mr. John V. Farwell, of Chicago. The last-named gentleman generously arranged with the Chairman to contribute £80 towards the extinction of the deficit, and the balance was discharged by the Rev. W. Tyler.

CORRECTION.—In our issue of May 17, 82, Camberwell-road, Peckham, S.E., was given as the address of the Mission carried on by Mr. G. W. Linnecar; it should have been "Mansion House Mission, Mansion House-square, between 212 and 214, Camberwell-road, S.E."

EARLY CLOSING.—The Committee of the Early-Closing Association have issued a circular appealing to ladies to avoid late shopping, so that the thousands of young girls who lead lives of excessive toil may have a little time for enjoying the fresh air. We trust our readers will not forget this request.

REMINISCENCES OF RAILWAY TRAVEL.

I.

WHILE railways have done so much to advance the material interests of men, they have also afforded precious opportunities for advancing their spiritual and eternal interests, when they have in the providence of God been placed before the servant of Christ, for the exercise of his love and skill in bringing before them the truth which saves and sanctifies. Especially are those opportunities to be embraced, I think, when we find ourselves shut in with one or two travelling companions for a long journey, for this affords a means of personal appeal and freedom of speech which we should earnestly seek to use in wisdom and love.

As a specimen of these opportunities, I should like to tell your readers, with your kind permission, of a journey I made a few years ago from Manchester to Edinburgh. It was convenient for business to travel by the night train, and soon after midnight I found myself shut up in a third class carriage with two men whose appearance was not prepossessing. I therefore placed myself in the corner farthest from them and endeavoured to read. But the conversation of the two men became too lively for this. I soon gathered from it that they were American backwoods men, who had saved some money and had now come to spend it in seeing the old country. In imitation of many nights they had spent in the wilderness, they now sought to beguile the tedious hours by the relation of adventures in the far west, the Rocky Mountains, and the mines of California.

I might have been interested in this, but, alas! their narratives were interlarded with oaths such as I had never heard before from human lips. All that the devil could suggest of variety and refinement in blasphemy they poured forth, and the sacred names of God, Jesus, and the Holy Ghost, were constantly bandied in their talk. My first impulse was to entreat them to desist, but I saw that that would be to prevent their speaking at all, as they could not open their lips without an oath. Visions of bowie knives and revolvers, with which they were evidently familiar, rose before me, and (I must confess it), to my little faith, life seemed to be imperilled if I spoke.

Yet it was dreadful to think of being silent while God was blasphemed. So I lifted up my heart to God, and prayed that some opening might be made for my speaking to them. The prayer was soon answered, for they began to speak of their adventures with serpents, especially in the Rocky Mountains, of their finding them in their tents, or in their beds, and of their conflicts with them, in which I noticed the attack upon the head was a prominent feature. Now I saw the opportunity had come, and praying that I might be able to use it aright, I went close to them and told them that I had been interested in hearing of their struggles and conflicts, especially as regarded serpents, to which I had, like them, a special aversion. I proposed, if they would allow me, to tell them how this came about. They made no objection, and I went on to tell them of the creation of man in perfect happiness and holiness, and how he had fallen into sin and misery through the temptation of the devil, who had made the serpent his instrument, but that God in his mercy had promised a Deliverer who should bruise the serpent's head. I heard one whisper to the other, "I never heard anything like that before; it is wonderful!" And now I felt the way was open for a full exhibition of Christ and his work, and of the happy consequences to those who receive Him as their Saviour, in sin being pardoned, and the powers of Satan broken in the heart and life. I had said nothing to them about their swearing, and had set God before them as full of compassion, and delighting in mercy; but I was truly thankful to hear in their first remarks the operation of conscience and conviction of sin.

As soon as I ceased speaking, one of them said with much feeling, "Oh, how you must have been grieved with our swearing. It is a bad habit we got in the backwoods, and we hoped to leave it behind us, but it has been too strong for us." But evidently some power had come with the Word, for I do not recollect a single oath escaping them in the few hours we spent together, in which I encouraged them to speak of their own history, from time to time coming back to the "old, old story." We parted as friends, with many thanks on their part, and with encouragement, and thankfulness to God, who had graciously blessed a weak endeavour, on my own.

THOUGHTS ON HOLINESS.—10.

By Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE.

THE OUTER LIFE OF HOLINESS.

PART II.—MATT. vii. 13.

SO we reach the thirteenth verse: "Enter ye in at the strait gate, for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

Do is still the key-note of the chapter. We are to get up and press into this highway of holiness. We have heard the sermon, and now it is to be done, for we are only what we do. He that doeth righteousness is righteous. He that doeth the will of the Heavenly Father, he and he only shall enter into the kingdom of heaven. By this we are to know false prophets, testing their doctrine by their deeds. Holiness is not in saying, "Lord, Lord!" Pious phrases, pious tones, pious looks, pious professions, count for nothing, unless there is the doing of the Father's will. He that heareth and doeth not, builds his house upon the sand; he that heareth and doeth, builds his house upon a rock.

Think what real peril there is in knowing without doing. We may very easily cheat ourselves with the delusion that what is thoroughly familiar to us must have wrought itself into us. We have heard it so often, and believe it as such a matter of course, that we are quite persuaded it must have woven itself by this time into the very fibres of our being. We speak of repentance and faith. "Of course, of course; it is wearisome to be reminded of such commonplace truths," sighs the hearer; and yet repentance and faith are not one whit the more ours because we have heard of them so often, but the hearing has produced a substituted confidence, like the pillow of goats' hair which Michael set in place of the living David.

And this imposture, true of the most commonplace things, is at once more easy and more perilous when it belongs to a set of truths which we think of with much solemnity, almost with awe, upon which hang the tremendous issues of eternity, which we sing about in our hymns, and pray about in our prayers. The substitute for life is more apt to impose upon us when it is arrayed in the stately robes of worship, and is set up in a devotional attitude.

And greater still is the power of such knowledge to impose upon us if it comes to us as a truth which fills the imagination with a glowing splendour, lighting up all the chambers of the imagery like a sun, illuminating our dull consciousness, and filling us with a sunny brightness. Such a reception of the truth the more readily becomes the brilliant substitute for doing it.

And yet, perhaps, most of all are we tempted to put knowing in place of doing when the hearing of the Word really moves upon the heart, filling us with the thought of great triumphs, girding us with sublime resolutions, transforming our poor little life into a thing of amazing possibilities and glorious hopes. So for a brief hour we have listened, heard, believed it all we are astonished at the doctrine. We acknowledge the authority. What more is there?

"ENTER YE IN."

Raptures, resolutions, glowing visions, great desires—there is no holiness in these. We must get up, rousing ourselves; and we must press in, meaning it and striving earnestly—for holiness is in doing, and in doing the will of the Father which is in heaven.

Look at Israel, on the shores of the Red Sea, and listen to their song of triumph. Was there ever such a glowing assurance of possession as that which rang out in their song that day? Not of triumph over Egypt only, but what a confidence that the land of Canaan was theirs. Jerusalem, the holy city itself, and the stately splendours of the Temple, seemed already to belong to them.

"Thou hast guided them in thy strength unto thy holy habitation. The people shall hear and be afraid: sorrow shall take hold of the inhabitants of Palestina. . . . All the inhabitants of Canaan shall melt away. Fear and dread shall fall upon them: by the greatness of thine arm they shall be as still as a stone; till thy people pass over, O Lord, till the people pass over which thou hast purchased. Thou shalt bring them in and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place which Thou hast made for Thee to dwell in, in the sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have established." (Exod. xv. 13—17.)

Yet forty years afterwards they are still outside, and the word is spoken: "Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon that have I given you, as I said unto you." Theirs by promise, theirs by glowing visions, theirs by triumphant hope. Yet it was not theirs until they had set foot upon it. They could only make it theirs by occupation and by appropriating it. Till then, with all their promises and hopes, they had only the wilderness, the sky of brass and stretch of dreary sand; restless pilgrims were they, instead of being at home amidst the vineyards and olive-trees. Knowing about it, singing of it, longing for it, availed them nothing. They had to enter in and possess it. Holiness is thine and mine, dear reader, when we will get up and enter into it, in Christ's name, in Christ's strength, in CHRIST HIMSELF.

Think aright of the strait gate. We read it as if it meant this—that I am to come to Christ for forgiveness, and then I must strive and crush through this narrow way as well as I can in my own strength. And we soon learn that it is all a dreary failure. Christ Himself is the strait gate. "I am the Door; by Me if any man enter in he shall be saved, and shall go in and out and find pasture." Because we mistake the door we fail. Christ Himself is the way, the truth, and the life.

There often is a preparatory struggle, but "Holiness is not a struggle." It is only obtained when struggling ceases, and trust ng is entire and unhesitating. Struggling is not at all necessary. Infinite power never struggles, and if we claim oneness with God his strength is ours.

This is a point which perplexes some. We learn that Holiness is not a struggle, it is a victory. It is not a trying, but a trusting. And yet this phrase, and the whole figure, suggests difficulty, struggle. Think of Christ himself as the strait gate, and all is plain. My struggle must be directed to this one end —to find Him, to be in Him, to dwell with Him. Holiness is a power in Christ, not a blessing in me, apart from Christ, and I have it so long as Christ is mine and only then. Christ is Himself the way, the highway of holiness. My struggle and the energy of the Holy Ghost are to be put forth to this end, as the Apostle teaches us: "That He would grant you to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith." Then out of that indwelling comes all else: "To the end that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height, and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God."

Do let us note clearly the purpose of our effort and striving. It is not to become the sons of God. It is to receive Christ, for "as many as received Him to them gave He power to become the sons of God." Our doing must be upgrowth from our knowledge of Christ. For whilst there is a knowing Him that does nothing, there is also a doing much which knows Him not. "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have not we prophesied in thy name? and in thy name cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? Then will I profess unto them, I never knew you. Depart from me, ye that work iniquity." It was a doing that lived in no communion with Him; that never listened for his voice, or waited upon Him to know his will; or came back to Him to render the account. The "wonderful works" which had not their root in Him, drawing from Him their life and strength, He denounces as iniquity.

Then our Lord closes the sermon with the parable of the two builders: he that heareth, and doeth; and he that heareth, and doeth not. The figure continues the line of thought which immediately precedes the parable. Each house was a doing—a labour. Probably, building on the sand is the greater labour of the two. But the wise man's labour was to get on to the rock. As soon as that was his foundation the Rock gave its strength to the whole building. Every stone in it was firm, because the foundation was good. THAT ROCK WAS CHRIST. Our strength is in building on Him. To separate the sayings from Christ, and then to try and do them, is also to build our house upon the sand.

This, then, is the point at which knowing passes into doing. It is when we come unto Him, and give ourselves and all belonging to us right up to Him for his service; and we take Him as our strength for service, receiving Him as our Saviour and helper as well as our King and Lord. Then in his strength living our life of holiness, referring instinctively to Him our work and pleasure, asking, "What wilt Thou have me to do?" waiting upon Him to know his will, and then doing it, so that all the life is his service, and we can think of no higher heaven than to be always pleasing Him.

It is very needful for us to see this clearly —the aim of our striving. Take as an illustration the words of Peter: "Be sober, be vigilant, because your adversary the devil as a roaring lion walketh about seeking whom he may devour; whom resist." How do we read this? Is it that we are to set ourselves resolutely to resist the devil, and then he will flee from us? That if I make up my mind and stand firmly against him, the enemy is not only powerless, but he will be driven back baffled and beaten? Is this the lesson that Peter learnt from his encounter with that old lion? Has he forgotten the words of his watchful Master: "Simon, Simon, Satan hath desired to have thee . . . . but I have prayed for you that your faith fail not"? Turn to the passage again, and see what else there is: "Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God." That first,—have no confidence in yourselves, but come down, be weak and little, and low enough to creep in under the mighty hand of God for shelter; "casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you"—this care as well as all other, the care of being taken care of. Thus sheltered and screened, resist him, steadfast in faith—in faith, that is, the hand that holds to the Lord.

Think what a cruel mockery it were if the shepherd should say, "Little lamb, be sober, be vigilant, the old lion is about. Be not so eager after thy buttercups and daisies as to keep no sharp look-out, and if he comes upon thee, stand up bravely against him and he will run away." Then the shepherd goeth away over the hills, and home. The lamb scarce ventures so much as to nibble, in the eagerness of its watch and in its fears. And, lo, with the darkness there cometh the lion. What of watchfulness and brave resistance? One stroke of that paw, and the lamb is dead! Is that it? Then let him, who knoweth anything of his own heart, despair. Eat and drink, for to-morrow we die.

No; thou and I, my brother, are no match for the old lion. Be sober, be vigilant, be not so eager after anything that thou dost suffer the Good Shepherd to go far from thee; keep looking up that thou mayest see Him. Thy safety is only in his presence, thou canst rest only in his shadow. Cast all the care of thy safety upon Him, and then let all thy thought and prayer and effort be to keep close to Him. The only peril lies where Peter found it, in following Him afar off. John was too close to his Lord to be tempted to deny Him. Right in under that mighty hand is the place of our resistance.

Thus the practical Apostle James puts it. "Submit yourselves therefore to God." "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you." "Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you." Our effort is to get near to God and to keep there, then we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us. "I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge," where I run and hide from my foes. Then "I will say of the Lord, He is my fortress," where I turn and fight against them. "Surely He shall deliver thee."

Mr. Boardman tells us that one day he was passing through a large city, and having an hour to spare, he called upon an old friend, a shot manufacturer. As they were sitting together his friend asked him "if he would like to have the world under his feet?" Mr. Boardman understood the suggestion that they should go to the top of the shot tower, and at once fell in with the proposal. Presently he reached a passage in which he saw a stone staircase going winding up into the darkness, and he began to mount the steps.

"No," said the friend, "you are going wrong. It is down here."

Mr. Boardman stopped and thought there was some mistake. "We are going up to the top of the tower, are we not?" he asked.

"Yes," said his friend, "and you must go down here to get there. That is the old way; dark and dusty and full of cobwebs. But you would find a door near the top that is nailed up now. You would only knock your head and get covered with dust, and then have to come down again. This is the way." And he pointed to two or three steps that went down.

"Going down is a strange way to get up," he thought.

"Now all you have to do is to sit still."

"But I can never get up by sitting still, surely," said Mr. Boardman.

"Trust me," was the reply, "and you will see."

Instantly they began to rise. They were on a lift; and in two minutes they stepped out high above the city, to find the world under their feet.

This is our victory—coming down to get up. Trusting Him, and then sitting still with Him "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blest us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ."

So the Sermon on the Mount ends. Yet it is very beautiful and blessed to carry it on a little bit further, to the incident that immediately follows, if, indeed, it does not grow out of the sermon. Remember, again, the "unto Him" with which the sermon begins. "And seing the multitudes, He went up into a mountain: and when He was set, his disciples came unto Him: and He opened his mouth and taught them." Then turn to the "unto Him" with which it ends: "And when He was come down from the mount, great multitudes followed Him. And," so St. Mark says, "behold there came a leper to Him, beseeching Him, and kneeling down to Him, and saying unto Him, Lord, if Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean."

Think of the leper and of all the voices that bade him be clean. How all his once moral sense, and all his efforts to hope, and all his struggles, his medicines and spells, all had said unto him, Be clean. But the word was without power. The law stood over him, and demanded of him that he be clean, but it was powerless to help him, and could only drive him forth a branded outcast. Think of any who should meet him and bid him "Be clean." Poor fellow! it only mocks him to talk so. "Ah, it is what I long to be," he sighs, "and I have tried every way I can think of."

But now he kneels at the feet of Jesus. Now the Lord bends over him in tender compassion. He speaks—oh, so much more than a word—BE CLEAN; and as the ear drinks in the music of that voice the heart leaps with a new strength; the wasted heated weariness is gone; life comes back to him, fresh, pure, delicious, like the life of a little child. Immediately his leprosy was cleansed.

There for us, too, is the blessing that we need, but only there—IN HIM, AT HIS FEET. As He bends over us in his compassion, as his hands are laid upon us, as the words drop from his lips, the blessing is ours. The King's command, and yet so much more than a command as he speaks it—a word having authority: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

FORTSLADE ROAD MISSION HALL. — The helpers in this Mission, although poor in this world's goods, support the work almost entirely. Meetings, outdoor and indoor, are held all day on Sunday as well as children's and prayer meetings on Wednesday. We are encouraged by hearing from time to time persons profess to have been saved through the work. The hall is a railway arch by Wandsworth-road station. Supplies of tracts and back numbers of suitable periodicals will be gratefully received by K. A. Brittain, Hon. Secretary, 88, Ganden-road, Clapham, S.W.

THE DUTY OF THE CHURCHES TOWARDS WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

THE readers of The Christian who have shown so deep an interest in our great women's movement, and have given me such earnest and affectionate support, both by their prayers and their sympathy, will doubtless be interested in a summary of

in a hard winter's work. Whatever the depth and magnitude of the evil to be combated, however much we may be forced to realise that we are attacking the very stronghold of Satan, and that he will assuredly stir up all the powers of evil against us; however desperate a battle it seems at times, till at last, beaten and sore bruised, one can only "fall as one dead" at the feet of Jesus Christ, yet through it all we have the strongest manifestation that God is with us of a truth.

Only a few weeks ago I was speaking on the same platform with Mr. Samuel Bowly, the veteran champion of temperance. For fifty years he stated he had been fighting for that great national cause, and yet it is only within the last five or six years that the Excise has shown a decided falling off, and that there has been a marked change in public feeling. I have only been working six years; Mrs. Butler and her colleagues have only been contending against vicious legislation for fourteen years; the penitentiary movement, which only dealt with results and did not profess to touch the causes, dates back only thirty years or so; yet even in the short six years that I have been working, I can see the most marked change of public opinion. This year I can only compare it to the breaking up of a long frost, and as if all the seed that had been sown in such bitter tears and anguish, and mid such angry abuse, were now springing up, till one's heart is very full of thankfulness to Him who giveth the issue.

Let me go over the ground we have gained this winter. First—and the amendment of the present scandalous defects of the English law, for which I pleaded hard when I first began to work, but could get no hearing, has now taken firm hold of the public mind. The Bishops have formed themselves into a Committee for considering and forwarding it. A powerful Committee, called the Minors' Protection Committee, with eminent London barristers upon it, and with delegates from almost all the London societies for the benefit of women and children, is pressing the question upon the whole of London and its suburbs. At its instance Cardinal Manning at once caused petitions to the House of Lords in favour of the legal protection of the young to be signed in all the churches under his jurisdiction, an admirable promptitude of action which we wished could have been followed by our Anglican bishops.

My secretary and myself have worked the rest of the country, 230 large towns and districts having sent up petitions, and 760 rural deaneries having been applied to for the same purpose. Perfect unanimity reigns in our counsels. Two points are unanimously agreed to. First, we maintain that a girl's virtue should be legally protected up to eighteen, whereas the present legal protection stops short at thirteen. Next, we insist that legal protection from the trade of vice should extend to twenty-one. There is now practically no protection whatever. At any age an unruly little girl may run off from her situation, or from the parent she has quarrelled with, and as long as she abducts herself, and is not abducted by any specified individual, any vile den of infamy may harbour her without an indictable offence being committed.

Nothing, I believe, has done so much to educate public opinion, and get people to face the question, as this work of petitioning, which has been taken up with great enthusiasm by the working-classes, especially the poor working mothers, an especial leaflet having been issued to working fathers and mothers. We regret that the Bill shortly to be brought in by Government is likely to be actually stopping legal protection from even the trade of vice just short of the most dangerous age in a girl's life, sixteen, the very age at which we know the largest number of girls go wrong! If this melancholy piece of legislation passes without an amendment, we must continue agitating till a more satisfactory measure is obtained.

Another great forward step we have gained is in getting the National Church to face the question in her corporate capacity. At the last Church Congress it was with the utmost difficulty that the subject could obtain a hearing at all, and then only as a concession to a woman pleading the cause of women and children, and at a meeting with five others going on at the same time. At the next Church Congress the subject is down in the authorised list, and a meeting of men only is to be held, which will bring it before the rank and file of the clergy as well as the earnest Church laity. Let us hope those two clergymen in a northern town will soon become extinct who refused to give out some bills for a meeting of working mothers on the early training of our girls and boys, "because it was such a delicate subject they could not possibly mention it"!! Let us trust that these lavender kid gloves will shortly give place to hands of flesh and blood. Steady progress is also being made towards the forming of for the prevention of the degradation of women and children, on the same broad basis as the Church of England Temperance Society. Will not the Nonconformist bodies be stirred with holy jealousy, by the vigorous action of the Established Church, to bear their part in the great conflict?

On the immense step gained by the condemnation, by a large parliamentary majority, of the unjust and immoral principle lying at the bottom of certain objectionable legislation, I need scarcely comment. Even the advocates of State Regulation of Vice allow that that legislation is now practically crippled; and an immense moral force which has been used up in the merely negative measures of agitating against it, will now be set free for the constructive measures that we so vitally need. Let us remember that in getting rid of wrong legislation we have done absolutely nothing towards solving the problem itself. We have got rid of a wrong solution: the right solution has yet to be found.

And may I not, in summing up the winter's work, again earnestly thank the readers of The Christian for their co-operation in distributing and circulating the little pamphlet, "Grave Moral Questions" (Hatchards). It is now in its one hundredth thousand, and is daily awakening hearts to care and pray and suffer and work.

Lastly, let me speak of a movement which I cannot but believe has a great future before it, in raising the moral tone of England, and infusing into her men a higher, manlier, more chivalrous feeling towards women: I mean the Bishop of Durham's inaugurated by one of European fame, who wears his weight of learning "lightly like a flower" above his stainless years. The name is a peculiarly happy one. Purity is too tenderly sacred a thing to be bandied about in circulars, or even talked of too glibly, and, therefore, it is best represented by its symbolic colour—white. The army has a comfortable sound of chivalrous defence and disciplined strength; the Cross—no badge, but the sacred truth preached from every pulpit—embodies for us the fact that the movement is based on the perfect humanity of our Lord, and that self-giving which is at the bottom of all true manhood, as well as of all true womanhood. The motto is that of the spotless knight, Sir Galahad:—

> My strength is as the strength of ten,
> Because my heart is pure.

The obligations are the Oxford principles, a little more simply worded: (1) To treat all women with respect, and endeavour to protect them from all wrong and degradation. (2) To endeavour to put down all indecent language, and coarse jests and conversation lowering to women. (3) To maintain the law of purity as equally binding on men and women alike. (4) To spread these principles among my companions, and help my younger brothers. (5) To use all possible means to fulfil the command, "Keep thyself pure."

The old chivalrous feeling to women is put in the forefront, the one thing you can speak openly to a young man about, the one thing to which an Englishman most deeply responds, the Christian ideal which is one of "The truths deep-seated in his mystic frame;" "that the man is to love the woman, and give himself for her."

I addressed the men of the Bishop of Durham's Institute at his own wish, and have since addressed many meetings, of men only, in connection with the White Cross Army, sometimes as many as 2000 men. We were told that such meetings would be inevitably attended with an outbreak of the coarse jocularity with which men treat the whole subject. I can only say I have never addressed meetings marked by a deeper solemnity and enthusiasm; and they have made me feel that there is a great unsuspected force in the men of England to fight this base and cowardly evil of the degradation of women when powerful men have the courage to come forward and head the movement, and no longer leave a woman to take the lead, at the terrible sacrifice of every feeling of her own nature—a sacrifice only possible for the sake of other women and children, who are sacrificed in ways that makes any sacrifice borne for their sakes light indeed.

In conclusion, I would remind my beloved sister women that we must be the strength, the enthusiasm, the inspiration, of this great dawning movement among men. The responsibilities resting upon us women seem to me at this present time almost terrible.

ARE WE GOING TO BE TRUE TO OURSELVES,

true to the dignity of our own womanhood, or are we going on being so awfully untrue, that a speaker at the Church Congress could say, and say truly, "Whilst women admit into their own intimate society men known to be in the habit of degrading women, whilst women have so little respect for themselves, how can they expect men to respect them?" Are we going to bear the shame and offence of the Cross, when it presses most heavily among our own equals? Are we going to set our faces sternly against the man, even though he be an Earl or "a good match," who we know is doing his best to make our womanhood a vile and accursed thing? Are we going to be content to let our sons form a pure attachment, or to marry on small means, because, though against their worldly interest, we know that it is the best safeguard to that crowning grace to which alone the vision of God is promised, to which alone it is possible? Are we going to bring up our girls, no longer as fine ladies, but to be the God-fearing wives of poor men, to manage the sewing-machine, to learn how to cook, and how to train the rough servant-girl, to know how to economise, and marry the man they love on a small income?

It is easy to subscribe to Training Homes and Free Registry Offices and Penitentiaries, but it is hard to bear the cross in our own lives, in our own rank, to be true, to make real personal sacrifices. But let us remember all that is at stake. Do not let us think that this is an evil we can waive off sublimely into the back streets; let us realise that it presses quite as heavily on us as on the lowest poor.

If it is thought that I exaggerate, that I have got this question on the brain, then take the quiet statement of one of our greatest mission preachers: "You must remember that with nine young men out of every ten this is the temptation they have got to fight." Why should we think that our son will always be the untempted tenth, and not one of the tempted nine! The facts that have ever turned my whole heart sick and my whole heart faint, have not been so much the facts of the back streets and the slums, as the facts of our great public and private schools into which we have to send our boys for education. It is our own sons that we are fighting for, in body and soul. It is our own nation that we have to save. Surely the great American evangelist's witness before five thousand men in Liverpool will not be wholly in vain, when he bore testimony that it is altogether a mistake to suppose that intemperance is the only or even the chief sin of England; what is eating out the noble heart of England is this sin of our degraded womanhood.

Surely thinking of our own sons, of the little children of our land, of our own England, we, the women of England, will be able to say with our Divine Master, "For their sakes I sanctify myself."

CORNWALL.—Thousands gathered as usual at Gwennap Pit at Whitsuntide, and listened attentively to an earnest sermon by Rev. C. Pickels, of Penzance. At the close, most of the people flocked to the Fair, in Redruth, where the Town Mission workers held a protracted service, helped by friends from other places. Services were subsequently held at Camborne and Truro. On the Sunday we held the usual service among the Show people, having one of the show stages to speak from. Thousands of tracts were distributed during the week.

J. W. WILSON,
Redruth. Town Missionary.

ENTERED INTO REST.—A correspondent sends some particulars of the life and death of Rev. George Lea, late of St. George's, Edgbaston, for fifty-six years an active minister of the Established Church, and a most devoted servant of Christ. Throughout his long ministry he earnestly set forth the love of God; his life was so holy and consistent that, in the words of one friend of forty years' standing, "he had reached a standard of conduct immeasurably above all around." Last Easter increasing age and infirmities compelled him to resign his living; his strength rapidly declined, and on Thursday week he was laid to rest in Christ Church, the scene of his first labours in Birmingham.

VOYAGING WITH MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

FROM the diary of Mr. W. Hind Smith, who lately crossed the Atlantic in the Alaska, we are permitted to make the following extracts:

Sunday, April 29.—On rising about seven I found the vessel in Queenstown Harbour. Finding there would be no regular service on board this morning, and being got clear about ten, Mr. Ripley and I started a singing meeting. We soon gathered a hundred of our fellow passengers, and had a good time. We were enabled between the singing of the hymns to say a few faithful words. We decided to meet on deck twice each day, all being well, for short services of singing, &c.

In the afternoon the Church Service was conducted in the saloon by the purser. Mr. Sankey sang several hymns. Mr. Moody was not well enough to join us. At four we had another service outside. A nice time with the emigrants brought a happy day to a close.

Next morning nearly all except frequent sailors were ill. On Tuesday, May 1, I felt rather better, and had a good time with the emigrants, who were delighted with the service. In the evening, Mr. Sankey distributed a bundle of his hymn-books among the emigrants, who received him very warmly; after this we had more singing.

Wednesday morning was very pleasant, but as the day went on the wind changed, and the ship began to ride instead of plough through the waves, and the motion was not altogether desirable. In spite of wind and rain and motion, we had two good deck-services, and gladdened many hearts. Many men and young women are from Cornwall, and not a few appear to be decided Christians. The Germans enjoy the singing although they cannot join in the language. While speaking to these groups on the features of Daniel's character, we sang, over and over again, "Dare to be a Daniel." They entered into the spirit of the thing thoroughly.

Thursday, May 3, was a lovely morning. During the day a strong head-wind sprang up. When we were at dinner such a wave broke over the dome-light of the saloon that we wondered "What next?" It was with difficulty we had scrambled into our chairs, and when there the difficulty of keeping the plates was great enough. . . . After dinner I found a retired place, where I saw great preparations being made for the storm—packing the doors with waterproof sheets, boards, and putty. The scene of trying to get up and downstairs was amusing. Such a clinging to the balustrade, and such swinging to and fro, such bumping and tumbling! I went to bed early, in the hope of a fair night. All night the rolling and pitching of the vessel went on, but about six o'clock I turned out to find a glorious morning. . . . . At ten I went off to my congregation, and kept with them, singing, talking, and reading, for an hour. Mr. Moody came and showed himself, and asked for the Dutch, Swedes, and Welsh. Each nationality sang in their own language. Mr. Ripley read Luke xv., and, on the whole, we had one of our best times; and several hundred present.

After lunch the weather became very cold, and we soon found ourselves off the banks of Newfoundland. Great excitement prevailed as three icebergs, and then a fourth, some of vast size, appeared. We had several captains on board returning to America for ships; one, who has often encountered these enemies to navigation, says that only one fifth of their actual size appears above water. Two of those we saw were estimated at 120 feet high. Many passengers, including Mr. Sankey, said they never saw such a sight before, although they have crossed the Atlantic many times.

What a contrast the steerage passengers present to my former experience when the Irish Roman Catholic so prevailed as to endanger my life. At first, here, we had a little opposition, but now several of the opposers are helping us. When I see the tears that start as we speak and sing of the love of Jesus I am made glad that we began these services the first day. A considerable number of the saloon passengers now join us in the singing.

Saturday, May 5.—Such a lovely morning; we have come to our last day. It is fully expected that we shall record the quickest passage ever made from Queenstown to New York. We had a capital service, the Swedes sang in their own native language, "Hold the Fort," "Shall we Gather at the River?" and "Even Me." One of the Irishmen who opposed us at first is now quite a leader of the singing, and some of his mates yesterday pinned a paper on his back with the following words on it: "Salvation," "Saved." I took the ticket off, to the astonishment of the company, and told the way they might then and there be saved. I have kept the ticket as a memento of the incident.

We have had two capital services this afternoon, the first by Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and the other a temperance meeting, when seventy signed the pledge. One of the ringleaders in a kind of rebellion, at one of the early services, was the first to sign the pledge and don the blue ribbon.

About five o'clock on Sunday morning, Master Joe, our bedroom steward, came into our room and said they had just stopped the engine to take the pilot on board. On getting up I found that in spite of fog and our going further south than is usual to get rid of icebergs, we had travelled from Queenstown to New York in the shortest time ever recorded—viz., six days, twenty-three hours, and forty-eight minutes. We reached the Custom House at about nine, and had our things examined; we got through this operation about eleven, and then went to the Y.M.C.A.; in a few minutes in came Messrs. McBurney, Morse, and others, and I had a most hearty welcome.

Mr. John Ripley, of Caygill's Tourist Office in the Strand, was a passenger on the Alaska, and sends some reminiscences of the voyage to The Christian World. In the course of his letter he says:—

"It is gratifying to me to state that I have not heard a profane oath since we left Liverpool, nor have I seen a man at all affected by drink, neither did I ever take a voyage, either short or long, where I saw greater harmony and friendliness prevail, than I have seen during this voyage. This I attribute in a great measure to the singing of Mr. Sankey's hymns, the short addresses that were delivered at each service, and the strong Temperance and religious elements from Cornwall, Wales, and Sweden; for at each meeting the English and the Swedes alternated and interspersed their singing. On Friday afternoon Mr. Moody gave a very acceptable address to the people, while Mr. Sankey conducted the singing; right pleasing was it to see the anxious crowd gathered at the steerage, some holding on by the ropes of the ship, and others occupying any point where they could either see or hear, and listening with the utmost attention to Mr. Moody's words, though some of them could not understand a word of English. Equally pleasant was it to hear all their voices blend in the singing of the hymns. At the close of Mr. Moody's address we held a Temperance meeting, Mr. H. Smith presiding; and the writer of this gave an address, at the close of which seventy of the people signed the Temperance pledge, and determined to start the battle of life on the continent to which they were journeying as total abstainers. When they reach the places at which they intend to settle they will send their addresses to me, and I promised to forward from London to each of them a pledge-card and a piece of blue ribbon. The only one whom we could decorate with the blue was a young Irishman who disturbed us at the first, and to whom I transferred the decoration from my own coat."

HOLLOWAY EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—The annual meeting of this Mission was held on the 7th May, when it was reported that 500 indoor and 276 outdoor meetings had been held; 500 pledges had been taken during the year, and free breakfasts had been given. Testimonies were given by those who had received spiritual benefit. The promoters appeal for help to carry on the work. Mr. H. Putterill, 94, Frederick-street, Caledonian-road, is superintendent of the Mission.

Notes and Comments.

MANY of our readers will be glad to know that the striking paper by Mr. George King, of the China Inland Mission, Hankow, which appeared in our last issue, may be had in leaflet form. It is entitled "Shall the Gospel be preached to this Generation of the Chinese?" and is published at this office, with an Introduction by Rev. J. Hudson Taylor. (Price 6d. per dozen.)

Mr. George C. Needham has been preaching at Merrion Hall, Dublin; congregations large, and the work of conversion going on steadily. Mr. and Mrs. Needham are returning home to America very shortly.

Rev. Josiah Henson, so well known as the original of Mrs. Stowe's "Uncle Tom," died at Dresden, Ontario, on Sunday, May 6, in his ninety-fourth year. Many will remember with pleasure his visit to our own country, and the features of interest connected with it. "Heaven is better than Kintuck, Massa George," were the last words of Mrs. Stowe's hero; the real "Uncle Tom" has left behind him the blest assurance that he has gone to prove the superior joys of that world where perfect freedom from all ill is eternally secured. He was a sincere Christian, and an earnest preacher of the Gospel of Christ.

After a long and dreary winter time we seem suddenly to have leaped across the lap of spring into the heart of glorious summer. Rapturous visions of blue ocean and green fields, of shady bowers and babbling brooks, are haunting the thoughts of those who spend their days in "the loud and stunning tide" of city life. How many of the tender human plants, young and old, that drag out a sickly existence in our great metropolis are longing for one day's release we wot not, but their name must be legion. Who will help in granting to them this much-prized and long-remembered boon? We are receiving calls upon our "Day in the Country Fund," but as yet there is no fund. We confidently trust to the generosity of our readers in this matter, as we have done in years gone by.

Doubtless there are many friends residing in the near country, who could place a field or a park at the disposal of those London workers who arrange the day's outing for their youthful protéges. Any kindness shown in this or other ways would bring with it a rich reward.

The eight days' Gospel temperance campaign in Exeter Hall had an auspicious beginning on Sabbath evening last; the body of the great hall was well filled, and there was a strong muster of well known workers on the platform. Mr. George Williams presided, and introduced the special subject —The Desecration of the Lord's Day—in his most genial and hearty way. Mr. Kirkham's address was full of pertinent facts well marshalled; the utterances of Messrs. Murphy, Sen. and Jun., were telling, and raised the enthusiasm of the audience to a white heat. At the close pledge-signing was actively carried on for some time. Messrs. Murphy will alternately address the noonday prayer meetings at Exeter Hall and Aldersgate-street every day throughout the week. As announced, we shall next week give a double number containing the pith of the addresses delivered during the Mission.

A writer of eminence now deceased said some time ago:—

One thing is certain—that infidel science will rout everything except thorough-going orthodoxy. All the flabby theories, and the molluscous formations, and the intermediate purgatories of speculations will go by the board. The fight will be between a stiff, thorough-going orthodoxy, and a stiff, thorough-going infidelity. It will be e.g., Augustine or Comte, Athanasius or Hegel, Luther or Schopenhauer, J. S. Mill or John Calvin.

This is receiving fulfilment at a speedy rate. The fact that it must be so should induce timid waverers, and those who lean over to half-hearted measures in relation to the treatment of error, to come out and boldly assert themselves on the side of uncompromising adherence to truth. Calebs are wanted on all sides, men who follow the Lord fully. Elijahs too, who cannot tolerate halting between two opinions. Gideons likewise, who throw down the altars of Baal, and go forth to pitch right over against the Midianites.

There are many indications that the parliamentary struggle on behalf of social morality and a righteous treatment of "the weaker sex" is far from being ended. It will be seen from the letter by Miss Hopkins, in another part of this paper, that she has no very sanguine expectations of the Bill for the Protection of Young Girls, to be introduced in the House of Lords, being adequate to the necessities of the case. It would further appear that, such as it may be, the Bill will meet with determined opposition from certain honourable (!) members of the Lower Chamber, if not of the Upper—probably of both. In a short but trenchant article, headed "Parliamentary Assassins of Innocence," in the June Sentinel (Dyer Bros.) the editor says:—

Let not the friends of artless innocence think that the battle is won, or nearly so, because the Government has promised to bring in a Bill based upon the recommendations of a Committee of the Upper House. Members of Parliament who are themselves the assassins of innocence are not likely to consent without a severe, if shameless struggle, to any measure that would curtail the gratification of their diabolical lusts. These persons and their abettors (and all are their abettors who seek to prevent the better legal protection of girlhood) sit on both sides of the House. No moral man, whether in their constituencies or elsewhere, owes them one particle of consideration. If it be possible, let the weight of their infamy be brought home to them. Shall the conventionalities of Society stand in the way of the prevention of the massacre of innocence? The poet of the American Anti-Slavery movement —J. G. Whittier—might well in tones of astonishment address to English men and women the words that he spoke to his own countrymen in the dark days of negro slavery:—

"Shall tongues be mute when deedsare wrought
Which well might shame extremest hell;
Shall freemen lock the indignant thought;
Shall Pity's bosom cease to swell;
Shall Honour bleed; shall Truth succumb;
And pen, and press, and soul be dumb?"

It becomes every valorous friend of the weakest and most sorely tempted portion of the community, to bestir themselves and bring such pressure to bear on the two branches of the legislature as shall compel the passing of a sufficient measure, and defeat the machinations of heartless and wicked men, whatever be the rank they occupy or the social influence they possess.

Another article in the same issue of The Sentinel, entitled "An Important Principle at Stake," should be carefully read and pondered by those who wish to see our nation free from all complicity with vicious expedients in Government and law making.

A paper representing Liberals and Nonconformists has questioned the genuineness of the petitions against the Affirmation Bill; and another representing the Church and Conservatives has attempted in like manner to discredit the petitions in favour of Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister. Considering the value of the right of petition, it seems to us a very impolitic and mischievous thing, for party purposes, to discredit petitions, and quite unjustifiable, unless on clear evidence that they are not what they profess to be.

It were much to be desired that all great proprietors in our cities and towns were like the Duke of Westminster, in his inveterate dislike to public-houses, and determined purpose to lessen their number. It is said that he has closed no less than twenty-four on his Grosvenor-square estate within the last five years, and that he will not renew the leases for the continuation of others which still remain. Would that a similar spirit animated owners of such property in the East-end, and, indeed, all round.

Since our last issue, another birthday anniversary of our beloved Sovereign the Queen has come and gone. We devoutly join in the thankfulness felt by the whole nation that her life is still prolonged, and pray that yet many years may pass before she ceases to become the occupant of the English throne. Her Majesty lives in the hearts of her subjects as no monarch before has ever done, and with feelings of no ordinary fervour and depth we say, "God save, and bless with ever increasing blessing, our noble and gracious Queen! Long may she live to continue her reign of beneficence, purity, and exemplary virtue!"

By the death of Dr. William Chambers a notable personage has been removed from the literary world. Perhaps no man did more to bring about the cheapening and popularising of literature of an educational and entertaining class. Not a little of the marvellous advance our age has made in social and educational directions may be attributed to the enterprise he and his brothers displayed fifty years ago in their publishing work. Dr. Chambers stood high in the esteem and confidence of his fellow-citizens in Edinburgh, and will be long remembered with respect by many on both sides the border. The honour of a baronetcy came all too late.

Cardina Manning has just been expressing his opinion on the state of Christendom, and, we fear, puts the matter only too truthfully when he says:—

No civil order in the world ever sank so low as the Christian world is sinking now, and will be sunk if the name of God be erased from its public laws. You have lately asked of those who make our laws that none should legislate for us except those who believe that there is a Divine Lawgiver, whose law is supreme. But it seems as if we were being carried down a stream against which we cannot prevail, and from which there is no escape, as if in a little while the public life and laws of the world will be no longer Catholic nor Christian, nor based upon a belief in God. Other foundation for men or for morals there is none. There are many who see where we are rushing downwards, and desire it; and many who see it with horror, but with folded hands do nothing against it; and many more who see nothing, and are being carried away unconsciously into a social and political state without God in the world. For the first time since the world began it is openly rejecting God. The old world so profusely believed in the Divine, that God was everywhere and in all things. To them even the world was God, and all things were supernatural. Now God is nowhere, and exists no longer; the world is dead.

His ambiguous reply to Mr. F. W. Chesson, who recently wrote to him as to his views on the Affirmation Bill, becomes still more mysterious and unaccountable when read in the light of the Pastoral from which we quote. In that reply the Cardinal said:—

I feel myself to be so little of a judge on political or even social questions, and religious questions so seldom come before us, that I rarely feel it a duty to form and to express an opinion on any subject of a public nature.

In the Pastoral, however, referring to legislation of this very character, he says, and very rightly as to the duty inculcated:—

Necessity then is laid upon us, from the least to the greatest, everywhere and in every way, to bear witness for God, "in whom we live, and move, and are." In this there can be no neutrality. To be silent among the seditious is to abet treason. The law of the land still justly punishes offenders against God and his moral law; not indeed for its offences against Him, but for its damage to society; and there is a clamour that such laws should be abolished. If men libel their neighbour they may be heavily punished. If they only libel God as our Divine Redeemer, we are told that no man should judge them. The Catholic flock in England is few in number; but we have only one heart and one voice in condemning these outrages on all that is Divine.

It is officially announced that the Marquis of Lansdowne will succeed the Marquis of Lorne as Governor-General of Canada, in October next. The post is one of considerable importance in its relation to some of our home politics, as well as to the Colonial Government itself. There is every reason to believe that the new Governor will bring many qualities to bear upon his influence and work, from which results of a very satisfactory kind may be expected to follow. The Times speaks of industry, common sense, and sound judgment as qualities for which the Marquis has been all along distinguished. These go far to make a successful and worthy occupant of any post of responsibility.

The old cathedral church of St. Giles, Edinburgh, was reopened on Wednesday last by the Earl of Aberdeen, as Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly. Nearly twelve years have been occupied in the work of its restoration, the cost of which, to the extent of some £50,000, has been defrayed by the munificence of Dr. William Chambers, whose decease just on the eve of its completion cast a shadow over the proceedings at the opening ceremony. An address prepared by him as almost his last act was read, and touchingly acknowledged by Lord Aberdeen, who paid a high tribute to his worth. Rev. Dr. Cameron Lees preached the opening sermon, from Josh. iv. 21, "What mean these stones?"

It does not say much for the earnestness of our present House of Commons in reference to social reform that on Tuesday, while a majority of a hundred could be obtained for an adjournment over the Derby Day, in the discussion on the Sunday Closing Bill the same evening a count-out was easily effected, and the second reading probably shelved for another session. The friends of national measures for the benefit of the working classes, and all who are concerned for the preservation of our Sunday observance, had need bestir themselves, and would do well to ask their representatives where they were on an occasion when their influence was required on behalf of so important a matter. The question is being asked: Where were the bishops when the opening of museums, &c., on Sundays was being discussed? We may also ask: Where were the friends of the Sabbath on Tuesday night, when their cause was so much at stake?

An American daily newspaper—stated by some to be The New York Herald, and by others to be a Cincinnatti paper—has arranged to have Mr. Spurgeon's Sunday morning sermons cabled the same day, and published in its issue of Monday morning.

The following statistics of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, furnish a commendable illustration of zeal and energy in the resistance and overthrow of evil, as well as reveal the great necessity there is for such resolute and vigilant action:—

During the past year the agents of the Society have seized 219,386 lottery tickets, 71,759 lottery circulars, suppressed six lotteries in this State, and convicted seven policy gamblers. They also "raided" 54 gambling saloons and closed several pool-rooms in New York and at Hunter's Point, seizing over 1,000,000 pool-tickets.

Whether we survey the state of things at home or abroad in reference to the employment of active measures for the promotion of vice on the part of those who make capital out of its victims, there is abundant evidence to show that this is no time for relaxing zeal in opposing the authors of such measures, and unearthing their secret plottings and advances. If we are to keep pace with the emissaries of the evil one, we must strain every nerve to help on the cause of righteousness by the use of every possible means in our power. Social reformers as well as Christian philanthropists do well to remember the subtlety and power of the adversary with whom they have to contend.

Those who have been accustomed to think that Missionary work is unremunerative in a practical sense, will find food for reflection, and probably ground for altering their opinion, when they read Dr. Angus's testimony as to one branch of modern Missionary enterprise. In a recent speech he said:—

No work, no money, is more productive than work done, than money spent, for God. Some years ago I visited Jamaica, and had occasion to examine the work done there during the preceding thirty years. Fifty missionaries had been sent out in that time, of whom thirty then remained. In these thirty years our society had spent, in sending out and supporting missionaries, £100,000—with what results? We found at ninety stations property in chapels, schools, and ministers' houses, which had cost £140,000, £40,000 more than all the money we had spent there from the beginning of our mission. The money value of what we found was nearly one-half more than all we had given! We found, moreover, a population, not of slaves, but of freedmen, of whom 30,000 were members in our churches, while 20,000 more had already gone home to God. The material results, therefore, more than repaid all we had spent, and God gave us the souls besides!

We ought to have noticed before that Mr. and Mrs. Charles Reade returned from India about three weeks since; they were called away from London to the Isle of Wight almost immediately after their arrival, consequent on the dangerous state of health of Colonel Hamilton, Mrs. Reade's father. We are asked to mention that although Miss Reade is now labouring in and around Cuddalore, the Punrooty Mission is still carried on; it was left in good working order by Mr. Reade, with the majority of the native helpers whose labours have all along been so valuable. Any friends willing to help the work, or desiring information regarding it, are requested to communicate with Mr. Reade, at Blackgang, I.W., who will be happy to furnish every particular respecting the Punrooty Mission.

The general assemblies of the Free and Established Churches of Scotland met in Edinburgh on Thursday last, and continue their sessions throughout the present week. Dr. Horatius Bonar, as "Moderator," or presiding officer, of the Free Church Assembly, gave an address on the lessons suggested by the forty years' history of that Communion. The Daily Review justly says of the address:—

It will produce a greater effect when quietly read at home even than when it was spoken in the Assembly, and we are glad to learn its immediate publication has been arranged for. It is a high-toned address, worthy alike of a man of letters and of a Christian theologian—chaste in style, ripe in learning, and winningly attractive because of the Christian faith and love which inspire it.

In our next issue we hope to give extracts and to refer further to the proceedings of these important Assemblies.

A pamphlet of much value, in its advocacy of truth and its skilful refutation of error, has just been published by Messrs. Nisbet & Co., under the title of "The Testimony of a Dewdrop to its Creator: What it can tell us, and what it cannot tell." It is from the pen of our friend and correspondent, Rev. Horace Noel. We heartily commend it to our readers, and believe it will be eminently serviceable in checking the tendency to give way before "the oppositions of science, falsely so-called," which too frequently shows itself on the part of believers in revelation.

Mr. Noel's treatment of the doctrine of Evolution is specially worthy of notice. As he says:—

We know that not only believers in God, but believers in Christianity, think it quite possible to find room for this doctrine within the boundaries of their creed.

Such believers should carefully read the author's presentation of cardinal questions to which the Evolution theory can give no satisfactory answer. They will be compelled, we think, to admit the soundness of his conclusions, which go to show "first, that Evolutionists are still at an infinite distance from having proved even the possibility of their theory as a general solution of the mysteries of nature. Secondly, that were this hopeless task achieved, they would only have established a physical possibility, and not a fact. Were it demonstrated that Creation and Evolution were equally possible ways of accounting for the facts of existence, the Christian would still be right in adhering to the former and rejecting the latter, because he has positive reasons grounded upon other evidence for believing in God and the Bible, and has no such reasons drawn from other sources for believing in Evolution."

It will be a cause of thankfulness to many parents in distant places to know that their sons employed in houses of business in London will be looked after in times of sickness by the members of the Y.M.C.A. at Exeter Hall. This is a new branch of work upon which they have entered. They need not only the sympathy but practical help of others in this labour of love. There are comforts and delicacies often required which those who have undertaken this visitation could not supply. It would be a graceful act if parents whose sons are sheltered from all hardship in loving homes, and who have the means at their disposal, were to send a thank-offering to the Secretary of the Y.M.C.A., Exeter Hall, W.C., so that a Sick Fund could be formed, to be drawn upon in urgent cases.

It is a fact greatly to be deplored that the Bishop of Rangoon should be found opposing the efforts of those who seek in that port to preserve sailors and others from drunkenness and its attendant evils. A new committee having been appointed to carry on the Rangoon Sailors' Home, the bishop has used his influence to induce them to abandon the temperance principles on which it has been hitherto conducted. The result is, that, greatly to the sorrow of a large section of the community, a canteen, or licensed drinking saloon, has been opened in connection with this important institution.

To the credit of the ministers of other Christian churches in Rangoon, they have all signed and issued the following declaration, Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists, and Lutherans, alike :—

Rangoon, March 30, 1883.

We, the Nonconformist ministers of Rangoon, feel constrained not only to express our deep regret that, on the motion of the Right Reverend Dr. Strachan, Anglican Bishop of Rangoon, a canteen is to be opened at the Rangoon Sailors' Home, which hitherto has been the only place of resort where sailors visiting this port could be free from temptation to indulge in the use of liquor, but also to declare before the Christian public that we are convinced that all moral and religious work on behalf of seamen in this port has met with serious detriment.

The Liverpool Protestant Standard proposes the following question for the consideration of Christians who plead for legislation in order to admit professed Atheists to Parliament. It is assuredly a knotty one for them to answer :—

How can professed Christians consistently plead for the admission of Atheists into Parliament in opposition to the Scriptural injunction: "The God of Israel said, the Rock of Israel spake to me, He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God" (2 Samuel xxiii. 3)? Now, in face of this Scripture, to elect an Atheist to be a ruler in the Senate, with power to make laws for the government of the nation, is to act in direct opposition to the command of God. Let this question be answered with the same brevity with which we have put it; not in the words of man's philosophy but, according to the Word and the Testimony.

The Paris correspondent of The New York Herald asserts that Sunday observance is making great and marked progress in Paris. He gives, as indications of this, the following facts :—

Three-fourths of the wholesale stores and respectable tradespeople in the centre of the city close their shutters for twenty-four hours on the Sabbath. After dark on Saturday night, till Monday morning, you might go from end to end of the Rue de la Paix without being able to buy a bottle of scent or a watch chain. The Rue du 4 Septembre also becomes a howling desert, and in the Avenue de l'Opera, or between the Madeleine and the Rue Vivienne—the most moving of all the corners of Paris—barely half of the shops are open, and these are neglected.

This increases the desirableness and importance of adding largely to the evangelical and evangelistic efforts put forth in Paris at the present time. The mere cessation of business, if it only leads to deeper absorption in the gaieties and frivolities of the French capital, is scarcely a gain to be much triumphed over; but it must afford a wider scope for Gospel labour, and let us hope that as one of its results, many may be brought under the influence of sound Gospel teaching and gracious impulse. Admirable agencies adapted to this end are at work in Paris. What is wanted are more zealous, earnest labourers to enter the field and help those already at work.

The Licensed Victuallers' National Defence League has just held a large representative meeting at Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen-street. The chairman, Mr. Clever, of Leicester, stated that—

The meeting represented many millions of money invested in the trade throughout England, Ireland, and Scotland, and they were determined to form a solid phalanx against the destructive legislation which threatened them. At present there were many unnecessary measures before Parliament affecting the trade. The one for the closing of public-houses during elections, and that respecting the adulteration of beer, he regarded as insults to the trade, and that for the prevention of the payment of wages in public-houses as degrading to the working classes. He enumerated the several Bills which proposed to deal with the closing of public-houses on Sunday in different localities, and he expressed his astonishment that the people in these localities did not protest against these proposals. With respect to the measures which proposed to restrict the hours of opening of public-houses on Sunday, he said these restrictions were not asked for by the public, but only arose from the agitations of those who found a profit in disturbing the existing condition of things.

Resolutions in accordance with these sentiments were adopted, and the spirit manifested indicated that the results of Temperance work are sufficiently evident and telling to make the upholders of the drink traffic tremble for their future success. It is by no means to be regretted that the opposition should be seen to be awake and active, it will only serve to show Temperance reformers that the time has not come when they can rest on their oars, or be content with their present triumphs. The foe is still mighty, and the curse of strong drink still rests heavily on the people. Past successes must only encourage further and even more vigorous onslaughts.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson last week opened a large temperance hotel and tavern which has been built at Woodford-green, on the borders of Epping Forest, and named after himself, "The Sir Wilfrid Lawson." The building owes its erection to the exertions of Mr. A. Johnston, and is a model of what such establishments should be. Sir Wilfrid said :—

He denied that he had any objection to public-houses: he would not shut up one; but he wished to prevent them selling evil drink. This public-house, to which he had "lent his name," would sell good drink and good food; it would be a real, and not a fraudulent "victualler," and if the people kept to the refreshment there, the poor rates would be lessened, the police would have less criminals, and magistrates like Mr. Johnston would find time so heavy upon their hands that they would have to become members of Parliament, or to find some other amusement.

It is with no slight amount of surprise, not unmingled with concern, that many have heard of the new Primate's reference at Willis's Rooms, the other night, to "the martyred Laud." Surely among those who have preceded him in the office he holds, some might have been found more worthily calculated to fill Dr. Benson's mind with a sense of the responsibility of his position, than the intolerant, superstitious, and Popish prelate, whom all history brands as traitor to the cause of true Protestant faith. We should hope that the idea of wearing the mantle, or taking up the work of such a tyrannical and arrogant bigot as Laud, is far remote from the new archbishop's mind. Neither the cause of God as a whole, nor the Church of England as one of its allies, owes any debt of gratitude to his memory, and it is unfortunate it should have been brought out of its well-merited obloquy if not obscurity.

MAY MEETING NOTES.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

AMONG the more recent institutions formed to promote the interests of the Redeemer's cause, none hold more worthy place than this Special Mission for Children. It has received rich blessing from its commencement, and is becoming an increasing power for good in almost all parts of the world. It was stated at the annual meeting, lately held in Exeter Hall, that during the past year nearly one million hymn-sheets, leaflets, and tracts, had been distributed, that the Children's Scripture Union had issued 120,000 cards of membership in English alone, that £1273 had been expended in furthering the work of the Mission, and that special services had been conducted at 110 seaside resorts. "Our Own Magazine" a monthly serial devoted to the interests of the Union, and aiming to help intelligent study of the daily portions read, has reached a circulation of 40,000 copies a month, and on the Continent, and even in India, China, and Africa, branches of the Scripture Union have been formed.

There can be no doubt that by means of this society numbers of children and young people are led, not only to the daily reading of the Word of God, but also to the experimental knowledge of Christ. What is also of immense importance, this Mission provides in vast numbers of cases for watching over and nourishing those who have become lambs in the feld of Christ. Translations of children's picture leaflets have been made into German, French, and almost all Continental languages, as also into Hindoostani, Hindi, Oriya, and Arabic. The daily portions used by the members all the world over are published weekly in our columns. Our readers cannot do better than help to extend the influence of this invaluable agency by bringing them under the notice of all their children and youthful acquaintance, with a view to induce them to become members of this interesting and valuable agency.

AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Care for the old is as truly sacred a duty as care for the young, and it is a cause for sincere rejoicing that the Society mentioned above continues to flourish, and to command a fair share of public sympathy and support. The Earl of Shaftesbury has this year presided over its annual meeting, held on the 22nd inst. at Exeter Hall. His lordship said—

Quite apart from its direct benefits, the Society was a great moral institution, in that it served to inculcate the spirit of reverence, which was the basis of all religion. Reverence existed more in foreign countries than in ours, and more in ancient times than in modern; it did not now exist either for men or for things, in things moral, political, or religious. Old people might be said to live to teach young people to practise the great Christian principle of reverence."

The adoption of the report was moved by Archdeacon Richardson, who commented on the foundation of the Society on evangelical truth, and seconded by the Rev. Donald Fraser, who said that the Society did a great deal to solve the tremendous problem of poverty in London. The amount of good accomplished by its means may be imagined from a reference to the following statistics which were given in the report :—

Since its foundation 4320 pensioners had been assisted, and the expenditure involved had been £159,300. The annual subscriptions for 1882 had amounted to £2636, exclusive of £661 contributed through the auxiliaries, £320 from collections, £1475 from legacies, and £486 from funded property. The total receipts for the year were £8053, and the balance in hand £356. The recipients of the charity now numbered 996, of whom 650 were upwards of 70 years of age, nine were over 80, and one had attained her 102nd year. The pensions distributed ranged from ten to three guineas per annum.

While this institution is very catholic in its rules as to the recipients of its bounty, the only condition being that they shall be testified to as sincere believers on the Lord Jesus Christ, it is also very conservative of old school theology as to the great foundations of Christian truth. This fact serves to commend it, as Archdeacon Richardson contended, to the hearty support of all Evangelical Christians.

NAVAL SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY.

The annual meeting has been held, under the presidency of Admiral Sir Cooper Key. In the face of statements made in the report, and by the several speakers, as to the need of the work done by the agents of the Society, it is a cause for much regret that there should be a serious falling-off in its funds. Rev. G. B. Harbord, M.A., said:—

Few had any conception of the organisation that Secularism had set on foot to introduce its principles into the Navy. The Secular Society had two classes of members among the sailors, one class whose names were printed in their list, and another a kind of secret organisation, the members of which were only known by a number, but all alike engaged actively in the dissemination of this pernicious literature.

Among other speakers who dwelt on these facts, and advocated the claims of the institution, were Revs. H. W. Webb Peploe, Hon. and Rev. E. Carr Glyn, and Sir Thomas Brassey, M.P. So long as we are under the necessity of maintaining an army and navy, it surely becomes a solemn duty and a grave responsibility for us to see to the providing for the special moral and spiritual requirements which their very constitution necessitates.

BIBLE CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Bible Christians are a community well known in country districts in the North and South of England; for zeal, fervour, and downright earnestness in Christian work, they yield to no other section of the Christian Church. Their annual missionary meeting was held in Exeter Hall on the 21st inst., Mr. H. M. Bompas, Q.C., in the chair. In the course of a most interesting and pertinent address he spoke of the great importance of Canada as a field for Gospel work, and said:—

It was very difficult to get at the scattered populations of some parts of Canada, and it was only by Christians in England putting their shoulders to the wheel, and making up their minds to endure some self-sacrifice, that these widely separated districts and populations could be reached. He would beg them not to neglect the opportunities they now possessed; for each little village that was springing up in the outlying districts of Canada, would probably in twenty years' time become a great city, the character of which would largely depend upon the work done in that little village. It would be a very good thing if there could be infused into the supporters of the society a little more of the spirit which animated worldly people. Many persons would leave their native land for Canada or elsewhere without a moment's hesitation when material wealth or influence was to be gained by so doing; but if they were asked to go there as missionaries and receive Christ's favour, and to lay up treasure in heaven, everybody would hold up their hands and exclaim, "What a wonderful sacrifice it would be if they were to do so!" He had no desire to under-rate the sacrifices that were every day being made by Christian men and women in the Master's cause; but he did think it a shame to see the way in which men would go far and wide for the sake of mere worldly advantage, and the way in which the followers of Christ sometimes hesitated before making a sacrifice for God.

Rev. W. B. Lark, President of the Conference, made some practical and weighty remarks on how best to reach the masses. We quote the following:—

One would suppose, by the current talk, that "reaching the masses" was a new thing in the history of the Christian Church; but did not the Master reach the masses? and did not John Wesley and the early Methodist preachers? and did not the fathers of their own beloved denomination reach the masses? And how did they reach them? Not by spending their money in buying big drums and tambourines. Had it come to this, that God must be brought down to the mud-gutter before He was acceptable to the masses of the people? Had it come to this, that, as in his own town not many weeks ago, it must be announced that the Gospel would be preached by a man just out of hell with his night-cap on? In the name of the Master he protested against the imputation, and in the name of those who preached the Gospel he protested against the insult. They did not want another Gospel in order to reach the masses, but they wanted some of the old simplicity, fervour, and whole-heartedness, sympathy, and love. If those feelings characterised their ministry they would no more fail to reach the masses than did their fathers before them, or than the Divine Lord and Master failed. The work of reaching the masses was the work of not one branch only, but of the whole Christian Church, and he prayed God to help the Church to do her work.

Referring to Colonial Missions, Rev. J. Kilner made a strong appeal for home sympathy, and said:—

He held with the President of the Bible Christian Conference that they did not need the pantomimic, dramatic punch-and-judyism that was adopted by some folks in connection with the preaching of the Gospel; he believed in the old Gospel, and that there was nothing like it. The simple Gospel as we have it in the New Testament was working wonders among our countrymen who had left our shores, perhaps for ever. With regard to their missionaries in the colonies, they could not tell whether they would be blessed to the polished merchant of London going out there, or to the lady who became his wife, or to the honest farmer and his wife, or to the little one, beautiful in its simplicity, or to the rough, rugged prodigal, or to the old, indurated, sin-smitten iceberg, but in sending them forth they had the assurance that God Almighty would crown their efforts with abundant blessing.

Rev. J. Jackson Wray paid a well-deserved tribute to the Society in saying:—

He felt that the Bible Christian Church, though small, was potent; it preached the same Gospel, and on the same lines as that which he meant to preach till he died. They must abide by those first principles, and seek to have the love of God shed fully abroad in their own hearts, and a plentiful baptism of the Holy Spirit, then they might depend upon it success of the highest character would, more and more, attend upon their work.

Mr. S. D. Waddy, Q.C., M.P., in a lively and eloquent speech, said:—

It appeared to him that the name of this Society was a text and a sermon too; they believed if any good was to be done in the world it must be done by the "Bible," its first word. In the teeth of every scheme that might be devised for masking or smothering Gospel truth on the one hand, or denying and destroying it on the other, they still desired to go forward, in their different ways, holding to the fundamental principle that the salvation of the world was to be secured by means of the truths contained in the Bible. He deeply regretted to find the Bible was being wounded in the house of its friends; that rough and random criticism had been allowed recently in encyclopædias that they were accustomed to consider themselves safe in going to; when there was this danger in the so-called philosophy of the present day it was all the more important that they should acknowledge themselves as stupid and old-fashioned as their grandfathers and grandmothers were, and say they believed in the grand old book, the Bible, still. Some people would allow them to believe the Bible if they took out of it its great and glorious centre; but they met that night as Bible, "Christians," the second word in their title. If Christ were taken out of the Bible that book would be useless to him; its poetry would be but empty and its grandeur vain; like the sound of one playing upon a musical instrument it might charm for a while, but it would be emptiness and desolation. The Bible without Christ would be dead.

The meeting throughout appears to have sustained a high toned spirit of loyalty to the old-fashioned truths of the Gospel, and ranks high in its testimony for Christ among the many similar testimonies borne at this season of the year.

WORKING MEN'S LORD'S DAY REST ASSOCIATION.

The Earl of Shaftesbury presided over a numerously-attended meeting of the friends of this Association on Wednesday of last week.

The report presented by the Secretary of the Association, Mr. C. Hill, stated that the past year had been "one of incessant struggles to prevent the increase of Sunday labour." During the year 508,600 publications had been issued, including 91,000 copies of Mr. Broadhurst's speech against Sunday opening; 7000 copies of the secretary's prize essay had been reprinted in modern Greek, and also in French; 53 illustrated lectures had been given on the Sunday question, and ten new Juvenile Sabbath Unions had been formed.

It was a pleasing feature of this meeting that the larger proportion of those present appeared to be of the artisan class. Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., spoke of Sunday rest from the physical point of view. It was a necessity for the working man, and the sooner he learnt it the happier would it be for the country. Mr. Waddy, Q.C., M.P., said that it had been conclusively proved to him that the people who attended exhibitions and museums and galleries on Sunday were not the working-men for whom many represented their necessity. Resolutions congratulating the friends of the Sabbath on the parliamentary success of their opposition to Sunday opening of museums, and respectfully requesting the trustees of the British Museum to open the national collection on three week-day evenings each week till ten p.m., were unanimously carried.

It is by means of such societies as this that public feeling can be stirred, and action induced in the direction of preserving our Sabbath from legal desecration and encroachment. Too much energy cannot be displayed in resisting the efforts of those who labour to rob the nation of its day of rest. The enemies of the Sabbath are numerous, organised, and resolute; let all who rank themselves as its advocates and friends see to it that they are no less combined and vigorous in their action.

BOW AND BROMLEY INSTITUTE.—Last Sunday night was held the last of the "Free Services for the People" in the Hall of the Bow and Bromley Institute, prior to closing for June, July, and August. For nine months past there have been crowded attendances, and very largely of non-churchgoers. The preacher has been Rev. W. Evans Hurndall.

PEACE SOCIETY.—The annual report of this Society, just issued, states that the committee has, during the year, been trying to create a sounder sentiment as to the real character of war, as not only inhuman, irrational, and unchristian, but as utterly inefficacious to secure the final and satisfactory settlement of the matters in dispute. How far they have prospered it is not easy to say. Judging by the testimony of some of their opponents, they have already become a great power in this land. The report dwells at length on the recent Egyptian war, and the resolute opposition which the Society felt bound to render to it; refers to the correspondence of the committee with the leaders of the movement in America, which has issued in a Resolution introduced into the Senate, authorising the President to negotiate with all civilised powers for the establishment of a system of international arbitration; and gives some interesting particulars of recent peace movements in Sweden and Denmark, as well as in Austria. It expresses confidence that there is an opening for useful operations on the Continent, where the nations are growing weary of the intolerable oppressions of the war system.

LADIES AND LEGALISED VICE.

A COMPANY of the friends of the total repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts met in a room at Cannon-street Hotel on Tuesday afternoon last week, at the invitation of Mrs. Butler, on behalf of the Ladies' National Association. The main purposes of the gathering were to offer prayer and praise in connection with the recent successes in Parliament, and to take "grave consultation" as to future action. The great bulk of those present were ladies, but a sprinkling of gentlemen attended. Mrs. JOSEPHINE BUTLER fitly presided.

A brief season was first of all devoted to prayer, when one brother and two sisters poured forth their hearts' desires to God, and also gave earnest thanksgiving for the great things He had already done.

In making a statement as to the present position of the agitation, Professor STUART, of Cambridge, read a letter from Mr. J. Edmondson, Halifax, to Mr. Wilson, Sheffield, in which it is urged that the questions of disease and vice should be separately dealt with. He contends for the complete repeal of the existing Acts and the enactment of such statutes as shall give local bodies or communities the power to deal with the manifest evils and incitements to immorality that exist in their midst. A great responsibility, said the Professor, now rests upon us. We are contending for the principle of morality in all our legislation as opposed to expediency, and it is our duty to infuse others with a conviction of this eternal principle. We must never yield to compromise for any temporary advantage. Without needlessly hampering the action of the Government we must not, out of a mistaken feeling of consideration for them, relinquish any vital point.

Mr. F. WHEELER, of Rochester, said that the passing of Mr. Stansfeld's Resolution had at least broken down the conspiracy of silence. The rage and disappointment of those who have lost their prey and their gain are among the best signs of the progress that is marked by this parliamentary vote. To show the hollowness of the plea that the wretched subjects of these Acts welcomed its operation, Mr. Wheeler said that from personal observation the previous week, he could assert that not one of the abandoned women in Chatham availed themselves of the usual arrangements when they had the option of refusing. The terrible education in the school of vice during the sixteen years' reign of these Acts had so demoralised certain classes in the town that they were prepared for almost any fresh development of depravity.

Miss TOD, of Belfast, said the present duty of repealers was to insist on such conditions with respect to the treatment of the Army as would cause a reversal of the notion that the practice of morality among soldiers generally is impossible and utopian. We must bring every pressure to bear on the Executive to adopt such preventive, and punitive methods as shall prove the contrary. There is also the important question of providing suitable recreations and occupation for the leisure hours of these servants of the Crown.

In giving a brief outline of what she would suggest for the immediate future, Mrs. BUTLER strenuously insisted upon it that fallen women should not be dealt with as if they were a special and exceptional class, while of course all the demands of suffering humanity, however guilty the sufferers may be, must be heeded and met. As to the forthcoming Bill for the protection of young girls, she urged the immediate formation of Vigilance Committees throughout the country, which should see that the provisions of the law were fully and fairly carried out. A strong protest was formulated against the autocratic action of the War Office, which in many cases crushed all municipal spirit and action. Dr. Elizabeth Blackwell had suggested the formation of a Woman's Municipal League, in defence of the rights of communities to self-government. The recent victory in the House of Commons had not only stirred up a strong opposition, but had brought to light many new friends to the cause of repeal. There must now be a movement, by way of petition, to show the feelings and convictions of those classes which have been the subjects of this legislation. In closing her remarks, Mrs. Butler said she thought they might well raise a band of praying women who should besiege the houses of ill-fame, and by the power of prayer bring about the stopping up of these fountains of evil, as so many of the whiskey shops in America were swept away.

Professor STUART reminded the meeting that the Acts were not yet repealed, and, seeing the extraordinary activity now shown by the opponents of repeal, there must be no lack of vigilance in order to secure a total and unconditional reversal of this legislation.

After several other short speeches the following resolution was with one consent agreed to:—"That this meeting, whilst expressing thankfulness to God for his blessing on our work, pledges itself to renewed activity for the total repeal of the Acts, next to endeavour to purify the Statute Book from all complicity with vice, and further to advance every moral and religious effort in the districts which have been so deeply impaired by being subjected to the Acts."

RATHDRUM MISSION AND CONFERENCE.

THE ninth annual Mission and Conference at Rathdrum, co. Wicklow, has been attended with much success. The services began every day with an early meeting for prayer, at which addresses were delivered by Mr. Spencer Walton. These meetings proved seasons of special refreshing in harmony with the brilliant weather and bright exterior of nature, especially in that romantic and beautiful county. The addresses were marked by spiritual power and lucid exposition of the Word of God. The Sunday services were conducted by the Rector, Rev. Wyndham Guinness, and the Mission sermons during the week were preached by Rev. J. K. Latham, rector of Wexford. The attendance was considerable. Deep impression seemed to be produced, large numbers remaining behind to the after-meetings, at which Mr. Walton assisted. Many professed to have found pardon and peace.

At the meetings of the Conference in the afternoons and evenings the following subjects were considered: "Missions to France," "Foreign Missions," "Temperance Work," "Christian Progress and its Hindrances," "The Work of the Holy Spirit." In considering these subjects the Rector was assisted by Revs. J. K. Latham, John Hoff, J. J. F. Drought, A. W. F. Cooper, M. Le Pasteur Dardier, Mr. Spencer Walton, and others. Many attended the meetings from considerable distances, and were hospitably entertained in the Rectory grounds. Not a few had to thank God for being led by a definite act of faith to a fuller consecration of their lives to the Lord.

MR. GEORGE MULLER, of Bristol, will address the annual meeting of the China Inland Mission on Thursday (this day), at the Mildmay Conference Hall, at three p.m. He will also speak at Kilburn Hall, Kilburn-gate, N.W., the same evening at 7.30.

MR. OPIE RODWAY has concluded a brief Gospel Mission in Mr. J. Thomas's chapel, St. Helen's, Swansea. The words of the evangelist were with much power and demonstration of the Spirit, and the workers are greatly cheered by his visit. Prayer is desired for a rich blessing on the labours of Mr. Rodway at Watford, where he commences a month's tent services next Lord's day.

JAMAICA.—I have received an interesting letter from Mr. H. Suffolk, Mission-house, Waldensia, Falmouth, Jamaica. This is the farthest station which the minister and missionary at Stewart Town has under his care. The Mission is one that Mr. Knibb, the great Jamaica missionary, had under his care, and where Mrs. Knibb lived and died. The people are said to be the worst in the island. Mr. Suffolk with his wife left Kineton, Warwickshire, at the end of last year, to go out to these needy people, and they are now stationed there. He earnestly asks help in prayer, and more material aid, which may be sent to myself, to be forwarded to him. (Major) G. WINDHAM.

Ashleigh House, Bedford.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.

THE thirty-seventh annual meeting of this institution was held last week at the Seamen's Chapel, London Docks, E., and was well attended. Colonel H. J. Brockman, V.P., presided.

An abstract of the report, read by Rev. G. J. Hill, stated that the past year's work had been enlarged and greatly blessed. The usual agencies had been in operation in London, Liverpool, Whitehaven, Workington, Maryport, Isle of Man, and Ireland. Arrangements had been made for opening a Sailors' Rest at Whitehaven, and a further sum of £150 had been paid off the debt upon the society's premises in Ratcliff Highway. The income from annual subscriptions had increased, and more support was being received than formerly from city merchants and shipowners; but additional help was still needed in order that the Society's operations might be extended.

Rev. C. H. Turner, Rector of St. George's-in-the-East; Mr. H. W. Maynard, Director of London Docks; Mr. T. W. Stoughton, and other gentlemen warmly advocated the Society's claims.

VILLAGE MISSIONS.

OUR villages are being depopulated, and the people are gradually gathering to the towns and cities. At a meeting of the Village Mission, held at 200, Euston-road, last week, Mr. E. W. Thomas said that not a day passed without several fallen girls coming before him, and almost always one or more have recently come from the country to London. The carrying the Gospel, therefore, to our villages and country districts is calculated to have a most beneficial influence on our cities and towns; for it makes all the difference whether young men and women come out of the rural hamlets with the knowledge of Christ and bring a holy influence with them, or come only to swell the tide of ignorance and vice, already too abundantly supplied.

The meeting referred to was not attended by more than a score, but their narratives of work by the hedge-rows, in cottages, in country chapels, in the hop yard, in the harvest field, were full of interest.

Mr. HELEY, of Wing, near Leighton, Beds, and Mr. SHIPLEY, Breachwood-green, near Welwyn, Herts, have taken up village Missions as their special work, and any friends desiring to see something of it during the summer months might communicate with them.

Mr. BENSON, missionary, connected with Rev. Newman Hall, and Mr. HARRISON, connected with Bloomsbury Chapel, and labouring in Seven-dials, told of their cheery holiday experiences, in contrast with their normal work in London. Rev. C. B. SAWDAY spoke of a remarkable visitation of power from on high some years ago, in direct answer to prayer, at a village which he is shortly about to re-visit. Mr. LUFF, whose poems sometimes enrich our columns, told of visitation to sick villagers, and of fruitful work among children. Mr. NOTT, who latterly has kept more closely to London, scarcely ever goes into a chapel but some one greets him who has found Christ in one of his annual preaching visits to Ramsgate Sands, or in his village work. Several others gave no less cheering narratives.

THE RAILWAY MEN'S BIBLE UNION has now between 2000 and 3000 members. The Hon. Secretary would be glad to assist any who are wishing to form a fresh Branch, or to send cards to individual members. She requests a stamp may be enclosed, and letters addressed to Oakfield, Three Bridges, Sussex.

BIRKENHEAD.—At a recent Gospel temperance meeting here nearly 100 joined the movement. The anniversary to be held in July is expected to be a grand success, Mr. W. Noble having promised to attend, and, together with Mrs. Noble, to take part in the proceedings. We shall be glad to receive help in carrying on this work. Mr. G. Shaw, Craven-street, Birkenhead, is Hon. Treasurer.

LIVINGSTONE INLAND MISSION.

LAUNCH OF THE STEAMER "HENRY REED."

By Mrs. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

THROUGHOUT his career in Africa Livingstone was always pressing inland, and seeking to reach the heart of the Dark Continent. He strongly urged missionaries to stand no longer shivering with false fears on its mere edges, but to plunge boldly into its very centre, where he assured them millions were waiting for them and willing to welcome them. The six British Missions established since his death have consequently all devoted themselves to the interior. Four entered from the East and have established themselves on the great lakes, while two from the West endeavoured to plant themselves on the Upper Congo, the greatest highway into the heart of Africa.

The East Coast Missions all adopted the plan of establishing themselves, from the first, right in the interior, at points distant from the coast from five to ten or twelve hundred miles. Such a course involved too much risk and too large an outlay for a Mission with very small resources of men, money or experience; and the plan which the Livingstone Inland Mission was led to adopt was that of the gradual formation of a chain of stations not more than fifty miles apart between the coast and the interior plateau, i.e., through the difficult and life-endangering cataract-region of the Congo.

Now at last, after five years of heavy outlay, of patient toil, and of much devoted endurance and self-sacrifice, the Mission has accomplished this part of its task, and established itself on the waters of the Upper River. Thence there lies open before it the vast interior plateau of Central Africa, traversed in every direction by navigable waterways.

The undertaking has proved immensely more difficult than was anticipated. One after another eight brave and beloved pioneers fell victims to the climate and to their own inexperience of its dangers. The names of Telford, Peterson, McKergow, McCall, Lanceley, Richards, Blunt, and Appel will remain engraven in the foundations of the Mission as those of noble labourers who suffered and died for Christ in Congo, leaving other men to enter into their labours. Eight stations of the Mission now connect the coast with the Upper Congo, the eighth having been planted last March by Dr. Sims and Mr. Clarke, at Stanley Pool, where a site has been leased from the "International Association," which is represented in this region by Mr. Stanley.

The first section of a very difficult task is therefore successfully accomplished, thanks be to God! The doubtful dream of 1878 is the accomplished fact of 1883, and half Africa now lies open before the messengers of mercy. No longer shut in by an impenetrable barrier, thousands of miles of broad river highways invite us to visit and evangelise countless tribes and nations of men, whose minds are even darker than their swarthy skins, but who are as capable as ourselves of receiving "the light of the world—Jesus."

Before, however, they can utilise the great river of Central Africa, the missionaries must have a craft to carry them, and to carry them swiftly enough to escape, if need be, from the war-canoes of fierce cannibal warriors armed with poisoned arrows, who might desire to make "meat" of them. The next undertaking consequently devolving on the Mission is the placing on the Upper Congo of a steam-launch, which may serve not only to transport men and goods in safety for long distances, but also as a temporary home for missionaries during exploring trips or while erecting houses.

Such a boat is costly to buy, to transport, and to reconstruct; difficult to place (as it must be made in portions suitable for carrying over the mountains on the head of men); and more difficult still to reconstruct in a land where skilled help is not to be had. Difficulties as great as those already overcome may still therefore lie before us, though we hope not! Long before the Mission was ready for it, the boat needed had, in the providence of God, been provided by a noble gift from the Antipodes. Australia has the honour of endowing Central Africa with one of her first Mission steamers. In memory of the late beloved Henry Reed, of Launceston, his widow has presented to the Mission a beautiful little steam launch, which bears the name of her late husband, adding also a donation of £1000 towards the heavy expenses of its transport to the Upper Congo. This remarkable providence encourages us to hope that it is the purpose of God to prosper our effort to carry the Gospel to Central Africa, and that having sent the boat He will give also the blessing.

It was only the last mail that brought us the welcome tidings of the completion of our chain of stations in Africa, and that now, for the first time, the brethren there are ready for the steamer to be sent out. Mr. Billington, the missionary engineer, who has superintended its construction during his furlough at home on sick-leave, is now ready to sail in charge of it, having quite recovered his health, and the vessel also is ready to be launched. All things being thus prepared, in the name of the Lord we go forward.

On Monday last the Henry Reed was launched from Forrest's Yard, Millwall; on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, June 5, 6, and 7, she will lie for public inspection in the Thames, at the steps opposite St. Thomas's Hospital, Westminster-bridge, from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. each day. We shall be very glad to welcome on board all the friends of the Mission who can make it convenient to call during those hours, as well as any other Christian friends interested in Africa.

On the evening of the 5th we hope to have a public meeting, and to commend the vessel and the Mission generally to the preserving care and prospering blessing of God, without whom nothing is holy, nothing strong, nothing successful. Three of the missionaries now at home, and three little Congo lads, will be present, and our valued treasurer, Stevenson A. Blackwood, Esq. will preside. The Conference Hall in Eccleston-street has been very kindly placed at our disposal by Lord Radstock. It is situated within a few minutes' walk of Victoria Station, and is thus within easy access of the spot where the Henry Reed will be lying.

We may mention, in conclusion, some facts which greatly encourage us to believe that God's own time for opening up and blessing Central Africa has come at last.

We have recently visited Belgium, and had deeply interesting interviews with his Majesty King Leopold II., and also with his Minister Baron Strauch, the Secretary of the International Association, and of the "Comité d'Etudes du Haut Congo." We were prepared to find in the King a very warm friend of Africa, but were both surprised and delighted at the extent and at the nature of his devotion to the interests of the Dark Continent. Some of our friends think we have Africa on the brain, but our interest is slight compared to the King's. To secure, as far as it may lie in his power, the present and future well-being of the new world of Central Africa, seems to be the one great object of his life. With no selfish or personal object, with no view to annexation of territory, or to commercial profits for Belgium, from no other motive than the highest and purest philanthropy, this noble monarch is spending £80,000 a year from his own private purse for the benefit of Africa. He is giving his best attention to an earnest study of its interests and the way to secure them, and is enlisting in its service the highest talent he can find. We do not remember in all history a parallel case. A monarch devoting his great influence and his ample private wealth, not to the aggrandisement of his own country or of his own name, but to the elevation and protection of the helpless.

All the work being now carried on by Mr. Stanley on the Congo is at the king's expense, to say nothing of his operations in other parts of Africa. His plan, which he very fully and frankly explained to us, seems to be marked by far-seeing and statesmanlike wisdom. He has set to himself the task of removing, if possible, the existing impediments to a lucrative commerce between Europe and Central Africa, in order that when they are removed, he may be in a position to hand over the advantages he has secured to a large international commercial association, which shall conduct trade with Africa on righteous principles. He wants to save Central Africa from the dreadful fate of the Portuguese colonies, both east and west; to secure the weak against the tyranny of the strong; and to protect the helpless against the demoralisation which mere selfish commerce always inflicts on savage nations.

Legions of difficulties, political and social, as well as physical and financial, attend the execution of this plan, and may to some extent frustrate it. In its present stage of development it cannot well be fairly judged, and it is little wonder that the King's motives are in some quarters misunderstood and suspected. They are so lofty and so pure, so far removed from the lust of power or of gain, that men cannot conceive anything so unusual. We had ourselves been puzzled at some things doing on the Congo. But all is explained now, and our sympathies are warmly enlisted with his Majesty's plans. He may not always have found the best agents to carry them out—few things are more difficult than to find agents in every way suited to work in Central Africa; but the plans themselves are admirable. The King would be glad to enlist high-minded, benevolent, and able young English or Scotch men in his service, men of talent and enterprise, and we should rejoice to hear of some such joining the International Association. They could hardly serve a better master in a better cause (unless they are serving Christ and the cause of Missions), and we shall gladly give particulars to anyone desiring them.

But what has moved this monarch to pity Africa, to plan so wisely and spend so generously that her dark recesses may be opened at last to the blessings of civilisation? Is he not an instrument in the hand of God? And is not his work a proof that the time to favour Ethiopia is come? If so, may not we and all other Missions to Central Africa go forward with renewed hope We are working in the line of the present purposes of God! He raised up and sustained David Livingstone to initiate the work. He has raised up and guided this great and good Leopold II. to push it forward, and do what missionaries could not do, in order that they may do what they can do, and what He wills should be done—enter with the Gospel the doors providentially opened by others.

These things have a voice, too, about the approaching end of the age. As we said to the King after conversing over his plans for more than an hour and a half, we cannot but see in his remarkable and unprecedented course one more "sign of the times." He is breaking open the last stronghold of heathenism, and rendering it possible for the ambassadors of Christ to enter in! And what did our Master say? "This Gospel must first be published among all nations, and then shall the end come."

BLUE RIBBON GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MISSION.

IN connection with the anniversary of this Mission, which was founded by Mr. W. Noble, in February, 1878, a Conference was held at Exeter Hall on Monday afternoon, the 21st inst. A number of London and provincial temperance reformers were present. The object of the Conference was to discuss the advisability of forming an agency by which speakers and missioners of undoubted character and ability might be obtained for the furtherance of Gospel Temperance work in the metropolis and the provinces. Mr. JOHN T. RAE, secretary, reported that 680,908 pledges had been recorded during the past five years in connection with the work, of which Hoxton Hall is the centre.

Mr. W. J. PALMER, Reading, gave a somewhat detailed account of the rise and progress of the Blue Ribbon Army, and mentioned that it was now proposed to change the word "Army" into "Mission." Mr. Sutherst, barrister-at-law, Revs. J. Campbell, T. Blandford, G. M. Murphy, J. Morgan, Messrs. Hutchinson, R. Scott, T. Whittaker, and W. Noble, spoke in favour of the organisation; and it was ultimately resolved that the Committee which had summoned the Conference be requested to continue, and, if possible, extend the assistance which has already proved so helpful in London and other parts of the kingdom. The mighty wave of blessing which is passing over our land calls for some more definite action in meeting the increasing demand for speakers, who will not only speak with force and wisdom on the temperance question, but will preach Christ as the Saviour from every form of evil.

The evening meeting crowded every corner of the large hall, and was presided over by Mr. S. A. BLACKWOOD. After the reading of the report by Mr. J. T. Rae, the Chairman said he believed the great success of this movement was due to the fact that its foundation-stone was the Lord Jesus Christ.

Rev. PELHAM-STOKES evoked the rousing cheers of the audience by quoting the names of various popular advocates who have done much to bring the temperance question to the front. Referring to the obstructive tactics in the House of Commons of Mr. Warton, the member for Bridport, he said the Dorsetshire friends were doing their best to convert him from an opponent to a friend.

Dr. MONRO GIBSON was able to report that as the result of a Blue Ribbon Mission 800 persons had signed the pledge in his neighbourhood (St. John's Wood); the change had effected not merely the home and the habits but the heart and the life.

Mr. GEORGE O. BARNES said that if the blue ribbon were merely to remind him of his pledge to abstain from drinking alcoholic drink he had no need for it. He had been an abstainer on higher principles than for the mere sake of joining any temperance association. The reason why he was going to keep the pledge to the end of his life was not because he had taken it into his head to be an abstainer, but from a consideration of what the Saviour had done for mankind, because He had suffered and died to save the souls of men, and had been raised again for their justification; and because the blue ribbon would be an ever present reminder of this fact.

Mr. COUNCILLOR WHITE, of Norwich, said the progress of this portentous movement was a fact. For many years past, he said, it had been the custom to send a beer train from Norwich to London, and a gentleman well versed in commercial statistics told him (the speaker) the other day that one of the large brewers who sent a beer train day by day, containing 480 barrels of beer to London, had to cut off a great many trucks from the train, and that it now carried not more than 250 barrels. That meant very nearly 50 per cent. The same gentleman had told him that other brewers in Norwich—for the one to whom he had referred was not a Norwich brewer, though he belonged to the county—found that the beer trade with the metropolis had very much diminished, as he could testify from the statistics which he had from time to time to collect.

Mr. W. NOBLE said the Blue Ribbon movement had no sectarian element in it. They desired to be the friends of all, but they would never lower their colours. If the work had been blessed, it was only because those who had been in the forefront of the battle had been consistent and true to its principles.

During the evening Miss Mary Davies sang "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd," "There is a green hill far away," and "The Ninety and Nine," with great feeling and effect.

MEDICAL MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

THE audience that came together in the Lower Exeter Hall, on Friday afternoon, to the annual meeting of this society was by no means commensurate with the importance of the work. In some introductory remarks, Dr. BURNS THOMSON said he was not discouraged by that fact, and cited the case of a meeting of three persons in Perth, which was addressed by three of a deputation, which, however, resulted in the establishment of an excellent branch of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Association. Proceeding to read portions of the report, the Doctor made an earnest appeal both for men and money, and suggested that some might help by gathering their friends to a drawing-room or a homely tea-party, at which the work of the Society could be reported and its claims advocated. A man had been found for Gaza, but had afterwards withdrawn. The Medical Mission at Marseilles had been launched under the care of Dr. Burroughs; the work is progressing satisfactorily, having commended itself to the favour of the Préfet of the city. A beginning had been made in the important work of preparing young men for Medical Mission service in the foreign field. The first selected student was the son of a devoted missionary of the Church Missionary Society.

DR. LOCKHART (Chairman) dwelt upon his own early experiences as a medical missionary in China to show the great progress that had been made since those bygone times. He warmly advocated the cause, which he believed had a great future before it, both at home and abroad.

Dr. MACKENZIE, medical missionary at Teintsin, China, gave some most interesting details of the work as it had come under his personal observation during his eight years' residence in the Celestial Empire. He described how after much prayer a remarkable Mission hospital and dispensary were procured at Teintsin, primarily through the successful medical treatment of the wife of Li Hung Chang and through some operations performed in the presence of the Viceroy. Wealthy patients began to crowd in, and eventually these subscribed for for the erection of a hospital, which has been sustained by them for the last four years. Eight young Chinese students are now being trained in the practice of Western medicine, and through them it is believed that the upper classes of the people will be reached, not only to the healing of the body but to the saving of the soul. The best way to preach the Gospel in China, he said, was not to speak from a platform to the people en masse, but to deal with them individually in a conversational style. The work of Medical Missions affords ample opportunities for Gospel preaching of this kind. Such work effectually removes prejudice from the minds of the people. A Corean Prince on one occasion paid a visit to the hospital, thus paving the way for such efforts in his own land. In closing his animated and eloquent statement of the work, Dr. Mackenzie told of some cases of unmistakable conversion through medical treatment in the hospital.

As a worker in the home field, Dr. DIXON, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, gave similar details of his daily experiences. At first they met with considerable opposition, but that was now breaking down, mainly owing to personal benefits received by the opposers. He could not boast of many known conversions, but large numbers had heard the Gospel message, and some were inquiring the way of life.

Dr. DOWNES, Cashmere, thought that Medical Missions had not yet had a fair chance of showing the great results they were well calculated to effect. They much wanted to have a Medical Mission in Umritsur, the capital of Cashmere, but they had not yet accomplished that. During the first five years of his residence in Cashmere he had more than 30,000 cases through his hands, some 3000 of these being surgical operations. He had not yet been able to acquire the Kashmiri language, and that was an obstacle in presenting the Gospel to the people. There was great readiness among them to hear the Word, and everything was done, both publicly and in the medical wards, to bring the truth to bear on them.

Very warm and important testimony was borne to the work of Medical Missions by Surgeon-General Francis, of the Indian Medical Service. He urged that those who went out, both men and women, should be fully qualified in a medical point of view, and should be total abstainers.

ENGLISH MISSION HOMES IN PARIS.

A MEETING was held on Friday afternoon at 24, Grosvenor-square, by permission of the Earl of Shaftesbury, at which the work now being carried on in Paris by the English Mission, under the direction of Miss Leigh, was discussed. The Earl of Shaftesbury occupied the chair.

Miss Leigh gave a graphic description of the work that was being done in assisting young English girls who for various reasons, the principal of which seemed to be the idea of learning the French language and so getting on better in England, accepted uncertain situations in France at ridiculously low salaries. Frequently they were dismissed without sufficient warning, and but for the aid given by this Mission their fate would be a lamentable one. Among other facts Miss Leigh mentioned that there were 22,000 English poor in Paris, or, in the words of a Commissary of Police, "English people who could not afford to lose a day's work." The claims upon the Mission were innumerable, and the good it was effecting incalculable.

The claims of the Mission were eloquently urged by the speakers, and a resolution was passed that it was desirable that information as to the work that was being done should be widely spread. Among other things urged upon those present was the need of making known the dangers to which young women expose themselves by answering advertisements and obtaining situations through agencies. Parents ought to be tenfold more careful respecting the selection of schools, as in many cases the prospectuses are thoroughly deceptive. The question of the position of an English girl who may have married a Frenchman without going through all the forms required by French law was also touched upon, several young English women having been deserted in such a position, and having fallen back on the Mission for aid; and it was resolved that Parliament be requested to at once take such steps as may seem requisite to bring about a removal of this evil.

PORT SAID.—Mr. G. O. Eoll, a Swede, has for ten years been doing the work of an Evangelist among foreign seamen at Bristol, and the Lord has truly blessed the seed sown. Latterly he has not been able to use his gift of languages (of which he speaks ten, more or less perfectly) on account of the altered condition of the port of Bristol. He is therefore about to sail for Port Said, having had a desire to go there for the past five years, and the way being now opened for him to follow up the work of Mr. Whytock, who returned to Scotland some months ago. Mr. Eoll very aptly quotes Num. xiii. 17-20; Ps. xxxii. 8; Ezra vi. 3, 4, 8, 9; Is. vi. 8; 1 Cor. ii. 3, to which we beg our readers to refer. Messrs. Cory Brothers, of Cardiff, have offered him a free passage; Miss Macpherson and Mr. Wright, of Bristol, have contributed £10 each: and we trust this faithful and simple-hearted Evangelist will be upheld by the prayers and help of Christian friends interested in our own sailors and those of other nationalities, in a port of peculiar difficulty and temptation.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND MISSIONS.

LAST week, in Exeter Hall, the Bishop of Bedford presided over the annual meeting of the Church Parochial Mission Society. The Secretary, Rev. S. W. Darwin Fox, read the report, which stated that the number of Missions taken by the clergymen connected with the society during the year was 168. The employment of laymen in direct connection with the Mission work of the Church of England had, during the past year, received the careful attention of the Committee, and the services of three lay evangelists had been secured. In the organisation of the Church Army the Society had entered during this past year upon an enterprise which was already passing out of the experimental stage of its development, and might claim to have proved itself a valuable auxiliary to the ordinary work of the parish, especially in the poorer districts of large towns. Twenty corps of the Church Army were now on the register. Every corps, it was remarked, had some feature of special interest. The Portcullis Hall, Westminster, was largely attended by young men who were in danger of drifting into the criminal classes. The work among this class was especially difficult, yet nothing could better show the supernatural power of vital Christianity than the way in which some young fellows living in the tainted moral atmosphere of Westminster lodging-houses were kept in the practical realisation of the Lord's saving power. The Oxford corps, under the command of Rev. F. S. Webster, had rescued some of the worst characters in the town. Accounts were afterwards given of the "Army" work at Brighton and Birmingham, and it was observed that wherever the right men could be found for officers, and wise, sympathetic guidance was given by the clergy of the parish, the Church Army might be recommended as an agency likely to do good and lasting work.

The Chairman said he could not imagine how anyone could go about day by day as he had to do in the east of London, and watch those groups at the corners of the streets, especially when the corner was a gin-palace—groups of rough men, and of still rougher and ruder women—without his heart sometimes sinking within him, and the question arising in his mind how these people of all ages and of both sexes were to be reached and won. The great bulk of them manifested stolid indifference with regard to religion rather than any other feeling, but at the same time there were eager, anxious spirits who were busy in propagating infidelity amongst their class. The problem which he had mentioned being always before him, he felt day by day the necessity for not being one-sided, the necessity for opening his heart to almost all kinds of instrumentalities, and of not confining oneself or cramping one's energies within very narrow lines. Alluding to the work of the Church Army, the Bishop said he felt sure God intended that men should not merely attend religious services, but should also have joyous feelings in their religious life, and that emotion had a manifest use. Surely Christians ought to show that they were no longer under the law, but under grace, and should rise above a mere slavish obedience. There should be a bright, joyous, happy sense of God's presence and of God's love.

Rev. Filmer Sulivan, Vicar of St. Matthew's, Bayswater, said he would confine his remarks to a few jottings from his own personal experience. He was at Brighton when Mr. Aitken first came among them. At the time of his first visit the people were not accustomed to Missions, but he was thankful to say that a great many members of the congregation and others had great expectations, and were tolerably prepared for the Mission, and when their friend came, and God came with him, he fully realised the force of that passage, "I will open the windows of heaven, and pour out such a blessing that there shall not be room to receive it." The results far exceeded the expectations, and every night there were gathered in the chancel a number of persons who offered up a song of praise. The results of the third Mission were marvellous. The only difficulty was to find room for the people who flocked to hear the preacher. Having recently come to a large church in London he had sought the aid of Mr. Aitken in his new district, and never did he hear the Word of God preached with greater power, or listen to teaching more thoroughly scriptural. On the last Sunday afternoon there was about 1000 men in the church, and there was a wave of emotion which it seemed impossible to repress.

Rev. W. H. Aitken said last year would always be a very memorable one in the history of that society as being the year in which it took a new departure. They must all remember the stirring speech of the Archbishop of York that time last year in which his Grace called attention to the operations of the Salvation Army, and said he felt that the time was come when the Church of England should proceed in some definite mode in the same direction. General Booth had been the Columbus of a movement which had opened up to them a new and grand continent, and he thought the society was right in using what he had done as a foundation for the humble beginning which they had made in connection with their own Church.

Rev. H. Armstrong Hall (Vicar of Holy Trinity, Bristol), Mr. E. Clifford, and a working man on the platform belonging to Birmingham, also addressed the meeting.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN SWITZERLAND.

DEAR SIR,—Our daily secular Press does not keep us informed of what is passing at home and abroad on religious questions, however momentous such questions may become as it regards the liberty of the subject. It will hardly be credited, but it is true, that freedom of religious worship and the right of association (public meeting) have been practically abolished in Neuchatel, a Canton which, with Geneva, so distinguished itself in the 16th century that they became the homes of the persecuted and the proscribed when almost all Europe cast them out.

The uprising against freedom of worship began, some months since, with the arrival of Miss Booth and two friends of the Salvation Army, who were expelled on the pretext that they belonged to a "religious corporation." It remains to be proved whether that Army possesses a corporate character, and this question is now before the Council on appeal. It must be understood, however, that the practices peculiar to the Army at home, such as marching, singing, and praying in public, have nothing to do with the question, as neither at Geneva nor at Neuchatel has anything been attempted but to conduct religious services in public halls or private rooms.

What I am anxious now to point out is that however the action of the authorities may have originated with the claims of Miss Booth as a peaceable resident in Switzerland, the principle involved has been pushed by the opponents of all vital religion to the extreme of denying the right of association for religious purposes, and of worship in public and in private, to every person who has not "the express authorisation of the Great Council" of the Canton.

The opponents of free religion have unearthed for their purposes an Article of the Constitution which related to the Jesuits and their affiliates after the war of the Sonderbund. This Article, the 72nd, is as follows: "No religious corporation shall establish itself in the Canton without the express authorisation, and always revocable, of the Great Council."

This Council, which is elective, and at present under the control of the party opposed to religion, has withdrawn the protection of the police, and the mob has now, for at least a month past, interdicted all private meetings for religious worship, even though they be held in private houses, and be convened by letters or by cards of invitation. An attempt to hold such a private meeting in the house of a well-known friend and advocate of liberty, and who is entirely opposed to the particular organisation of the Salvation Army, brought about such an attack upon the house that the windows and door were destroyed, and so outrageous an assault was made upon the few friends assembled, that some of the ladies present were confined to their beds for many days with wounds, bruises, and contusions received. The police rendered no assistance; indeed, the visitor or native of the Canton who may claim to worship God with his friend in his own or hired house or hotel, is, ipso facto, an outlaw, and must expect no protection from the authorities. Those who are determined to assert their rights, until better times arrive, travel by train each Lord's Day to the forests of the Jura or to remote mountain stations, and like the Separatists of London, the Pilgrim Fathers of New England, or the Covenanters of Scotland, enjoy in the wilderness that freedom which is denied them by the rancorous bigotry of their fellow men.

I will only add that the mobs which now rule are composed of the lowest and most degraded class, but they would be powerless were they not abetted by the upper class, which is almost entirely arrayed against vital godliness. I have documentary evidence for what I have written; but I mention no names, as it would involve friends in risks, which I desire that they may avoid.

Two journals which have advocated the cause of freedom have been silenced by threats of violence, which would certainly be carried out.

It is important that your readers should be informed of this state of things, and if they contemplate visiting the Continent they should certainly avoid the Cantons of Berne, Geneva, and especially Neuchatel, unless they are prepared to surrender the practice of public and private worship accompanied by their families and friends.—Your constant reader,

London, May 19. Sigma.

A PRACTICAL CHRISTIAN EFFORT.

SIR,—You were good enough, last year, to allow me to appeal on behalf of ailing women residing in our overcrowded Metropolis, an appeal which elicited a kindly response. It was wished to obtain two or three weeks' enjoyment of country or sea air for ailing women and girls belonging to the lower orders, who needed rest from their life of toil but who were too poor to procure a holiday for themselves, and I thought that many a lady might be able to find a corner in her house where such a one could be accommodated.

The best argument I can adduce in favour of the occasional reception of poor guests into ladies' houses, is that they who have once welcomed them almost invariably do so again. Is it to be wondered at, when it is found that at the cost of a very slight sacrifice much pleasure can be given and good done to one of "God's poor"? Let Christian gentlewomen open their doors as well as their hearts to such and let them in. I myself have had the pleasure of entertaining poor guests for the last three or four summers, so I am not recommending to your readers an untried experiment.

Ladies who will kindly volunteer to receive ailing women or girls into their own houses or board them out under their own watchful supervision in cottages—paying for their board and lodging, which costs about 8s. a week—are requested to write to the Lady Brabazon, Ottershaw-park, Chertsey.—Yours very faithfully,

M. J. Brabazon.

EVANGELISATION IN PARIS.—In consequence of unforeseen commercial changes, the esteemed secretary of this Mission, Mr. W. J. Lockie, has been compelled to relinquish a position he has held in Paris for the last sixteen years. Our friends in Paris regard it as most important to retain him as a missionary to the English there as well as secretary. To accomplish this it is necessary to raise a special fund, as the income of the society is barely enough for the support of the seven missionaries engaged in this good work. Gladly and thankfully will I receive contributions for this purpose, as I know Mr. Lockie to be spiritually-minded and well qualified for the position. J. M. Weylland,

Hon. Sec. for England.

AS THE SPRING.

"Do good."—Ps. xxxvii 3.

GO forth in the winter around thee!
Go forth with the bounty of Spring!
There are buddings of hope that are waiting
For the sunshine thy blessing may bring.
There are hearts that are darkened by sadness,
Where the beams of thy kindness may shine;
Till it changes the gloom into gladness,
Gilding grief with a glory divine.

There are flowers that are hiding their blossoms:
Go forth with a quickening ray,
Bid them rise from the beds where they slumber,
And be clothed with their goodly array.
Like the Spring, scatter flowers of beauty,
Of innocence, pleasure, and mirth:
Doing good as thy privileged duty,
With jewels bestrewing the earth.

There are dells where the mists have long gathered,
Where the trees are still barren and bare;
There are birds that are waiting thy summons,
To open their orchestra there.
Flash the brightness of joy down these valleys,
Hang the leafage of hope in their bowers,
Till the songsters amid their fair palace,
With music shall cheer the bright hours.

Doing good, till the world shall grow better,
Till the mists and the shadows depart,
Till the sunlight shall melt the cold fetter
That chills the true life of its heart.
Doing good, not with wearying labour,
To merit the love of thy King;
Doing good in the light of his favour,
Doing good like the beautiful Spring.

AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.—The Annual Meeting of this Society was held in Exeter Hall on Tuesday evening, May 22, Lord Shaftesbury presiding. The report, read by Mr. J. E. Hazelton, Secretary, was of a cheering and interesting character. The Society is for the relief of aged poor of both sexes and of all Protestant Evangelical denominations. 1011 pensioners are now on the books, and receive pensions amounting to upwards of £6150 per annum. More than 750 are over 70 years of age. Help is needed to sustain and extend the important work of this institution. Lord Shaftesbury warmly commended its claims to the Christian public.

HOUSE OF REST, EASTBOURNE.—On Wednesday, May 16, an interesting gathering was held in connection with Miss Mason's good work of providing a place of rest for weary workers in the Lord's vineyard. Rev. W. A. Bathurst presided, and spoke appropriately on the object of the Home. Miss Mason read an encouraging report of how the Houses of Rest at Kilburn and Eastbourne had met the needs of many. One wrote: "I can never be thankful enough for the blessing your House of Rest has been to me." Other visitors bore testimony to the benefit derived from their stay. Miss Mason's address is Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn, N.W.

BOYS' HOME, Palmer House, 185, Holloway-road, N.—The purpose of this Home is to receive boys who are destitute or neglected, and by timely help, by kindness, and by Christian influence, to save them from entering upon lives of crime. The work was commenced in November, 1881, by taking and fitting up two rooms in Swan-yard, near Highbury-station, as a shelter for about a dozen lads, most of whom had been sleeping "out"—that is, anywhere they could—and temporary employment was arranged for them as shoeblacks. In March, 1882, the work was extended by transferring it to much larger and more convenient premises in Palmer House, which has been fitted to receive thirty boys, and is generally full. More than 100 boys have already been received as inmates, some only for a few days or weeks, but others remaining several months before being placed out in situations. The boys in the Home receive food, lodging, and clothing. Their ages vary from nine to fifteen, the younger boys attending a Board School, others being employed in wood-chopping or as shoeblacks, and several in regular situations, but still living in the Home. The earnings of the elder boys cover part of the expense of their maintenance, but the remainder, as well as the whole expense of the younger boys, and the general expenditure of the Home, has to be met by the contributions of friends. Help will be thankfully received and acknowledged by Mrs. Watts-Hughes, 19, Compton-terrace, N. Parcels of left-off clothing would be also very useful, and much appreciated.

HOMELESS AND DESTITUTE CHILDREN.

THE annual meeting of the Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children was held at Exeter Hall on Thursday evening last; Earl Shaftesbury took the chair. The boys and girls sang for three-quarters of an hour to the delight of a well-filled house.

The Chairman then distributed a number of prizes to boys and girls who had kept their situations from one year to seven. These prizes consisted of medals, writing desks, work boxes, Bibles and purses. It was an interesting sight to see the recipients march on to the platform, having the appearance of respectability and industry. One Christian sailor received a Bible as a reward for saving the life of one of his comrades who had fallen in the river.

The report, read by Mr. Williams, states that the London Home, in Great Queen-street, under the care of Mr. and Mrs. Ward, has during the year proved of good service to many homeless boys of the Metropolis. Some idea may be formed of the need of such a Home and Receiving House in the old locality, from the fact of the secretary receiving in the course of the year upwards of two thousand applications for admission. During the year 462 boys were received in this Home, all of whom were in an utterly destitute condition. They have come seeking admission, in some instances in want of the necessaries of life, and to have turned them away would have been to doom them perhaps to an early death. The total number of children admitted into the Refuges up to the end of 1882 was 9279, viz., 7619 boys and 1660 girls. The total number of children who have left the Refuges and ships for service, &c., from their establishment to the 31st December, 1882, is over 8200, viz., over 6800 boys and 1400 girls.

It will be seen that this institution is doing an important work and deserves the heartiest support. The letters from the boys given in the report are extremely interesting. The girls' Homes at Sudbury and Ealing have been pursuing the work of training girls to become good, useful domestic servants. The income of the institution in 1882 was £23,114 16s., and the expenditure £26,147 15s. 7d., leaving a debt of over £3000, part of which has since been met.

After prayer by Rev. R. G. Simpson, the Chairman spoke of the general work of the institution, and claimed that no better examples could be found the world over for sobriety, morality, and religion than among the boys and girls of these Homes and training ships. Canon Nisbet, Revs. J. P. Chown, J. O. Davis, and J. F. Goe spoke a few words of encouragement and exhortation.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE.—In the provinces some of the more prominent advocates of the movement have been busy during the past week—Mr. and Mrs. Poole in the Channel Islands; Mr. G. Blaiklock at Summertown, near Oxford; Mr. R. T. Booth, at Plymouth; and Mr. W. Forbes, at Blackpool.

MR. W. CATLIN, of the Cow-cross Mission, writes encouragingly of a Gospel tour he is making in Wales. He has visited Brynmawr, Monmouth, Leamington, Worcester, Hereford, Ross, and Pontypool. Many open doors have been given to him, and a good many have heard the Gospel by his lips. Other London workers would be considerably benefitted by such a tour.

SWANSEA.—A branch of the Church Army has been started in Swansea in connection with the parish church, and after a month of hard work it is felt to be a real blessing in the place. It was commenced on Sunday, April 15, under the leadership of the Rev. Wilson Carlile. Services have been held every night in the schoolroom or some Mission-room, preceded by a march through the streets. Open-air meetings have been most successful, held at the corners of streets. Children's services held on Sunday, and once or twice in the week, have been greatly blessed, as have also the weekly meeting on Friday night for the promotion of a deeper spiritual life. Numbers stood up at the after-meeting at the close of the evening service on Whit-Sunday to testify to the blessing which they had received since the Church Army work had commenced. It has also reached some of the very poorest people, who, though much persecuted by their friends, have come out for Christ.

VILLAGES IN SUSSEX.

THE time has again come for special evangelistic efforts in our villages. The present delightful weather opens our way, and we have already commenced our summer's campaign by visiting places within a radius of ten miles. There is little or no Gospel in some of these places, and in few of them tract distribution or house visitation is carried on. We endeavour, as far as able, to supply this lack, calling at every house, distributing tracts, selling copies of the Scriptures, and conversing with the people. We have been much encouraged in this work. In the evening we hold open-air meetings, having announced them during the day. We are thus able to preach the Word of Life to many who enter no place of worship.

Our own people being poor, are not able to meet the outlay at our regular meetings in our own neighbourhood; we therefore ask for the sympathy and help of Christians on behalf of this work. For thirteen years we have plodded on; hitherto the Lord has sustained and blessed us, also making us a blessing to others. Gospel tracts and books, Bibles and Testaments, will be most acceptable. E. SHRUBSHALL.

MISSION WORK AT EPSOM RACES.

THE usual combined effort to carry the Gospel to the people attending Epsom races was made last week. Agents of the London City Mission, the Open-air Mission, and unattached evangelists, to the number of about twenty, worked together during the greater part of the week. Miss Annie J. Alexander made the local arrangements, and it is a matter for devout thankfulness that she has been spared to do this for twenty-five consecutive years. Mr. William Quartermaine East shared in the work by receiving the workers to tea on Sunday afternoon. This "Sunday before the Derby" is very valuable for Mission work. The tide is in our favour, and we can preach on the racecourse both afternoon and evening. Monday is the gipsies' day, when Miss Alexander gives them a free tea.

The racing begins on Tuesday, and continues four days. Then we meet the people on their way to the course, and offer them tracts, and have personal conversation as opportunity offers. As a rule, the only opposition offered is during the preaching in the town at night, and in that respect this year was no exception to its predecessors.

On the course itself, and among the carriages along the sides of the course, quiet Mission work can be carried on any time during the day, and especially before the racing begins. On the "Derby Day" I expounded "The Coloured Teacher" on the course, without any opposition. Probably, during the week upwards of 70,000 tracts, books, and cards were distributed, the Open-air Mission Scripture cards being specially acceptable.

The forces of evil are very great on this great national racing carnival. The awful abominations belched forth by men and women cling to us for weeks. Lenient as the police are on such occasions, no less than fifty-six cases were dealt with by the Epsom magistrates the day after the Derby; the chief offence being gambling. The new emblem of total abstinence, the blue ribbon, is conspicuous by its absence, the bulk of racing people eschewing it. Those who are for ever flattering themselves that the world is growing better should spend the race week at Epsom.

SUNDAY CLOSING.—The secretaries of the Association for Sunday Closing appeal to our readers to be diligent in signing petitions in favour of this movement. They say: "We need that every petition should be signed as numerously as possible, and presented early, so that before the middle of June the House of Commons may be again flooded with them. Every person sixteen years of age and upwards, who has not signed a Sunday closing petition this year, should be requested to do so. The Rev. W. H. Perkins, M.A., secretary, 14, Brown-street, Manchester, will gladly supply written petitions, signature sheets, &c."

THE ANNUAL MEETING

Of these Institutions will (D.V.) be held in EXETER HALL, on WEDNESDAY Evening, the 6th June, 1883.

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL CAIRNS

Will take the Chair at 6 o'clock, and will be supported by the Rev. W. Barker, M.A., Rector of Marylebone; the Rev. Evan H. Hopkins, M.A., Vicar of Holy Trinity, Richmond; Wm. Fowler, Esq., M.P.; the Right Hon. the Lord Kinnaird, the Rev. Dr. Donald Fraser, Hon. T. H. W. Pelham, General Maclagan, the Rev. Thomas Champness, Samuel Gurney Sheppard, Esq., Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, James E. Mathieson, Esq., the Rev. R. C. Billing, M.A., the Rev. Dr. Sinclair Paterson, C. M. Baker, Esq., Robert Anderson, Esq., LL.D.; the Rev. Donald Macleod, the Rev. Dr. Rosedale, Harry C. Nisbet, Esq., the Rev. Archibald G. Brown, and R. C. Morgan, Esq.

About 750 children from the "Homes" will sing, under the leadership of Mr. Joseph Proudman.

To prevent the overcrowding of former years, and the disappointment felt by many who had tickets but although they came from a distance were unable to gain admission, it has been decided this year to make a small charge for all the tickets except those for the Gallery. No more will be issued than are sufficient to fill the Hall comfortably.

The doors will be opened at a Quarter before Five punctually, at and after which hour ticket holders will be at once admitted to their seats in the order in which they arrive.

Admission will therefore be free only to the Gallery. Tickets for the body of the Hall will be 6d. and 1s. each. A few specially reserved and numbered seats at 5s. each.

As it has been with some little hesitation that the charge for admission has been proposed, the Committee earnestly hope that its adoption will not prevent any real friends and sympathisers of the work carried on by these "Homes" from being present. The programme for the evening will be a specially attractive one, both as regards the speakers, the singing, and the prize-giving.

Application should be made for these tickets at once, P. O. O. or stamps in prepayment of ticket and postage being in all cases enclosed.

Letters to the Editor.

REPLIES TO CANON TRISTRAM.

DEAR SIR,—Being a constant reader of THE CHRISTIAN, I cannot refrain from expressing the heartfelt pain given me to-day by reading your quotation of Canon Tristram's remarks on Congregationalists. "Two-thirds," says the Canon, "of the Congregationalists are Arians, and there are few Congregationalists who dare preach the doctrine of the Atonement." I am well acquainted with the Congregational Churches and ministers of Shropshire, and the Canon's statement, as far as it relates to this county, is absolutely untrue. I never knew but one Congregational minister in our county association who was, as I thought, tainted with Arianism, and if he were he had become tainted by reading some of the Broad Church writers of the Canon's own Church. I am profoundly sorry that a professedly Gospel minister should give expression to such an unchristian, inexcusable, and slanderous falsehood!—Yours truly,

LEWIS WEAVER.

Ruyton XI. Towns, Salop, May 24.

DEAR SIR,—In your number of May 24 I read a charge made by Canon Tristram that "Two-thirds of the Congregationalists are Arians, and there are few Congregationalists who dare to preach the doctrine of the Atonement."

As a Congregationalist preacher of more than fifty years' standing, and of wide acquaintance with the ministry throughout England, Wales, and Ireland, I boldly declare I know not one Arian; there may be a few whom I do not know. There may be places where the doctrine of the Atonement may not be preached; but I, thank God, was never at one of them, nor could I name any such place.

For myself, and for the two thousand seven hundred of my Congregational ministerial brethren, I say, if Canon Tristram can lay his hand on two hundred and seventy, one-tenth, or twenty-seven, one in a hundred, I will heartily thank him, and will undertake to forward the list to the secretaries of each County Union throughout the British Islands.

In conclusion, I would remind the rev. Canon, the Midianitish shepherd once proclaimed a world-wide commandment, "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour." I enclose my card. —I am, faithfully yours,

A CONGREGATIONAL MINISTER.

Mission and other Appeals.

"THE PILGRIM BAND," GREENWICH.—Miss C. Elliot, 22, River-terrace, East Greenwich, appeals for help towards the expenses of a free tea for 100 poor people.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN SAILORS' SOCIETY.—Rev. E. W. MATTHEWS, Mercers'-street, Shadwell, E., appeals for help in sending forth the steam launch, William Tyler, on her mission of mercy to Malta, where English and foreign men-of-war and merchant ships are constantly calling; £100 still are needed.

PEAR-STREET RAGGED SCHOOL, WESTMINSTER.—Funds are needed to enlarge and improve the premises of this Mission. Upwards of £400 is wanted, of which more than half has been given and promised. The Superintendent, Mr. W. MIDDLETON CAMPBELL, 23, Rood-lane, E.C., will be glad to receive contributions.

MOULINS, ALLIER, FRANCE.—An appeal is issued by the friends of evangelical work in this place for help in defraying the cost of erecting a much needed church and schools. Pastor Camus, of Moulins, will furnish full particulars, and the Hon. A. F. KINNAIRD, 3, Pall Mall, W.C., has kindly consented to receive subscriptions.

CHELSEA Y.W.C.A.—In order to procure funds for carrying on the work among young women in this district, a sale of work will be held on July 3 and 4, at Mr. and Mrs. Maguire's, "The Vale," King's-road, Chelsea. Mrs. Bennett, wife of Rev. John Bennett, Park Chapel, Chelsea, appeals for articles or donations in furtherance of this object. Help to be sent to Mrs. BENNETT, 25, Westgate-terrace, South Kensington, S.W.

BRITISH SYRIAN SCHOOLS.—An earnest appeal is made on behalf of the British Syrian Schools at Tyre. A suitable site for a new building, which will cost £1200, has been found, towards which £450 has been given. Much real work is being done by the agency of these schools, and we trust our readers will be able to help towards the desired object. Information may be obtained from, and donations sent to, Miss Annie Poulton, 18, Homefield-road, Wimbledon.

Notices.

Mrs. Henderson, Bank House, Falkirk, N.B., would be glad if any reader could send her a list of the hydropathic establishments in England, especially of any such institutions in Margate or Ramsgate.

SYRIAN COLONISATION FUND.—Cheering accounts have just been received by the Committee of the happy arrival of their second party of Jewish emigrants in Cyprus. They speak warmly of the great kindness shown them in Alexandria, and by English residents in Cyprus. It is an unspeakable comfort to think of their safety, while reading the sad news now published of fresh outbreaks of violence in Russia against the unfortunate Jews who still are obliged to dwell in that land. Relief of persecuted Jews, in token of Christian sympathy, will be needed so long as Christians thus cruelly treat the Jews.

Subscriptions received by Messrs Morgan & Scott to Saturday Morning, May 26, 1883.

 Donations should be sent by cheque or Post-office order, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O.O.'s payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

 Will Donors oblige us by giving explicitly and full the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday Morning. Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

"A CARELESS AGE."—The poem with this heading, by Mr. G. Weatherley, which appeared in our last issue, was taken from the May number of The Quiver.

PHILO-JUDÆAN SOCIETY. — The secretarial work in connection with this excellent institution, performed by the late Mrs. Way, has now devolved on Mrs. H. Langhorne Orchard, of 15, Christchurch-road, Hampstead, N.W. The object of the Society is the administration of temporal relief to aged and distressed Hebrew women.

HOUNSLOW.—The Lord has just removed by death a servant of his living at Hounslow, who had recently started a Sunday afternoon service for children and young people of the upper classes in his own drawing-room. The work was greatly blessed, which is proved by the sorrow of the children at their friend's death, and their anxiety that the services should be continued. Is there any servant of the Lord living in the neighbourhood who is willing to take up this work? Full information as to the work may be obtained from Mrs. H. E. Prall, Hautville, St. Stephen's-road, Hounslow.

CONTENTS OF NO. 1.
Where is my wandering boy to-night?
One there is who loves thee
The mistakes of my life have been many
Long in darkness we have waited
Are you coming home, ye wanderers?
A ruler once came to Jesus by night
Fierce and wild the storm is raging
Why do you wait, dear brother?
Say, where is thy refuge, my brother?
Why perish with cold and with hunger?
From the riven Rock there floweth

CONTENTS OF No. 2.
What can wash away my stain?
Come, thou weary! Jesus calls thee
Should the death-angel knock at your chamber
The Gospel bells are ringing
Have you any room for Jesus?
Oh come, sinner, come! 'tis mercy's call
Make room for Jesus! room, sad heart!
Oh, do not let the Word depart
Brightly beams our Father's mercy
O Christ, in Thee my soul hath found
Light in the darkness, sailor!

CONTENTS OF No. 3.
When my final farewell to the world I have said
Standing by a purpose true
When the storms of life are raging
I have read of a beautiful city
Ring the bells of heaven! there is joy to day
I have heard of a land far away
"Land ahead!" its fruits are waving
Oh, tender and sweet was the Master' voice
'Tis the promise of God full salvation to give
When storms around are sweeping

CONTENTS OF No. 4.
Of course you know that to a d fro, throughout our glorious land
She only touched the hem of His garment
Our Master has taken His journey
Tempted and tried
Father, don't you hear the ange
The prize is set before us
There is a Fountain filled with blood
Would you lose your load of sin?
Yield not to temptation, for yielding is sin

CONTENTS.

The Old Gospel.	The "I Wills" of Christ.
Repentance and Restitution.	The Reaping of a Life.
Seekers and Finders.	Weighed and Wanting.
Faith's Grasp.	The Mighty Love.
Confession of Christ.	Why are we Powerless?
Christ and His People.	Dare to be a Daniel!

"We read in Rom. v., 'As by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned;' but Jesus Christ came, and by His death, by the sacrifice of Himself on the accursed tree, atoned for sin, paid the penalty, and bore it clear away, and now all men who believe the Gospel are entitled to all the benefits of His death and life. That is God's good news of glad tidings. That is the grand old-fashioned Gospel, the Gospel we want to-day, just as much as ever we did."—Extract from page 3.

BEING NOTES OF EXPOSITION OF THE SCRIPTURES.

Revised by ROBERT C. CHAPMAN.

Happiness, Joy, Comfort & Peace.	Salvation, Justification, Pardon.
Begin every day with the Word of God and prayer, if you would enjoy settled blessedness. It is in the Word of God that the fulness of Christ is revealed, as the rich portion of every one who trusts in the Blood of Christ. (Page 157).	"How can I be pardoned?" says the poor self-condemned sinner. "How can I not pardon?" says God. The sinner looks at his sins; but God looks at his Son's atoning blood. Sinner, do thou likewise. The Strong can help the Weak! The Rich relieve the Poor!

The Prosperous aid the Struggling! With gain to themselves! HOW?

By investing money which remains their own and yields them fair interest; yet so employed that benevolent persons and institutions can BUILD, FIT, and FURNISH, or acquire possession of suitable premises, complete, at economical cost and by easy fixed payments, spread over a term of 15 years. The Securities for money invested are abundant:

1. Legal Tenure of Land and Buildings. 2. Independent Substantial Guarantees. 3. Plant, Leases, and Stock-in-Trade.

The Special Work consists in helping to establish

MISSION HALLS, CHURCHES, CHAPELS, TEMPERANCE PUBLIC HOUSES and HOTELS, PHILANTHROPIC HOMES; and also RE-SEATING AND HEATING UPON MODEL PLANS.

Upwards of 100 CASES are now asking for help. For full particulars write to Mr. EDWARD MORGAN, Secretary of STORY OF OUR ENGLISH BIBLE: Its Various English Translations, Its Separate Books, Writers, &c., with other Biblical information. By WALTER SCOTT, Author of "Bible Outlines," "Coming Glories," &c. In cloth boards, antique, price 2s. 6d.; gilt edges, 3s. 6d., post free.

This new book abounds with statements and facts of the deepest interest to every reader of the Bible, containing, as it does, a vast amount of Biblical information and help. It gives brief accounts of the various written and printed English Bibles, from Wycliffe's edition to the Revised New Testament of 1881, with history of chapters, verses, &c., of the sacred books. The Author has sought to condense very much really valuable information upon the history and contents of our English Bible, and we have every confidence in recommending the "Story of our English Bible" to all our friends, as we believe it to be a book which every Christian should possess.

"ONE TUN" RAGGED SCHOOL,

OLD PYE-STREET, WESTMINSTER.

£100 are URGENTLY REQUIRED, for carrying on this Mission. THERE ARE NOT SUFFICIENT FUNDS IN HAND TO PAY THIS MONTH'S EXPENSES.

At the Twenty-sixth ANNUAL MEETING on June 5, at the School, the Earl of SHAFTESBURY presiding, about Forty young servants, formerly scholars, with excellent characters of one year and upwards, received the School Prize. About Twenty others are in situations, but not yet twelve months. Other operations besides the Day, Night, and Sunday Schools, are Mothers Meetings, Band of Hope, Juvenile Sabbath Band, Working Lads' Institute, with Bible and other Classes; Mid-day (Wednesday) Prayer-Meeting, Men's Sunday Afternoon Bible Class, Sunday Evening Mission Services and Prayer-Meeting. Penny Banks, Shoe Club, &c. A Bible-Woman to visi all connected with the Mission, and other efforts. "Brethren, pray for us." Mr. A. J. WOODHOUSE, Treasurer, 1, Hanover-square, W.; Mrs. J. BARKER HARRISON, Hon. Sec., 78, Coleshill-street, Eaton-square, S.W. Cheques may be crossed Union Bank of London, Argyll-street, Branch. The smallest donations thankfully received.

GEORGE YARD RAGGED SCHOOLS, &c., Whitechapel, E.

GEORGE HOLLAND thankfully acknowledges from L., Clothing.

J. P.—Yes. We shall take about 600 children for a day in the Country when sufficient funds are in hand.

JOHN.—Yes. We shall be thankful if you will come on Thursday evenings, and teach some Industrial Class. It is a good opportunity of speaking a word for Jesus.

There are more than forty Missionary agencies in operation in connection with the work at George Yard.

Friends are invited to visit the Institution any day but Saturday.

Post Office Orders should be made payable at 66, High-street, Whitechapel, E. Letters and Parcels should be addressed to GEORGE HOLLAND, The Ragged Schools, George-yard, High-street, Whitechapel, London, E.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

Or, COMITÉ AUXILIAIRE D'EVANGÉLIZATION DE PARIS.

President—The EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G.
Treasurers.
London—F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-st., E.C.
Paris—M. de NEUFVILLE, 6, Rue Halévy.
Superintendents of Missionaries.
Pastors DURAN, THEODORE MONOD, BRIDOL, and LEFOIDS; and Rev. R. W. MCALL.

Seven efficient Missionaries, with all diligence now make the Gospel known to the poor of Paris. The conflict with atheism, error, and immorality is severe, but deep impression is made and trophies are won for Christ. The Committee ask for aid, as their needs are pressing. Income last year about £400, and this is failing. French pastors and English ministers are pressing for more of these labourers. Help will be gladly received and full information given by J. M. WEYLLAND, Hon. Sec. for England, 31, Carlton-hill, St. John's-wood, N.W.

UNSECTARIAN AND UNENDOWED.

PROTESTANT BLIND PENSION SOCIETY for granting Pensions to the Blind Poor at their own homes. At the PUBLIC MEETING held at the Cannon-street, Hotel, on May 23, Sir J. W. Ellis, Bart., presiding, it was determined, in view of the large number of candidates seeking election, to add eight to the twenty-nine Pensioners elected in the afternoon of the same day, thus bringing the total number of Pensioners on the funds to 400, involving an annual outlay of about £2,800. To meet this increased liability, and hold out hope of early relief to the 173 candidates still remaining on the list, help is urgently needed. Contributions will be gratefully acknowledged by the Committee. N. J. Powell, Esq., Treasurer; Thomas Pocock and A. S. Dodson, Hon. Secs.; W. Elliott Terry, Secretary, 235, Southwark-bridge-road, London.

SOCIETY FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE ITALIANS IN LONDON.

—A Sale of Ladies' Work will (D.V.) be held at the Kensington Town Hall, and opened by the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G., on Wednesday, 13th June next, at 12.30 p.m. Also on Thursday, 14th June, from 2 p.m. to 9.30 p.m. Ticket for Wednesday, with Concert at 4.30 p.m., 2s. 6d., and for Thursday, 1s.—Miss ROBERTSON, 11, Oak Hill-park, Hampstead; or Mrs. LEONE LEVI, 19, Richmond-crescent, Barnsbury, N.

URGENT APPEAL FOR £250.—

Mission among the poor French-speaking people of Soho and the neighbourhood. An agency has been carried on for many years by Madame Barbin, at 10, Charlotte-street, Portland-place, to obtain situations for poor French and Swiss girls, but in consequence of the death of the owner, will pass into other hands, unless Madame Barbin can raise £600, to purchase the lease. Of this sum, Madame Barbin's trustees are willing to advance £350. Will some Christian friends help with the balance? Reference is kindly permitted to Joseph Weatherley, Esq., 51, Gordon-square, W.C.

MRS. WILKES

proposes to be at home every Wednesday from Two till Five o'clock, for the purpose of seeing friends of Rescue Work, Trains from Liverpool-street to St. James-street Station, Walthamstow, every half-hour. 500 ACRES OF LAND.

Good Farm buildings, and House built for a Home for 60 boys,

RENT FREE.

The above has been placed in trust for the benefit of poor Irish boys. It is in the parish of Ballinahill, Clifden, co. Galway. The Rector of the parish has the superintendence of the institution. A sum of money is required for capital. If this were once raised the institution would be almost self-supporting. Contributions will be gratefully received by Rev. H. W. Townsend, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, London, W.C.; or Miss Davies, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin.

LAWYERS' PRAYER UNION.—

It is proposed to hold another social and religious Meeting in London for Barristers and Solicitors, and their Clerks only, on Thursday evening, June 14, 1883. Mr. Justice Pearson in the chair. Any Gentlemen in the legal profession, or their Clerks, who desire to attend, or will assist in inviting others, are requested to apply to Mr. H. C. NISBET, 35, Lincoln's-Inn-Fields.

MRS. ORCHARD

asks for means to give 75 JEWESSES, who attend her class in Whitechapel, a Day in the Country, which is alike healthful to mind and body.

15, Christchurch-road, Hampstead.

THE COMMITTEE

of the Ladies' Samaritan Society of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, 25, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, earnestly plead for Contributions in aid of the poorer patients and their families. The smallest Contributions in money and clothing will be thankfully acknowledged by the Committee. Old coats and trousers are much needed.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

Supported by Voluntary Contributions.

President—

The Right Hon. the EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G.

Established 1822, for the purpose of employing humble Christian men, well versed in the Scriptures, to visit from house to house throughout the country, and visit all denominations. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required. The work is carried on in a spirit of love.

Subscriptions or Donations will be thankfully received by the Secretary, Capt. KEARNEY WHITE, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin; or at 9, Paternoster-row, London.

The Earl of Shaftesbury says in his last letter to the Secretary:—Many thanks for your kind letter, and many thanks to Almighty God for the good intelligence you give me about your Scripture Readers in Ireland. I wish I could more effectively assist you. Your letter is the best thing that I have seen or heard from Ireland.

I enclose my donation, and only wish it was more.—Yours, SHAFTESBURY.

N.B.—Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

PRIVATE TUITION

must always be far preferable to ordinary school life, where such boys are usually left to the care and tuition of inexperienced and often uninterested Assistant Masters, and to the rough treatment of hardier Schoolmates.

MR. WILLIAM PENN

devotes his personal attention, care, and tuition to such Pupils, of whom he takes only a few, as he desires to preserve the strictly family tone of his home, wherein his Pupils are received as members of, and sharers in, the family life. In the fear and love of God it is sought to train this family, developing all kindly and gentle feeling, encouraging observation and a love of Nature. It is Mr. Penn's conviction that is of more value than an extensively stored memory, and the mere acquisition of knowledge apart from some perception of its significance as a factor in human life and interests is not encouraged. The House is admirably situated on the eastern brow of the northern heights of London, open on all sides and commanding an extensive and delightful view of over twenty miles of River, Lake, Hamlet, and the Forest of Epping, into which it is easy to penetrate for pleasant rambles, &c. TO GODLY PARENTS.—

The undermentioned (who is in no way connected with the school) is desirous of recommending an old-established YOUNG GENTLEMEN'S BOARDING SCHOOL, DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED FACING THE SEA on the South Coast, a short run from London, in which a thorough and first-class Education is given, based upon the teaching of the Holy Scriptures.

It is one of the few remaining schools in which the power of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ influences the hearts and conduct of the pupils.

The success, happiness, and training of the Boys have been so remarkable in this School that a BOOK OF TESTIMONIALS GIVEN BY THE PARENTS should be read to appreciate results so unusual. Two Vice-Chancellors have placed their wards as pupils in the school. Reference kindly permitted to Dr. THORN, Paddington, London.

HIGH-CLASS SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

GARRATTONIAN PHILOSOPHY: WHAT IS IT?

"He is not the discoverer who first utters a truth, but he who says it again and again until he compels mankind to hear him!" So said SYDNEY SMITH.

(Resumed from last Issue.)

Of the value of Magnetism in the various affections of children it is impossible to speak too highly. The petulance and fretfulness of the little ones arise not from natural peevishness, but from the irritability consequent upon some nervous derangement. Cross children will be found to be sickly children, and fretfulness is often, to the scientific eye, the clearest symptom of disease. Whatever allays irritability or regulates the functional processes must in such cases be invaluable. A correspondent, writing to us, says: "My little boy was born with hoarseness and rattling in the throat, which more or less continued for nine months, during which time we had not a good night's rest. From the time your appliances were put on he began to amend, and after a little while he lost the symptoms altogether. My brother's little girl appeared to have chronic croup, which came on when she was only four months old, and after two months' treatment, different doctors quite gave the child up, thinking she must be suffocated, her breathing being so difficult. On using your treatment there was soon a marked improvement, which continued until the child got quite well. Both children are now strong and healthy."

It is thus possible to explain the efficacy of Odo-Magnetic treatment without resorting to the ingenious theories on which some persons expend a considerable amount of so-called logic. We refer to the supposition that the cures recorded have been effected by the faith or imagination of the patient. A large proportion of our patients have made trial of Odo-Magnetic treatment when despairing of cure from any remedy, and after having consulted physicians during fifteen or twenty-five years with a great hereditary faith in medicine. Yet in numbers of such cases we have been favoured by signal success, so that the insinuation itself conveys a free admission—none the less genuine because unintentional — that Magnetic treatment does effect cures, not by faith, but, as we assert, by the result of actual specific influence, because the cure itself cannot be explained by any action other than that of Magnetism. Other means are resorted to with considerable faith and confidence in their remedial power, yet fail in numberless instances to produce the decidedly permanent results which Magnetism—through its vitalising influence—resorted to at a patient's utmost extremity, often effects in the Paralysed, the Epileptic, the Dyspeptic, the Asthmatic, and sufferers from Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Bronchitis, Nervous or Muscular Weakness, and kindred maladies.

It would be a wonderful freak of imagination which would persuade a man helpless with paralysis that he has become able to walk; a man groaning under rheumatism, that the agonies he has endured for twenty-five years, and such as his father bore before him, have at length disappeared. Although many persons have now unlimited faith in Curative Magnetism, this was not a condition imposed upon them when under treatment, but arises from the benefit they have derived from it.

We have dealt at some length on this point, because objectors, failing to understand what Odo-Magnetic treatment is, and unacquainted with its results, cannot weaken our statements concerning what it does, or our knowledge of the laws which guide us in its adaptation. The effects we can satisfactorily explain, as being uniform, whether in the treatment of delicate infants or adults, although the former are not particularly gifted with strong faith.

(To be resumed.)

Mr. Garratt will always be happy to confer with any scientific or medical gentlemen, either personally or by letter, upon any phase of the subject, or any case for treatment, and will send a private list of 850 names as referees to any address.—B. "There has been, if our experience serves us at all, no book quite like this since 'Robinson Crusoe;' and 'Robinson Crusoe' is not better, does not tell a story more directly, or produce more instantaneous and final conviction. No one who begins this book will leave it till the narrative ends, or doubt for an instant, whether he knows Defoe or not, that he has been enchained by something separate and distinct in literature, something almost uncanny in the way it has gripped him, and made him see for ever a scene he never expected to see."

LAST WEEK AT EXETER HALL.

THE Eight Days' Gospel Temperance Mission at Exeter Hall is now over, and may well be looked back to with satisfaction and thankfulness by all who were concerned in its promotion. For the first time in the history of the movement, it has been possible to keep up, for over a week, a sustained interest on the subject, in this great metropolitan centre. Night after night crowds flowed into the historic building; the closing meeting on Sunday night showed no abatement of interest or attention. A goodly show of pledges has been secured, and in every case the names and addresses of the newly-enrolled have been carefully registered. In itself, this Gospel Temperance Mission has formed a series of May meetings, combining vigorous oratory and lively enthusiasm.

The American originator of the Blue Ribbon movement, Mr. Francis Murphy, and his eloquent son, Mr. Edward Murphy, have been well to the front; there was no evening on which either or both did not deliver a characteristic and impassioned address. A Gospel Temperance Mission in London would be incomplete without William Noble, who commenced the Blue Ribbon movement in this country. The two addresses which he gave were marked by his usual earnestness; last Sunday evening he created special interest by narrating the story of his conversion to God, and the way by which the Lord led him.

Rev. Charles Spurgeon, of Greenwich, gave an admirable address on Wednesday night, full of vigour and fire, certain in its sound, and worthy of the Metropolitan Pastor himself. We believe this was the first occasion on which the Pastor's son has addressed an Exeter Hall audience; but probably in the future his voice will be often in request, for it has the true Tabernacle ring, the real Tabernacle fire. On another night Dr. Branthwaite spoke admirably on "The Physical, Mental, Moral, and Spiritual Deterioration resulting from the use of Stimulants," and presented scientific facts in so attractive a guise that all were constrained to listen; to some, we know, the Doctor's evidence came as a startling revelation.

The most crowded meeting of the series was that of Friday evening. After the Chairman's remarks, Dr. Barnardo spoke as a specialist on "The Sufferings entailed through Drink upon Children from Infancy upwards." Mr. Richard T. Booth had travelled two hundred miles to be present on this evening, and was received with acclamation. He gave a powerful address, rich in Gospel truth, and full of appropriate quotations of Scripture, which touched, as with electric force, the hushed assembly.

We are only able in this brief notice to name a few of the speakers: there were many others who did noble service to the cause; to these we endeavour to do such justice, in our extended report, as our limited space will allow. Sincere thanks are due to Mr. Croil Falconer, who so skilfully led the singing; to Mr. Roby, who ably presided at the organ; to the choir, for its gratuitous and effective help; to Mr. and Mrs. Milligan, for their diligent superintendence of the pledge-taking; to Miss Mason (of the House of Rest), for the formation and oversight of the Ladies' Committee; also to Mr. Weston, Mr. Lawrence, and the band of stewards.

Messrs. F. & T. E. Murphy gave addresses at the Aldersgate and Exeter Hall Daily Prayer-meetings during the week; their earnest and appropriate exhortations must have helped to fan the flame of zeal that found its manifestation in the great gatherings held night after night.

Pressure upon our space will not allow of our giving in the present issue the addresses of Saturday and Sunday evenings; these we hope to give in our next.

JESUS ALL, AND ALL FOR JESUS.

IN his lectures on John the Baptist, Edward Irving thus comments on the fact that so little is said of him by the Evangelists, so few details of his life and work recorded:—

"We may grudge this silence over the acts of so noble a personage, the most poetical, perhaps, in history, and whom, certainly, Poetry, if she had not lost her high faculty of selection, would choose for her subject; but that envious silence which we grudge is another testimony amongst many to the high aims with which the Evangelists wrote. Poetry and pathos, or justice to the best of men, or recording the memory of deeds better recorded in the book of God's remembrance, all that which prompts historian, biographer, or man of genius, was second-rate or out of the question with men who were travailing as in birth with a world's salvation; who beheld a world lying in wickedness, and shot across from land to land to save them, and committed to scattered leaves of Epistles words of healing and saving virtue—every word precious as a soul—and sent them forth to seek their fortune amongst the disbelieving part of men.

"What had they to do with taste, criticism, finish, and such puny accomplishments, when life, life eternal, immortal, was breathing in their sentences? Oh that we had such men again; men who coined truth and made it current in its first mintage, striking spirit with the first impression of spirit, and taking men with the pure virgin tints of nature and truth; spirit-stirred, enrapt with the high themes of salvation, and who left behind them in their glorious course literary, sectarian, and clerical distinctions, as the trifles of the present world with which the enemy entraps the souls of the unwary."

Despite his mistakes and peculiarities, Irving was himself a striking illustration of whole-hearted absorption in the Saviour's cause; he therefore could fairly express such desires as those contained in the above extract. And how truly do they set forth the want of the Church and of the world. To influence either aright we must be independent of men, and fully alive to the superiority and imperativeness of the claims of Christ. The man whose soul is lifted high above the merely human and earthly distinctions which obtain amongst many, and who dwells on high, holding holy fellowship with his Master, is the man whose mission tells upon those to whom he is sent. In heaven nothing is recognised but that which is Christlike and built upon truth, and heavenly unction only rests upon the head of those who disdain on earth all that is not stamped with the same image and built upon the same foundation. Singleness of eye is essential to fulness of light, and if we are to successfully cope with the powers of darkness we must assuredly see to it that we are filled with light, and that the light which is in us is pure and clear, even Heaven's own.

"He that followeth Me," said our Lord, "shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." What is following Christ, but letting the heart and mind be fixed on Him so completely that we lose sight of other guides, and discard all other motives than Him and his constraining love? Of them that were born of women, there had been no greater prophet than John the Baptist, yet from him, as from all other human teachers, did apostles and evangelists turn, to gaze fixedly and only upon Jesus. We may honour men whose gifts and graces mark them out as prominent in the ranks of Christ's servants, but we may not call them Master, or allow them to influence our action so as to make us unmindful of the fact that One, and only One, is our Lord, all beside being brethren. Man worship, leading to trust in human leadership, and boasting in human names, is far remote from the spirit and teaching of the inspired Word, and should be, therefore, far from the life and heart of all who are taught to obey its precepts. "Christ is all and in all," is the right motto for every Christian worker, and the secret of all success in Christian work. The Church needs to be brought to clearer and fuller recognition of the fact that Christ is still in the midst of his people, actually and blessedly with us as our Teacher, Ruler and Guide, and that before his presence even a Moses or an Elijah must fade away, that Christians may see and hear "Jesus only."

Sectarianism would soon wither away before his recognised presence, and love, pride, and vainglory would find no place where He was seen and felt to be at hand. All adverse influences and unworthy motives would be put to flight, and gracious impulses alone be excited, if thus all were "looking off unto Jesus." In proportion as we are absorbed in the contemplation and the exaltation of our Lord and Saviour shall we be prepared for his service, and honoured of God in our work. Self will, indeed, be forgotten, earth lose its charms, man be despoiled of power to allure by smiles or alarm by frowns, if only we are wrapt in adoring, trustful admiration of Jesus as our Redeemer, and consecration to Him as our Lord. Be it ours, whatever our sphere, to seek a holy freedom from, and elevation above, all distinctions and distractions which could take away from complete subordination and surrender of self to Christ.

"Christian, wouldst thou fruitful be?
Jesus says, 'Abide in Me;'
From Him all thy fruit is found,
May it to his praise abound."

"THE BLOOD."—2.

By the Author of "The Gospel and its Ministry."

"IN whom we have redemption through his blood." Redeemed with "the precious blood of Christ as of a lamb without blemish and without spot." The allusion to the Passover is clear. Israel was redeemed by blood. There was a redemption by power, too. With a strong hand and an outstretched arm God brought his people out of Egypt. But this followed on redemption by the blood.

And this is a truth which every sinner who seeks pardon and life must learn. The heart craves some proofs of redemption, some sense of deliverance, before believing in the blood. But God will give none. It was as slaves, still groaning under Egypt's bondage, that the Israelites sprinkled the paschal blood. Some, doubtless, could have shown the livid weals of the ganger's lash even as they feasted on the lamb within their blood-stained doors. They were still in the house of bondage, and the power of Egypt was unbroken. As judged by unbelief in the light of reason, and of plain, hard facts, their faith was fanaticism, and their conduct was folly. They had nothing to rest upon, nothing to appeal to, but the bare word of Jehovah.

And so is it with the Gospel. It reaches the sinner in his sins, as he is and where he is, and tells him of life and peace. It comes as the word of God, and claims to be received as such. The message to Israel was, "I will bring you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians, and I will rid you out of their bondage, and I will redeem you with a stretched-out arm." But before they could be redeemed from Egypt's bondage, they must needs be delivered from Egypt's doom. The judgment was not upon the Egyptians, but upon Egypt: and none were excepted. The destroying angel had no commission to inquire as to race, or creed, or character. The death-sentence had fallen upon the first-born, and it was for him to execute that judgment, save where the blood-stain testified that it was already past. They "kept the sprinkling of the blood, lest he that destroyed the first-born should touch them." Through the Blood the Israelite had redemption.

There are two words for redeem in the New Testament. The one signifies to buy, as in a market; the other, to effect deliverance by the payment of ransom and the exertion of power.* The latter is the fuller word, and this it is which is commonly used in the Septuagint, notably in connection with the deliverance from Egypt. Here the thought of purchase is utterly inadequate, save as it is included in the ransom. Satan, after all, is but a brigand. Pharaoh had no rightful claim upon the people whom he held in servitude, and Israel's deliverance was his destruction.

And yet redemption by blood goes deeper than this. It was by the decree of God Himself that the death-sentence passed upon the first-born. It was God who ordained the deliverance from that doom. And, mark, it was not by the death of the paschal lamb, but by the sprinkling of its blood, that Israel was saved. Here the doctrine of the blood comes in. Substitution is the leading truth in our theology respecting the Atonement, but in Scripture it is but a part of a fuller and a wider truth. In the sin-offering Israel was identified with the victim before its death, by the laying on of hands; and the victim died as a substitute. But the sin-offering was for a people already redeemed. In the passover, on the other hand, the death of the lamb, though the basis of the blessing, in itself brought no deliverance. That depended on the sprinkled blood, whereby the Israelite became identified with a death already accomplished.

And the passover reveals to us the sacrifice of Christ in its aspect towards the sinner lying under judgment. That sacrifice is God's provision for his deliverance, but it can bring no blessing, it can bring nothing but a deeper doom for him who rejects it or neglects it, unless and until he becomes identified therewith.

If words are to be used with scriptural accuracy, redemption is not through the death of Christ, but through his blood.* Or, to drop the figure, the sinner must become identified with that death by faith. To use the good old term of the divines, the blood represents death "appropriated" by the sinner who believes. If this doctrine of the blood be lost sight of, we shall inevitably lose ourselves in the trackless waste of universalism, or else be driven to take refuge in the narrow rut of ultra-Calvinism. The one ever ignores the righteousness of God, the other denies his grace. In contrast with both, the Gospel of the blood reveals how grace can reign through righteousness unto eternal life.

And here we must remember that the two distinctive truths of the Gospel, righteousness and grace, belong, not to the age of "darkness," but to that of "the true light," which shone in Christ. That faith is counted for righteousness is a truth as old as the covenant with Abraham. But how God could be righteous in thus justifying the believing sinner—this is a truth which was veiled until the new covenant revealed it. The righteousness of God was witnessed by the law—by these very types of the Mosaic ritual—but it was manifested and declared in the Gospel, apart from law altogether; and until that revelation was made it was a hidden truth. (Rom. iii. 21—26.)

And so also with grace. The Israelite's redemption depended not on any merits of his own, but only upon the blood. But yet the blood was only for the Israelite. The ground of redemption was such that the Egyptian might have shared it just as freely; but in fact he was excluded. No message of mercy reached him. But now the Gospel is preached to every creature under heaven. "There is no difference, for all have sinned." "There is no difference, for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon Him." "Sin reigned once—God was dealing with men on the ground of their being what they ought to be, while by their very nature they were what they ought not to be. God's attitude towards the sinner therefore was adverse. There was a covenant truly, but that only served to make the doom of the world more definite. God was imputing sin, and the normal and legitimate result to men was death. But now sin is dethroned and grace is reigning. God is no longer imputing sin, but preaching peace. He to whom all judgment is committed is now seated on a throne of grace. It is not that He has grace for the elect, and judgment for all besides, but that grace is the great characteristic of his reign. He is a Saviour and not a Judge. He shall yet come to judge; but now, the amnesty has been proclaimed, and judgment waits. It is not, as in a bygone dispensation, that there is mercy for a favoured class, but that there is mercy, and nothing else, for all without distinction. The day is coming when judgment will be as unmixed as grace is now, but during all this 'acceptable year of the Lord,' his throne is a throne of grace, and the guiltiest sinner upon earth will there find only mercy."

* ἀγοράζω (from ἀγορά, a market) means simply to buy (see, e.g., Matt. xiii. 44, 46, xiv. 15, xxi. 12, xxv. 9, 10, xxvii. 7); and is so rendered uniformly by the Revisers. It is used six times in the deeper sense, viz., 1 Cor. vi. 20, vii. 23; 2 Peter ii. 1; Rev. v. 9, xiv. 3, 4. In Gal. iii. 13, and iv. 5, the kindred word ἐξαγοράζω occurs. The second word λυτρόω (from λύτρον, a ransom), though often used in the LXX., occurs in the New Testament in three passages only, viz., Luke xxiv. 21; Titus ii. 14; and 1 Peter i. 18. The kindred noun, λύτρωσις, occurs likewise three times: Luke i. 68, ii. 38; and Heb. ix. 12; ἀπολύτρωσις is used in ten passages: Luke xxi. 28; Rom. iii. 24, viii. 23; 1 Cor. i. 30; Eph. i. 7, 14, iv. 30; Col. i. 14; Heb. ix. 15; xi. 35.

* See Eph. i. 7; 1 Peter i. 18, 19. The blood includes the death, but it brings in the thought of the sinner's indentification therewith. The blood is a figurative expression, and the figure is derived from the types.

ITALIANS IN LONDON.

EIGHTEEN years ago, a daughter of the late esteemed Rev. Dr. Duncan, of Greenwich, formed a class of organ men and boys, to whom she taught the Bible on Sabbath afternoon; from that humble beginning a Society has resulted for the benefit of poor Italians in London, which has been in existence ever since, and has done much good. On Sunday afternoons at the Board school, Saffron-hill, there is a class for adults in Italian, and classes for children. A missionary visits from house to house and distributes tracts and portions of the Bible. The district is full of Italians, the greater part of whom are utterly ignorant of the Word of God, and many of them decided sceptics in all matters of religion. But all over London there are a large number of Italian figure sellers, confectioners and others, for whom Mission work is absolutely needed.

For this school and Mission, the lady workers have decided on holding a sale of ladies' work at the Kensington Town Hall, commencing on Wednesday, June 13, to be opened by Lord Shaftesbury at 12.30. We hope the friends of Italian Evangelisation in London will take the opportunity of coming to the aid of this excellent Mission. The Treasurer is Mr. R. R. Glover, Allendale, Green-lanes, N.

FRENCH IN LONDON.

WE have before us the brief history of Monsieur Barbier's report of work among the poor French-speaking people of Soho and the neighbourhood during another year. It gives several interesting incidents, illustrating the usefulness of the Mission, especially among Romanists, who, being neglected by their own people in this country, are willing to send their children to the school, and receive visits themselves from the missionaries. The Mission comprises numerous agencies for the various classes of people, young and old, whom it is designed to benefit. In looking through the accounts, it strikes us that the work is carried on in a very economical manner. Mr. Joseph Weatherley, in a prefatory note, testifies to its value, and it will no doubt give him great pleasure to be entrusted with any sums for the purpose of carrying it on.

Since the issue of the Report, we learn that 10, Charlotte-street, Portland-place, the house in which young French and Swiss girls are received, and the Registry for Governesses and Servants is carried on, is in danger of passing into other hands, unless the sum of £600 can be found to purchase the lease. Of this sum, Madame Barbier obtained the consent of the Trustees of her marriage settlement to advance £350, but is dependent upon donations for the remaining £250.

THE FREEDOM OF THE WILL.

CHRISTIANITY AND MODERN THEORIES.

THE freedom of the human will has always been, and probably always be, one of the most debateable of metaphysical questions. Yet it is a subject having such a direct bearing on the fundamental principles of religion, that the simplest religious thinker cannot shelve it as being a merely metaphysical subject. It is a practical question upon which his moral responsibility depends.

Two of the most influential modern writers on ethics maintain (under different forms and phraseology) the theory, that the will, while not necessitated to move in certain fixed directions with precisely the same rigidity as matter is under physical law, is nevertheless only capable of exerting itself in obedience to the strongest motive bearing upon it, so as to act in the line of least resistance. Without committing himself to this statement of the case as being either the truest in principle or the happiest in expression, the Christian is prepared to allow and meet it, as one not antagonistic to, but accordant with, the glorious proclamation of salvation from sin to a life of holiness through faith in Christ crucified.

Admit that the will of man has a bias towards evil, that this bias constitutes a motive power which dominates his volitions, what but a new affection can supplant that native power of evil, and become a constraining power for good? The love of God as manifested in the life and death of his Son affords the strongest incentive to affection for that which is pure and holy (that is, accordant with the character of Him to whom the grateful love arises) which can be conceived, and in theory as well as in experience it becomes a motive power controlling the will and imparting an ardour of desire and an energy of effort in the right direction, i.e., the direction towards righteousness and holiness, which makes that direction (however much in other respects a thorny path) become "the line of least resistance." The Christian asserts that this manifestation of Divine love and the affection it incites, when apprehended in its fulness, supplies a dominant motive power over the will such as can be found in nothing else. Other motives may influence the character for good, may tend to lessen the bias towards evil, but they are immeasurably inferior to this, and when the Apostle speaks of the constraining power of the love of Christ, he alludes to the mightiest motive power in the moral universe.

It is beside the question to point to those whose lives are not controlled by this power, although they have heard the Gospel of the grace of God—the love of God in Christ—all their lives long. In more instances than is generally imagined the story of love Divine has perhaps not been even intellectually apprehended, although heard. Inattention, indifference, incapability of "seeing the invisible," may have deafened the ears and blinded the eyes, so that hearing, they hear not; and seeing, they see not. But if this manifestation of the love of God cannot excite affections and implant wishes in the human mind that shall energise the will to virtuous action of the noblest character, what can? Nay, what does?

It is also beside the question to point to examples of professing Christians, whose lives testify that their wills are not governed by an all-controlling motive for good. These examples simply show that such persons are either deceivers or self deceived as to their wills being under this mighty controlling power. The proof that the love of God manifested in Christ is the all-sufficient controlling motive power over the human will by virtue of which the path of righteousness becomes the chosen path, because "it is the line of least resistance," is to be found in the lives of those who having once been the bond-servants of sin, have become under its influence the no less manifest bond-servants of righteousness (Rom. vi. 18, 19).

Are not these living witnesses, these epistles read of all men, readily to be found? And wherever they are found they constitute a Christian evidence more valuable, because more convincing, than all the intellectual arguments that have ever been adduced, and practically refute the sophistries which may be founded on modern views of the freedom of the will. THE DAILY CROSS.

A WORD FOR THE TRIED AND TROUBLED.

"LET us lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us" if it is our heart's desire to make progress in the way of holiness. For this we need a constant supply of God's grace that these enemies of our souls may be subdued, and that we may tread upon their high places. But while every encumbering weight is to be laid down, there are certain weights which our Heavenly Father sees fit to lay on. We stand equally in need of his grace to be able to accept these lovingly and to bear them patiently, even though it should be all the journey through. They will be no hindrance, though at first sight we may regard them as such. That temptation in the flesh seemed to be anything but helpful even to the experienced eye of one who had been in the third heaven, and who had had "abundance of revelations." It was taken to the Lord in prayer, and its removal earnestly desired. "A messenger of Satan" truly! But He who said to the disciples, "Behold, I give unto you power . . . over all the power of the enemy" (Luke x. 19) said also to Paul, "My grace is sufficient for thee, for my strength is made perfect in weakness" (2 Cor. xii. 9).

We may have often prayed or sung in sincerity of heart,—

"Nearer my God to Thee, nearer to Thee,
E'en though it be a cross that raiseth me."

But when the cross was given, its first effect was not to raise us but to lay us in the dust, and to strip us of all our glory. Is it so with you, dear child of God? Do you feel the cross which He has given you, to be a heavy burden, almost unbearable? You thought it would have been something quite different, but this—this is a cross. Yes, and it is thy cross. If prayer for its removal is not answered, then pray for a spirit of submission to God's will, and the controversy will end. Ask for grace meekly to bow the shoulder and allow Him to lay on thy cross. You will find it neither too large nor too heavy for you, but just what is needful—one of the good things which the Lord our God has given. It may stay the eagle flight, it may slacken the running pace, but steady advancement and persevering continuance in all the righteous ways of God will not be hindered thereby. "They shall walk and not faint."

Let us beware of using unlawful means in seeking to get rid of the cross. He will only increase our burden, and bring a gloom over our souls. Even were we successful, what child of God would choose to lay down the cross if at the same time the light of his Father's countenance were to be withdrawn? "He gave them their request, but sent leanness into their soul" (Ps. cvi. 15). It was a poor portion! "Shall we not much rather be in subjection to the Father of spirits and live?" "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily and follow Me" (Luke ix. 23).

Looking unto Jesus will always help the poor tried soul. Looking at our cross the eye grows dim, and we faint and stumble, for in itself it can never be desirable, but "They looked to Him and were lightened." Looking unto Jesus, and remembering how He bore the Cross for our sakes. Looking unto Jesus for sympathy. He knows all the sorrows of his people; He also knows their every weakness—their cross, and their inability to carry it without his imparted strength. His eye is resting with the most tender interest on each one of the pilgrim band, and not only the home, but "the way home," is all arranged by Him. "He saw them toiling in rowing, for the wind was contrary to them." Even so now.

Looking unto Jesus, as the weary, way-worn traveller looks and longs for the end of his journey, the home to which he is hasting. Jesus Himself is the "God of glory," and to be with Himself will fully compensate for all the trials and difficulties of the way. What He cannot explain to us now He will unfold to us then, and it will be a revelation of grace from first to last. God giveth us songs in the night, and we try to sing them; but they are feeble, broken songs, too often ending in a sigh. By and by they will be set to heavenly music, and we shall sing them in the light and liberty of Immanuel's Land.

"Now the tuning and the tension,
Wailing minors, discord strong;
Afterward, the grand ascension
Of the Alleluia song.
Now the training, strange and lowly,
Unexplained, and tedious now;
Afterward, the service holy,
And the Master's 'Enter thou.'"

BIBLE AND COLPORTAGE SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

THE annual meeting of this Society was lately held in Dublin, the chair being taken by Major Warren. The attendance was large, and representative of the different religious denominations. The speakers were also connected with various churches. Among them were Revds. Dr. Stevenson, Horace Townsend, H. M. Williamson, J. H. Deacon, Mr. J. R. Fowler, Mr. R. P. Froste, &c.

The report read by Rev. John Elliott, secretary, was very encouraging. Only in the year 1875 had the sales reached so large a sum, £8,873 19s. 3d. having been received at the depots for Bibles, books, and periodicals during the past year. Besides the sales there has been a large gratuitous circulation of tracts and periodicals. The journals of the colporteurs give the most cheering records of work done and blessed, saving effects produced. It is very pleasant to read these records of light and life at a time when such dark and dismal scenes have been enacted in Ireland. For that country the only remedy is the Word of God, and the agents of this Society, carrying Bibles and good books, are finding their way into all parts of the country. The Report tells us that good, intelligent Christian men approved of by the Society are ready to go into the field as soon as called on.

It takes about £60 to support a colporteur. If any friend or number of friends will contribute £40, the Society will send an agent to any district selected. Rev. J. Elliott, Armagh, will answer all inquiries.

BIRTH.—Since receiving the communication from Senora Rodriguez, of the Figueras Mission, Spain (see page 18), we are informed that she has given birth to a son; both mother and child, we are thankful to say, are doing well.

FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

THE meetings of this extensive branch of the Church of Christ have a more than ordinary interest this year, from the fact that it is the fortieth year of its existence. It was in 1843 that the famous disruption occurred; how God has honoured the noble-hearted men who, urged by nothing but fidelity to conscience, led the way in the formation of the Free Church, the strength and progress of that body, from the first until now, abundantly testify. The present session is evidently one of earnestness and holy purpose, no sign of decaying zeal or waning power being discernible. The discussions have been full of vigour, and much interesting information concerning the work of God at home and abroad has been elicited.

DR. HORATIUS BONAR'S ADDRESS.

In our last issue we briefly alluded to the address of Rev. Dr. Horatius Bonar, as Moderator. As might have been expected, it is devoted to the spiritual aspects of the work in which the Church has been engaged. It breathes the spirit of reverent faith and earnest concern for the glory of Christ, which has pre-eminently characterised Dr. Bonar's life and labours all along.

It is mainly occupied with what may be termed the under-currents of church life, rather than with matters seen upon the surface, and regards them in their reference to the future, as well as traces their relation to the past. The Doctor speaks as one taught in the prophetic, as well as the evangelistic Word, and while compelled by the present state of things to look somewhat mournfully upon many signs of the times, yet with unshaken faith, and a hope glowing with brightness and blessedness, discerns and hails the approaching dawn of that day when Christ shall come to make all things new. The true spirit and purpose which should animate and control such gatherings as those over which he presides are thus beautifully sketched:—

We meet here in faith, not so much round a visible creed as round an invisible cross—the cross in which we glory. We meet in love, for One is our Master, even Christ, and all we are brethren. We sit here not as units, but as one great unity; and in cherishing this unity we recognise not merely our dependence on our Head, but on each other for counsel and for sympathy; no one member isolated from the other; for "we are the body of Christ, and members in particular." "Not for strife or debate, or to smite with the fist of wickedness," do we assemble here; not to fight over differences, but to intensify agreements. Let them quarrel who seek their own glory or think themselves infallible, but let those who are aiming at the honour of another, and know the difference between the false liberality and the true, speak only the words of charity and peace. Not to despatch a certain amount of business, nor to go through certain annual forms, still less to seek victory for special views or favourite measures; not to introduce into the impartialities of a court of Christ the elements of human passion which disturb the equilibrium of the calmest judgment, not by a triumphant majority to overthrow an adversary or humble a brother, not to court reputation for ourselves at our Master's expense, or the Church's damage; not to magnify our own community above others—her labours, her liberalities, her numbers, her self-denial, as if all other denominations were rivals not allies; not to chalk Ichabod on the walls of every Church save our own. The model for the under-shepherd is the "Chief Shepherd," the "Good Shepherd," who gave his life for the sheep. From us the outside world is to learn something of what He is, and what we think of Him, and what extent of sacrifice we are prepared to make in serving Him. Let us not misrepresent Him in an assembly where it is specially expected that He should be represented well.

Referring to the results of the past, Dr. Bonar says:—

Our public records tell us much, but we should like to get deeper than they carry us, for human hearts are not engrossed in legal deeds, nor embodied in reports of committees. These forty years have not been years of stagnation; but the amount of progress cannot be measured by the quantity of motion. They have been years of liberal giving of our gold and silver to God, but have they been years of eager reception of his heavenly wealth? They have been years of human work; have they been correspondingly years of the Spirit's power, so that, on a review of the past, we can enter on our minutes what the Apostles entered on theirs at the close of their first year's work, "So mightily grew the Word of God and prevailed."

The character of our own times as it is depicted in the address furnishes by no means a satisfactory reply to the questions thus raised. While acknowledging much blessing which has been enjoyed, and much useful work done, Dr. Bonar sees in the spirit of the age cause for deepest concern and evidences of approaching changes of a momentous character. And in this spirit of unrest and departure from the truth of God, he sees to some extent at least the fruit of past failures. On the part of the Church, he says:—

In the ever-shifting changes and contradictions of public opinion, swaying to and fro with the tides of human passion; in the wide acceptance of the doctrine that religious certitude is impossible, and the supernatural indemonstrable; in the effacement of ancient landmarks, and the slackening of the most trusted keystones, we see a spirit at work—call it the spirit of the age or not—which is only beginning to reveal its aim and potency. In the disintegration of creeds and the decomposition of the materials of which these creeds are formed; in the multiplication of sects and the appetite for division and subdivision; in the unsettlement of thought, and the unwillingness to accept a settlement upon divine authority; in the rejuvenescence of doubt and the preference of unbelief to faith; in the audacities of scepticism and the oscillations between a bald atheism and an ornate pantheism; in the revived admiration for the deities of Greece and Rome, and the ill-concealed regret that polytheism is now out of fashion, and that

> "To adorn the worship of the One in the effrontery of an agnosticism that seems to have rebuilt the Athenian altar "to the Unknown God," though whether for worship or as an excuse for refusing all worship, no one knows; in the spread of religious materialism and the passion for the æsthetic and pictorial; in the tendency to regard the worship of Him, who is a Spirit, as a priestly performance for the gratification of the eye and ear; in the ambition to imitate antiquity and restore the worn-out garments of paganism; in these we have the foreshadows of approaching changes—of a spiritual revolution which will formulate to itself a new creed, which is gradually coming into shape, though as yet its projectors have not made up their minds as to whom they are to dedicate their projected temple—whether to the Jupiter of Olympus or the Jehovah of Zion. And then in the adoption of Evolution as an ascertained law both in science and religion; in the substitution of intuition for induction, and hypothesis for fact in biblical investigation; in the preference of the conjectural to the historical in the problems of criticism; in the elevation of minor points above the major, and the depression of the doctrinal below the sensational; in the depreciation and irreverent handling of the one great Book; in all these we read warnings of what may at any moment burst upon us, more especially as the destructive, not the constructive or pacific spirit is in the ascendant, and men seem resolved to pursue every favourite idea, not to say every crotchet, to the bitter end.
> A universe of gods has passed away;"

In all these disorganising forces the motive power is supplied by the great adversary of souls, who is altering the methods, but at the same time intensifying the malice and determination of his attack.

It is in the strength of the Divine Paraclete alone that we hold on our way, in this our nineteenth century—a century of intellectual light—as our fathers did in their day of mental dimness, fighting our later battle with unbelief as they did theirs with credulity. Three centuries and a half have changed many things connected both with faith and unbelief. The whole nature of religious conflict has been modified; in many points reversed. The weak has become the strong, the strong the weak; the certain and the uncertain have changed places and sides; and the treatment of Divine truth, both by believers and unbelievers, has become in many respects widely different from what it was in our younger days. We still "wrestle against principalities and powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world." But the tactics of the great adversary are wholly altered. He has pierced our centre and turned our flank, our ranks are getting into confusion, and, worst of all, he has succeeded in dividing our counsels and sharpening the swords of our men of might against each other. The enemy has assumed the offensive with increased numbers and wiser plans; not only with new weapons but with new allies, which the free and easy spirit of the age has enabled him to secure. He has extended his front, shifted his positions, assailing all at once, in front and flank and rear. Fertile in stratagem, as well as fierce in onset, he is out-generalling as well as out-numbering us, and his ambuscades are multiplying on all sides.

These facts are not spoken of as though they were dispiriting, or even discouraging to the true believer in Christ, and in no way prevent certainty and confidence as to His ultimate triumph. The value of prophetic truth is shown in this respect, and under such circumstances, to be beyond all price.

The believing student of the Word is always in some measure prepared for what is coming on the earth, by the prophetic instructions of his Lord. These instructions interpret the past to him, they give him a true and sober insight into the real condition of the present, and they correct his fond and one-sided anticipations of the future. They are his light in a dark place until the day dawn and the day-star arise.

The true position of the Church to-day, and the only source of power to enable her to maintain it in the face of present difficulties, is thus accurately described:—

The power of Pentecost is not yet exhausted. It is well that the Church should avail herself of the best of human acquirements. Let everything that is true be consecrated to the service of God. But it is not by these that the world is to be won, nor by these that the god of this world is to be conquered. It is not by wisdom of words that we are to meet the world's wisdom of words; it is not by oratory that we are to meet oratory; it is not by culture that we are to meet culture; it is not by sensationalism that we are to meet sensationalism. If we would successfully confront the dark mass of human evil that rises around us we must fall back on Pentecost, and on Pentecostal power. That is still in store for the Church of God. For its full exercise she is responsible. The Church has not cast anchor over an uncertain Bible, or an untried creed. If she has, then she has no message to deliver, and no authority to lift up her voice in the name of God and of His Christ. It would better become her to be silent. But she believes, and therefore she speaks. She has a divine commission to stand upon, and a true gospel to deliver. Hence she can afford to face not only opposition, but disappointment and apparent failure. She can also afford to wait; all the more because she has been forewarned of delay and of the need of patience. "He that believeth doth not make haste."

Those who see nothing but progress and cause for hopefulness rather than anxiety in the state of things around us, will find in the closing paragraph of this invaluable contribution to the religious thought of the age much food for reflection. It contains truth of deepest moment to us all, and points to the only rock of security and only star of hope to be discerned amidst the darkness and gathering force of the storm, which thoughtful men who see things as they really are, and survey them in the light of Bible teaching rather than of optimist speculation, know is soon to burst upon an apostate Christendom:—

The age is one of motion. But all motion is not progress, and all progress is not upward and Godward. Things are not always getting their proper names. Enlightenment, breadth, liberality, advancement, culture, large-heartedness may not be, in the judgment of God, quite the same as in ours. Our visions of the future may not be quite in sympathy with those of God. They may be, after all, I will not say earthly dreams, but human miscalculations. The creature-power which is producing all this motion and sending out these activities is undeniably great; far greater than most imagine. But unsanctified power is a perilous possession. The power of unregenerate humanity for evil is part of the heritage of the Fall. That power has never been really on the side of God, though once and again, "the earth has helped the woman." Power from above is one thing; power from beneath is another. Which of these powers is to obtain ascendency on earth remains to be seen. Can creaturehood be trusted with such power as it claims, and with such authority to wield that power as it assumes? Is humanity, as we find it now upon earth, qualified to exercise the original "dominion" committed to it by the Creator? (Gen. i. 26). Public opinion says, yes! Politicians of every party say the same. Does the Book of God affirm the same? The movable things of earth are now being shaken, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain (Heb. xii. 27). Instability makes us greatly prize the prospect of stability, and, in the long night, drifting like St. Paul's vessel upon a perilous shore, we cast our four anchors out of the stern and wish for day. All plans of mere human wisdom are like the "ungirdling" of the Alexandrian ship, a mere temporary relief. We are making for the shore. We long for the day when the kingdoms of earth shall be supplanted by the Kingdom that cannot be moved, and the many sceptres of the world be superseded by the one sceptre of the Righteous King. Many in our day dread what is called innovation, others love it, others know not whether to dread or love it. But whether loved or dreaded, it will come. But it will come in a form and from a quarter which will take all by surprise. It will come without any overtures from Presbyteries, either for or against. It will come without debate or division, without a mover or a seconder; it will be consummated without a vote or a protest, when He who sitteth upon the throne shall speak in the hearing of heaven and earth, and say, "Behold, I make all things new."

HOME MISSIONS.

Rev. James Wells, of Glasgow, in supporting the report of the Home Mission Committee, made an admirable speech on the duty of the Church to extend her influence to those outside. He thus dwelt upon the personal responsibility of her members, and the value of quiet, faithful effort for the salvation of men:—

The Church must do her utmost to provide a congenial and unsurpassed home for all zealous workers and young converts. It also becomes us to magnify more than ever those retired and homely ways of spreading Christianity, which are within the reach of nearly every Christian man and woman, and which are so powerfully recommended by the example of Christ. These ways are not the less likely to do good that they supply no excitement to the imagination, do not gratify the craze for publicity, and are emblazoned in no magazine. We have also to consider whether we are doing what we can to carry into practice the doctrine that every flock in town and country is a missionary institute, and before all other things an instrument for doing the work of Christ. We must all feel that our flocks contain vast energies for Christian work, and that the most of these energies are slumbering. The home mission cause is second to none in our land. It does not wear the outward marks of greatness which most readily strike the popular mind, but it derives unexcelled greatness from the earthly benefits it brings into the most wretched homes and from its tendency to enrich the life of the worker: it derives peculiar greatness from its close resemblance to the work of Jesus of Nazareth in the days of His flesh, and it derives unspeakable greatness from its relation to the everlasting interests of men.

JEWISH MISSIONS.

Dr. Wilson's report on Jewish Missions was particularly effective and interesting, his recent return from a missionary tour in the East lending to it a special freshness and point. Among the many striking facts brought forward by the Dr., the following is not the least significant and suggestive:—

Of all places Jerusalem was the most difficult of access to the Jews; indeed, it was difficult to fancy a Jew becoming a Christian in Jerusalem, for this reason, that there, where one might suppose they would find the headquarters of Christianity, they came across difficulties in their most serious form. They found there dead and corrupt churches, a coarse, repulsive view given of the religion of Christ, the very worst representation of Christ that could be given, and the adoration of sacred things and sacred places in a most remarkable degree. Not only did the Moslem make it a crime punishable with death for a Jew to enter into the precincts of the old Temple of Solomon, but also the so-called "Christian" made it almost equally criminal for a Jew to pass before the Church of the Holy Sepulchre—an extraordinary commentary on the Lord's command to begin at Jerusalem, and to begin by preaching the Gospel to the Jew as well as to the Greek. He found, further, the Greek, Latin, Armenian, and Koptic fighting with each other for some places in this Holy Sepulchre, each having some part of his own, and each having some common part at different times, and Turkish soldiers being constantly there to keep peace among these followers of Jesus to prevent them literally fighting with each other. With these things staring them in the face, it was difficult for Jews to become Christians, and this bore upon the indispensable necessity for having the Christian Church itself reformed before they could look for much in the case of the Jews.

The whole speech is spoken of as eminently fitted to quicken the youth, and arouse the enthusiasm of the Church in the work of Jewish Missions. A glowing tribute was paid to the missionaries at work in the field.

RECEPTION OF DELEGATES.

One of the most cheering incidents of the session has been the reception of deputies from foreign stations. M. Dardier of Geneva, M. Mouron of France, Dr. Leon Cachet of Holland, Mr. G. Filian of Antioch, Syria, with others from Ottawa, Victoria, and Nova Scotia, spoke most hopefully and cheerfully of the work connected with their respective societies and spheres. The great want appears to be labourers to go into these fields and help those already at work. Dr. Bonar earnestly pleaded for volunteers, and gave glowing testimony, from his own experience, of the promising nature of the toil to which he invited them.

BIGGAR, N.B.—A good work of grace has been accomplished here in connection with the labours of Mr. J. Mitchell, Evangelist, from Edinburgh.

A SOUL-WINNER AT PAISLEY.—At the Port Glasgow meeting of the Renfrewshire Christian Union a deeply interesting fact was mentioned by a Paisley brother. A humble Christian woman, he said, has been the means of the conversion of one soul in each of the houses of the tenement in which she resides. On the last occasion on which he met with her, she was rejoicing in the anticipation of being used in bringing other thirty souls to the light, as there is a new block of buildings in course of erection adjacent to her present dwelling, and it will just accommodate thirty families. The tenement is one of three stories and attics—Christian Leader.

CENTRAL AFRICA.—Mr. Arthur V. Liley, of the Livingstone Inland Mission, Banana, Congo River, Africa, writes, on April 2:—Dear Sirs,—Some kind friend has caused THE CHRISTIAN to be sent me, for which I am deeply grateful. I may add that it is a source of great interest to me, and its pages are eagerly read. After I have read them myself I generally forward them up country to my brethren. Friends in England cannot understand how we, who are in voluntary exile for Christ's sake, look forward to the arrival of mails and papers. If friends only knew how we are severed from Christian communion, I believe many would send us Christian publications. Old Graphics, scrapbooks, or any illustrated papers, would be most thankfully received. The children in our schools are very fond of pictures, and I should be glad if any of your kind readers would send any pictures, addressed to me, at Messrs. Bywater, Perry & Co.'s, Mansion House Chambers, Queen Victoria-street, E.C., who will forward them to me.

"A CHRISTIAN GAVE IT TO ME."

"A CHRISTIAN gave it me"—that fatal glass
Which proved the turning-point. The Rubicon
Once crossed, my path was clear to ruin.
I knew its power, and I was struggling sore
Against the deadly spell. Full many a time
Had taunts of boon companions made me yield,
But grace was given to turn away from them.
And now, when I had hoped—yes, hoped once more,
That health and happiness and home were mine,
A noble lady, one bright New Year's morn,
Pressed me to take a glass "just for this once,"
In honour of her hospitality.

She did not dream—how could she?—what was
By drinking that one little drop of wine. [meant
The buried craving of the days gone by Uprose anew within me, and I fell
A victim to its power; my being seemed
As set on fire of hell, and from that hour
To this, my downward course was swift and sure.

O Christian! pause and think; was it your hand—
A sister's hand, perchance, which should have helped—
That put temptation in a brother's way?
You say, "I would not;" but you cannot tell
Their soul-surroundings who may cross your path;
You do not know, oh, then consider well,
The possibilities of every case,
And let no erring one have cause to say
That by your means they have been led astray.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

SO large a company of sympathetic friends attended the twenty-sixth annual meeting of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution on Wednesday afternoon last, that the Council room of Exeter Hall was inconveniently crowded; the interest of the proceedings well justified so goodly an attendance. The Earl of SHAFTESBURY presided.

After earnest prayer had been offered by Rev. John Shaw, Mr. Edward W. Thomas, Secretary, read the annual report. He said that during the year, 884 young women and girls had participated in the benefits of the four reformatory and two preventive homes of the institution; 911 had been admitted to the Open All Night Refuge. An urgent appeal was made for funds to make the night refuge equal to the demands made upon it. Last year there were no less than 1426 applications made for participation in the benefits of the institution.

Rev. F. A. C. LILLINGSTON spoke of the debt of gratitude due to the friends who so earnestly undertook a work from which so many drew back. He confessed that he seldom returned home of an evening without an aching heart, as he witnessed the number of fallen ones in our streets, and without thankfulness that there was a society engaged in doing their utmost to rescue them. Rev. S. A. Swaine, Rev. W. R. Mowl, Rev. Burman Cassin, and Rev. R. C. Billing followed in the same vein. In response to a vote of thanks moved by Sir William Rose,

The Earl of SHAFTESBURY said: It seems to me that the work you are doing is of vital importance. From the report which has been read, and the general testimony of friends, you are doing it as well as it can be done, in the face of all the difficulties surrounding it. It is right that we should do our utmost to mitigate, even if we cannot remove, existing evils, and your plans to this end are well devised. In proceeding, his lordship said that without the assistance which the night refuge offered, there could be no doubt that absolute ruin must have fallen upon numbers of young women. In the course of his remarks, he said that the placard warning girls against the traps set for them, although it had been attributed to him, was really the work of Mr. Willing, and he was glad to know that it had been productive of some good.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for week ending June 10:—June 10, Jer. xviii. 1-12; June 11, Jer. xxiii. 1-8; June 12, Jer. xxiii. 23-32; June 13, Jer. xxiv. 1-10; June 14, Jer. xxix. 1-14; June 15, Jer. xxxi. 1-9; June 16, Jer. xxxi. 10-20.

Notes and Comments.

OUR advertising columns contain a notice of a Prayer Union for the Lord's Return. It consists of about 230 members at home and abroad, and is, our correspondent says, under God, progressing favourably.

Dr. J. H. Wilson, of Barclay Church, Edinburgh, has returned from his three months' tour in Palestine, much improved in health.

We have long been obliged to make a rule not to insert personal appeals for pecuniary help, though we are in frequent receipt of such. We have, however, before us some cases of Christian workers who are sick, to whom aid would be very acceptable.

A proposal has been made to build public rooms in Paris, similar to Exeter Hall, or the Farringdon-street Memorial Hall, which might become the centre of the many Evangelical institutions now in existence for furthering the work of Christ in France. This is worthy of wide support, and it may be hoped will be found speedily practicable.

The Times of Saturday contained a telegram from Tamatave stating that "the situation has become serious." The French have, it appears, commenced hostilities, their bombardment of some of the towns on the coast causing the greatest excitement in the island. This, and the Tonquin difficulty as well, are incidents likely most prejudicially to affect Missionaries and Mission work, and give cause for much prayerful concern on the part of Christian workers.

Another veteran minister of Christ has just passed away to join the saints in light. We refer to the Rev. Samuel Green, of Hammersmith, father of the Rev. Dr. Green, of the Religious Tract Society. He was long and honourably connected with the Baptist denomination, and prominently known in some of its institutions as an earnest advocate of the cause of Christ among men. He was for more than sixty years a minister of the Gospel. His last words were, "Adieu! God be with you."

We learn from a French contemporary that the sland of Réunion, a French colony, greatly needs the services of a true evangelist or pastor. All the more enlightened men have broken from the Church of Rome. Not that they are anti-religious, but, on the contrary, the greater part desire nothing better than to attach their families to a truer form of Christianity. In the absence of a Protestant Church, the wives and families feel themselves obliged to attend the services of a Church whose doctrines and practices are condemned by the head of the family, thus causing much social and religious discord.

Very great blessing has followed the use of the after-meetings in the Gospel Temperance work of Major and Mrs. Evered Poole. Mrs. Poole also invites any impressed during the Mission to write to her, and numbers of anxious souls take this opportunity of inquiring the way of life. We hope these methods may become generally adopted, and that the salvation of souls may be increasingly aimed at by all Gospel Temperance advocates.

In his sermon on behalf of the Religious Tract Society, Dr. Stanford chose as his text, Hab. ii. 2. He thus commented upon the power of the Press in relation to the spread of the Gospel:—

> The mode of publication which the prophet was commanded to adopt was to spread a sheet of wax upon a table or board, and there, with an iron pen or stylus, he was to write in the plainest letters that every man might read—the writing was not to be for the educated, but for the humblest people. The principle of this was printing, whether by means of the stylus, or seal, or types. The prophet had to preach to the eye, to make a statement in writing in the best way known in his times, and the same thing has to be done still. The Pulpit and the Press are not rivals, but relatives; and in some respects the Gospel is being preached more extensively by the printed page than by the human voice.

The preacher founded upon this an eloquent appeal on behalf of the Society, and its vast and valuable operations. It furnishes also a powerful plea for the prayerful and practical sympathies of the Christian community at large to be given to those whose energies are devoted to the maintenance of a Christian Press. Much more might be done to promote the circulation of monthly and weekly serials which have for their object the advocacy of Gospel truth. Their wider circulation would greatly tend to counteract the influence of error, and to strengthen the hands of those engaged in the work of Christ. Christian journalism has scarcely the hold on Christian sympathy that its importance might fairly claim.

Returns just published of the churches, chapels, and buildings registered for public worship in England and Wales give the following statistics:—

Established Church	14,573
Wesleyan Methodists	6,469
Primitive	3,825
United Methodist Free Church	1,230
Independents	2,603
Baptists	2,243
Calvinistic Methodists	895
Roman Catholics	824
Bible Christians	495
Society of Friends	375
Presbyterian Church of England	201
Other smaller bodies	2,123

There are thus 21,343 places of worship registered as belonging to Nonconformists, and 14,573 to Episcopalians, in all 35,916 definite centres of religious work, from which many thousands of other agencies radiate all over the land. The amount of machinery which this represents is indeed large. Only let the motive power be Divinely proportioned, and how soon the gigantic evils with which the Church has to contend, and before which, alas! she seems comparatively powerless, would be compelled to give way. How slow many are to learn, or, if they learn, to act accordingly, that it is "not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts."

Among the 21,343 places of worship returned as Nonconformist, there are some used by sects with which Evangelical Christians can have no sympathy, and which cannot therefore be regarded as centres of light and truth. Even some Secularist halls seem to be included. Unitarians, Swedenborgians, and others whose gospel is not that of the New Testament, are also numbered in the list. But allowing for all these, there is ample room for expressing grave concern that greater spiritual results are not forthcoming from so large a mass of effort and expenditure. We are straitened in ourselves, not in God. The results which are secured go to prove how ready the Lord is to bless and prosper all who, filled with his love, labour to promote his glory.

From a report that has reached us, the Convention of American Young Men's Christian Associations just held at Milwaukie, Wis., appears to have been in every respect a successful and encouraging one. The reporter says:—

> The growth in the quality of Association work has been more remarkable than in its quantity. It is more spiritual, and much prominence is given to Bible study and personal work. More attention is being given to good reading-rooms and libraries, to social work, to classes, lectures and literary work, and to work for boys, and the associations now provide first-class gymnasiums in the leading cities.

The English representatives of Association work, Mr. Hind Smith, Travelling Secretary, Mr. W. H. Newett, of Manchester, and Mr. P. Bankart, late of Exeter Hall, were cordially welcomed.

A correspondent writing from New York, U.S., says:—

> Will you particularly direct the attention of young men who may be coming to the United States to the Young Men's Christian Association, Twenty-third-street and Fourth Avenue, New York? I am much impressed with the many advantages they might get from it; not the least of them is the "Boarding House Register," by which they might know suitable places to stay at in New York, on arrival.

Dr. Andrew Bonar in his memoir of Robert Murray McCheyne says of him that when he became secretary of the Forfar Association Branch of the Church Extension Scheme he devoted to this work untiring energy. Not that he imagined if churches were built and ministers endowed this would of itself be sufficient to reclaim the multitudes of perishing men. But he expected the Lord to send faithful men into his vineyard, and to make the churches like cisterns ready to catch the showers as they should fall upon them. McCheyne thus summed up his views upon the matter:—

> Give me a man of God the truth to preach,
> A house of prayer within convenient reach,
> Seat-rents the poorest of the poor can pay,
> A spot so small one pastor can survey:
> Give these—and give the Spirit's genial shower,
> Scotland shall be a garden all in flower.

According to the New York Independent, that city stands in need of temperance reform, to an extent terrible to contemplate. Speaking of the inadequacies of existing laws to secure the comfort and well-being of the community, the Editor asks—

> Why have we not better ones? Because the Rum Power fills the seats of the New York and Brooklyn representatives in the Legislature. Why are the present laws not executed? Because the Rum Power elects the aldermen who confirm the Excise and Police Commissioners. Who rules the city? The Rum Power. With all its churches, its intelligence, its social refinement, its busy and beneficent wealth, New York is governed by the Rum Power, and by the Rum Power it is bound hand and foot. The rum business is the one branch of trade which is not only not beneficent, but is fairly entitled to rank with the slave trade as the sum and source of all villanies. And yet the rum business is regulated, or is presumed to be regulated, by law; and law-abiding citizens must not interfere with the legal rights of those licensed to carry it on. The slaver once had his legal rights as a slaver. Gradually these rights were restricted, and then withdrawn altogether, and now he is a criminal, hunted everywhere and by all nations on the high seas. We hope and believe the time will come when rum dealers will be so hunted; but meantime we must restrict, all we can, their ruinous business. It is both disgraceful and disastrous to our city to be under such control.

A letter appeared in the columns of The Record the other day asking what was meant by "Gospel Temperance," and criticising the term as though it trenched upon the honour of the Gospel as the appointed means of human salvation. The term would seem to be expressive enough, as denoting that its advocates believe in nothing as truly saving apart from faith in Christ. Temperance in itself is an invaluable benefit to those who come under its influence, promoting as it does health and prosperity in every temporal sphere; but when faith in Christ is linked with it, it becomes indeed the summum bonum of life, uniting spiritual and temporal benefits in one. This, we understand, our friends of the Gospel Temperance Mission aim to lead men to see.

It is proposed by some who feel strongly moved by a sense of the evils resulting from a system of secular education in our Government schools, to form a Prayer Union all over the United Kingdom, for united prayer one day in every month for the young of the country:—

(1) That God will supply to them from other sources that which is lacking in their education as regulated by Government.
(2) That God will raise up men and women of power to deal with this subject, and undo the present evil system, and once more make Christian teaching the groundwork of national education.
(3) That God will put it into the hearts of the wealthy to endow elementary schools all over the country, where the young may be systematically trained in Christian principles, independently of Government help and regulation.

Opportunities for propagating the Gospel in France seem widening on every side. In a letter to one of the French papers, Rosseau Saint-Hilaire, Protestant Professor of the Institute of France, asserts that the people never more earnestly drank in Gospel truth, and that while the better classes scorn it, the masses are being permeated by plain, simple Gospel exposition.

The Mayor of Brest, also a Protestant, lately said to M. Reveillaud, who had been preaching at a Gospel service he had attended: "You have done what I had hitherto thought to be impossible in Brest. To have said such things, and to have elicited such applause, in one of the lowest quarters of the town, surprises me while it delights my soul." Testimonies of a similar kind come from other districts, and indicate how powerful a witness the Gospel is beginning to bear in that land of Papal darkness and sceptical indifference. These have long been the two rocks on which the spiritual interests of France have been wrecked.

Lord Shaftesbury is reported to have said, at the annual meeting of the East London Church Fund, last week, that "he had had great experience with East-end people, and he could say that for zeal, heart-sentiment, and gratitude, they were worth all the West-end people put together." Such a testimony shows how powerful an agent the Gospel is for breaking down the class prejudices which are so strong in many minds, and which form in European countries, as truly as caste does in Oriental lands, a great barrier to the progress of Christian truth. The noble Earl exalts himself by the generosity of such sentiments as these, and wins for himself a place in the hearts of his fellow-countrymen, of genuine respect as well as of love, which no mere titles, or possession of wealth could command.

It is a saying of Luther's, "The fewer words the better prayer." It would be a great gain if all who take part in prayer meetings believed this, and acted upon it in their public devotions. Many a meeting is spoiled, rendered heavy and monotonous, through the long prayers of those who engage as the mouthpiece of others. Why cannot prayer leaders aim at directness and brevity in their supplications? Some people, very sincere in their desires no doubt, are sadly tedious, because they persist in going over the same ground, and pleading the same things, time after time. Prayers, like arrows, should be aimed to hit the mark, and the more they are Spirit-taught, the more direct will be their aim.

Rev. F. Wagstaff, in a paper on "Inaccurate Quotations of Scripture," says:—

The spread of education and the more universal discussion of questions that were formerly either unknown or else confined to a few, renders it more than ever important that our scholars should carry out into the world with them at least some accurate knowledge of what the Bible actually contains. Scepticism of the more dangerous and offensive kind largely depends upon distorted and perverted quotations of Scripture, and misrepresentations of what Jesus Christ or his Apostles really said. Young men, who have no sufficiently accurate knowledge of the New Testament to detect a false quotation when they hear it, are at a great disadvantage; and if only on this one ground alone, it is surely worth considering whether sufficient attention is given to verbal accuracy in the portions of Scripture which we require our scholars to commit to memory.

This is a point to which Sunday-school and other teachers of the young would do well to give heed. Looseness of understanding, and errors of judgment are sure to follow looseness of memory, and carelessness of spirit, in the reading and study of the Word of God. The importance, moreover, of a single word of Scripture is sometimes very great. As, for instance, when our Lord employs a quotation from Psalm cx. to confute the Pharisees who sought to entangle Him in their net. See Matthew xxii. 43, 44. And in many other cases similar weight is attached to the very words of inspiration. Too much care and reverent regard to the iotas of truth cannot be given in the study of Sacred Writ.

It was decided at one of the sittings of the Established Church of Scotland the other day that the 10th of November, the 400th anniversary of Luther's birth, should be recognised by that Church as a day of special thanksgiving for the blessings of the Reformation. It will be a fitting opportunity for general Protestant testimony and praise to God. In these days a quickened sense of the value and importance of Reformation principles is to be desired in many quarters, and the occasion may fitly serve to furnish the fresh impetus required.

It is said that of the hundred thousand children of scholastic age in St. Petersburgh only 14,500 attend any school. Russia may well be behind the age in civilisation and social reform when the education of her youth is a matter of such small concern and of such gross neglect.

The coronation of the Czar has passed off without any of the mishaps which many feared might be caused by conspirators and anarchist plots. Amid ceremonies of the most august and solemn kind, as well as with gorgeous pomp and splendour, the Emperor of All the Russias has been confirmed in the throne, and invested with all the dignities and power of his ancestors. Popular acclamation seemed universal and hearty throughout the gala week in Moscow, and it may be hoped the dark portents of the first year of his reign are giving place to brighter prospects. Never had monarch a finer opportunity to achieve for himself a name and to win the grateful love of his people.

Reforms are needed in all parts of his dominion, and not a few are prepared to support the Czar in any course of wise and beneficent action he might adopt on behalf of his subjects. It behoves Christians to pray that wise counsellors may be raised up to guide the future policy of this great potentate, in whose hands are placed the destinies of some 90,000,000 of the human race. If he were but to be actuated by a spirit of bold and courageous determination to prove the benefactor of his people, Russia might soon rank high among the nations for qualities such as strengthen home interests and attract confidence and respect abroad. Just now, too, the cause of Evangelical truth is much at stake in the land, and we need to pray that the doors may be opened for wider and freer Gospel effort.

The power of the Czar in ecclesiastical spheres is large indeed, judging from the following facts which we cull from a contemporary:—

The Czar stands at the head of the church administration of all creeds and beliefs. He appoints the members of the Holy Synod of the Orthodox faith; the Synod, in the Czar's name, appoints the bishops, and the bishops appoint the priests and deacons throughout the empire, without any regard to the wishes of the parishioners. The Armenian-Gregorian Synod elects a candidate for the office of Patriarch or Supreme Catholicos, and the Czar either approves the election or orders a new one. The Roman Catholics in Russia are under control of the Archbishop of Mohilev, who is appointed by the Czar, with the consent of the Pope. The bishops are appointed in the same way. The newly-appointed archbishop and bishops take the oath of allegiance, first to the Czar and then to the Pope. The Catholic priests are appointed by the bishops, with the Government's approval. The Evangelical Lutheran and the Protestant Clerical authorities are appointed by the Czar; the former are guided by the rules laid down in Agenda. The chief rabbi of Hebrews is also appointed by the Czar. Mohammedans are under control of a Mufti. The Mohammedans elect two candidates for that office, and the Czar appoints one of them. In the same way is appointed the head of Buddhists, the Kalmucks, and Buriats.

MISSION AT ST. PETER'S, HULL.

THE Lord has permitted his servants, Rev. W and Mrs. Haslam, to hold a Mission here from May 19 to May 29. He has wonderfully blessed their efforts. The services, especially the evening ones, were largely attended, and the utmost attention was manifest throughout. Night after night, souls have been brought to see Christ as their Saviour. Believers also have seen the necessity, nay, rather, the glorious privilege, of having Christ as their keeper, so that many can now say, "The Lord is my Shepherd!" It was very cheering to observe how many young men gave their hearts to the Lord, and after their conversion how anxious they were that their companions should "taste and see how gracious the Lord is."

Mrs. Haslam's meetings for women were held every afternoon in the Mission room, and God's blessing has indeed been upon them. Mrs. Haslam has such a simple, touching manner in speaking to the women, that the words seem to go straight to their hearts.

EDUCATION OF WOMEN IN INDIA.

By A MISSIONARY'S WIDOW.

A STATEMENT made the other day at the meeting of the London Missionary Society most strikingly shows the rapid advancement of female education in India. It was stated that, in India, two young Bengali ladies are devoting their time to advocating, on public platforms, the education and teaching of women.

This would not have been possible a few years ago, and is a strong contrast to the general opinion held on Hindoo female education forty years ago. It was proposed by a missionary's wife, forty-six years ago, to commence an orphan—or boarding-school for girls, at one of the large towns in the Madras Presidency. She was told it was a wild scheme, and would never answer; the girls were too stupid to learn, and those who had relations would never be allowed to be taught. But it was deemed right to try what could be done. At first there were great difficulties; the prejudices against female education were so strong, and the question was often asked, "If they could learn, what would you do with an educated Hindoo girl?" and many other queries. But God had purposed that this school should be a nursery for the Church, and in a few years there were sixty-six girls in it, some of whom are now earnest workers for Christ. Since then, school after school has been established, and it would not be easy to say how many thousands of Hindoo girls are this day receiving a good education in various parts of India.

To show what was the opinion that prevailed among the higher class of natives at the time referred to, it may be stated that three native gentlemen had on one occasion made a visit to the missionary; as a matter of courtesy one was asked concerning his family. He replied he had one little girl, five years old. The missionary's wife said, "That is just a nice age for her to begin to learn to read."

"Oh, madam, you mistake me; it is a female child. You know we never teach them; women do not learn to read."

"But I learnt to read."

"Yes; you are an English lady. Hindoo women cannot learn."

"May I ask you, sir, is it your opinion that they could not learn, or that it is not your custom?"

"Truly, I believe they could not learn."

At that time there were a few girls in the school who had learned to read very well. They were sent for, and read and sang some hymns, and answered some questions put to them.

The three gentlemen expressed their great astonishment, and said, "What can we say?"

The missionary's wife answered: "Why, that it is possible for a Hindoo girl to learn to read. May I have the pleasure of teaching your little girl?" But various objections were raised, and the offer politely declined.

Such would not be the case now. Hindoo fathers and brothers are anxious that their girls should be well taught. Even in the villages many of the women who meet our Bible-women ask earnestly, "Can you teach us to read the wonderful words you tell us?" and they do teach them. In this way and in many others, the knowledge of Christ is spreading over India. Now, in many of the villages they beg for a school for their girls. And who is to say the mighty change that will come over India, as the mothers and daughters of the land learn that idolatry is folly! Many a little one now goes home from school and says, "Mother, what is the use of the idol? Worship Jesus; He loves children."

The change which is coming over the high caste families, where Christian ladies are allowed to visit the Zenana, is most marked, and must increase and exert an influence on the present, and still more on the coming generation. Never was it more important that the teaching should be that of the "old, old story of Jesus and his love." This is what we would have the mothers of India teach their children and their children's children, and if so, idolatry must fall.

As female education extends and Christianity prevails, early marriages and early widowhood, two great sources of woman's sorrow, will decrease. The crescent of Mahomet will give way to the Cross of Christ, and India, beautiful, grand India, will lay her crown at the Redeemer's feet, and "crown Him, Lord of all." What Christian would not feel it the highest honour and the greatest privilege to do anything, however small, to advance the cause of education and Christianity among the women of India! M. P.

For the Young.

ONE OF JESUS' LAMBS.

A LADY writes to a friend:—"I have been wanting for some time to tell you about my little niece, the first fruits of your Children's Meeting here. Do you remember, she seemed to have such a clear sight of the power of the Blood. Though I believe every effort was made to remove the remembrance of that day from her mind, and she was considered "too young to be taught religion," it was too great and blessed a reality to her ever to be lost; and she constantly referred to the "day when she came to Jesus," in conversations since with me. The Lord gathered her home to Himself three weeks ago. One week ill, unconscious from first to last; but she gave such bright testimony before she was taken ill. She was so happy in the Lord, and we had such a delightful time together the last day she spent with us. She asked for prayer, which we had. She said, 'Though she knew she was a lamb of Jesus, yet she had so often been a very naughty lamb, and she wanted to tell Him all about it.' She had one regret, that she had done so little for Jesus.

"Her last act the day she was taken ill was to finish dressing a doll, which was to be sent in my box to the 'Bird's Nest.' She had done it 'for Jesus.' It was so beautiful; the way she always did what little service she could, 'unto Him.' A lily, which she had tended with great care, burst into bloom the day she was buried.

"I do feel so thankful that you took the meeting that day; and now another ransomed soul is 'watching and waiting for you' at the golden gates."

MR. W. D. DUNN has been preaching at Govan, Glasgow, to crowded meetings, many souls receiving the Lord Jesus. His next field of labour is Edinburgh. Prayer is desired.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—A delightful manifestation of Christian union in work for the Lord took place in Tunbridge Wells on the last week in May. The Sunday-school teachers belonging to two bodies of the Methodists, two chapels of the Congregationalits, and the Baptists, met for prayer on the Saturday evening. The scholars were all gathered together for a service on the Sunday afternoon, and in the evening at 8.15 the officers and teachers of the various schools united in the celebration of the Lord's Supper. On the following evening, the 28th ult., the engagements were brought to a close by a large public meeting, Rev. Wm. Guest, the President of the Union, in the chair. Many confessed that the manifestation of Christian fellowship had never before been so marked in the town.

Messrs. MOODY & SANKEY in NEW YORK.

ON Sunday evening, May 20, says The New York Herald, more than three thousand people were in Cooper Institute Hall; about the same number sought admission, but were prevented by the police from entering. The occasion was the fifth anniversary of the Cooper Institute Evangelistic work, conducted by Mr. C. W. Sawyer. Mr. D. L. Moody spoke on the subject, "How to bring the unevangelised masses of our large cities under the power and influence of the Gospel," and Mr. I. D. Sankey led the singing. It was their first joint appearance in public since their return from Europe. Among others present were Messrs. William E. Dodge, jun., Morris K. Jesup, Cyrus W. Field, F. P. Freeman, J. H. Sweetzer, Russell Sage, J. J. Jones, John M. Sterns, L. H. Biglow, W. H. Barbour, John Wanamaker, of Philadelphia; John B. Burns, of Glasgow; Mr. Hodder, of London; James Talcott, and the Rev. H. M. Field.

Mr. Moody took as his text, "Say not by and by but now," from the fourth chapter of St. John. He said there was need for more common sense in the way that Gospel revivals are conducted. What is wanted is sympathy with the masses. The spirit of the good Samaritan should be felt in the work. It was not enough to have one hall like Cooper Institute. There should be several of the same kind. Every one should take part. There was work for the lowly and ignorant as well as for the rich and educated. It was not necessary to be a college graduate to succeed in carrying the Gospel to the hearts of the multitude. The Lord did not select either wealthy or educated men to preach his Word.

Mr. Moody was followed by Mr. J. B. Burns, of Glasgow, Mr. Hodder, of London, and Mr. C. W. Sawyer. Mr. Sankey sang a number of hymns. The only new hymn was, "When the mists have rolled away." A collection was taken up. It was very large. Two gentlemen in the audience offered $5000 each. The services lasted from seven o'clock until after nine, the immense audience remaining unlessened to the close. Messrs. Moody and Sankey then crossed to the annex hall, Nos. 14 and 16 Fourth-avenue, which was quickly crowded. The services here were short, Mr. Moody saying a few words only, and Mr. Sankey singing, "Take Me as I Am" and "Waiting and Watching." Another collection was taken up. Messrs. Moody and Sankey referred only incidentally to the work carried on by them in Europe. Their appearance last night will be the last in this city for some time. Mr. Moody will start for his home in Massachusetts and Mr. Sankey will go to Pennsylvania. Mr. Sankey was accompanied in the singing by Messrs. L. P. Thatcher and Theodore Perkins.

THE BIBLE FLOWER MISSION.—The last report of the branch of the Flower Mission carried on from the Home of Industry contains many grateful testimonies to the success and blessedness of the work. There is room for much additional help in the gifts of flowers, and we hope many will respond to this need, now that the earth is producing such an abundance of these lovely messengers of God's goodness and love. Hampers, &c., should be sent to Miss Macpherson, Bible Flower Mission, 60, Commercial-street, London, E. Most of the railway companies send hampers addressed to the Mission at a reduced rate of carriage.

WORKERS WANTED.—Mr. Fegan, of the Boys' Home, 95, Southwark-street, S.E., writes:—"I am commencing some special Evangelistic Services next Sunday, June 3, in the Swiss Protestant Church, Endell-street, Long-acre, to be continued every Lord's Day evening till further notice. The services will commence at 7, but there will be some singing by the boys of our Home for half an hour previously. I would greatly value the help of any Christian workers, either in distributing notices, inviting in passers-by, or dealing with any anxious souls in the after-meeting. We meet in the vestry at 6 o'clock for prayer, &c., and I hope to see there some volunteers in response to this request. Young men especially heartily welcome."

By Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE.

DEFEAT AND VICTORY.

"Iniquities prevail against me: as for our transgressions, Thou shalt purge them away."—PSALM lxv. 3.

HERE is defeat—"Iniquities prevail against me." Here is victory—"As for our transgressions, Thou shalt purge them away."

The Psalmist looks within, and there all is helpless. He looks around, and all is full of hindrance. Looking thus, he sees only sin and self, self and sin. A gang of thieves, fierce, threatening, greedy; and in their midst this poor, trembling I, stript, wounded, and half dead, vainly struggling to be free. He looks up, and then even self is forgotten. He sees Jesus only. Ah! what blessed company is He. Robber hordes are led away captive, goods are restored, wounds are healed, fear itself is slain, peril is forgotten, all is triumphant and rapturous. "As for our transgressions, Thou shalt purge them away."

There is much earnest religion that lives in the dreary compass of these first few words, and never gets a glimpse beyond it. Who is not familiar with the sigh, the sad face, the look of weary failure: "I don't know how it is, but I can't get on at all. It really seems no use for me to try. I do want to be religious, I'm sure, and I do try, too. But it seems as if the more I try the worse I am. I have got stirred up on a Sunday, and on Monday I have gone out and meant to be everything I should be, and really tried hard, and before I knew it, sin has got the upper hand again, and I have been back just where I was. I suppose I can't be like other people."

Well, you are like David at least; and a good deal like everybody else too. You are right; it is no good trying, and if we cannot find something better than trying, we must despair. This is the truth that every man has proved many times: "I am no match for my sins. Iniquities prevail against me."

But do not put a full stop there—because it is no good our trying. What then? Give up? No. Fetch in One who can help us. "As for our transgressions, THOU shalt purge them away." The moment we bring the Lord in, that moment defeat is turned to triumphant deliverance. Write that up in golden letters—THOU. And do not find in this word only a trembling hope, or a wondering wish. Listen to its full assurance—THOU SHALT. There is but one result that can warrant the agony of Calvary; there is but one result that can satisfy either our blessed Saviour or ourselves; and that is our being conquerors over sin.

And not only amongst those who are seeking the Lord is this a frequent experience, but, strangest and saddest of all, it is sometimes the experience of those who have found Him. There are not a few who trust the Saviour for forgiveness, but who slip back again into the old life of self-help for getting on any further, and so, of course, there comes the old failure. We hear again the weary moan and dirge, "I can't get on; I am so weak, and so tempted, and there are so many difficulties and hindrances." It is the dark experience of these few words, "Iniquities prevail against me." Nothing but self and sin, sin and self; a round of trying, and struggling, and failing. And no wonder, for it has shut out the Lord. There is no more strength in a converted man to overcome sin than there is in an unconverted man. It is true of him as of others, "Without Me ye can do nothing." New affections, new desires, new views, are ours with our new life, but it is only in Christ that we can do anything.

Look again at this swift transition from defeat to victory. He makes no break; he does not wait until he feels better. He looks right up, and instantly help and victory are his. The very moment the Lord comes in there is glorious deliverance. Look up to Him now with assurance. Thank God, we can never find a better cry with which to knock at Heaven's door than a cry for help. And we are never better able to put up that cry than when we feel beaten and helpless. Venture now to put that trembling hand in the hand of the Great Captain of our Salvation. Look up to Him quietly, resolutely, "Blessed Lord, I am thy poor, foolish child, so weak, so venturesome, so full of sin, and so beset with hindrance, I can't get on." He bends over us, He stretches out the right hand of his power. "Fear not," saith He, "all power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth. Lo, I am with you alway." Hand in hand with Him the feeblest can look upon the hindrances assured of victory. "As for our transgressions, Thou shalt purge them away."

Some time since I was crossing the river Tamar in a ferry-boat. Just as we were going to push off from the pier a shout told us that there was yet another passenger. There came a man, ragged and lame, shuffling with bare feet on the slippery stones to the boat. He hobbled on board, and then we were off.

I was near enough to the poor fellow to have a word with him.

"How far are you going?" I asked.

"London, sir, if I can only get there."

"And how are you going?"

"Tramp it," said he, gloomily.

"Ah, you wouldn't mind going all the way like this, would you?" He shook his head sadly, and tried to smile, but it was a failure.

Presently the boat reached the other side, and the passengers were dispersed—one in a carriage, and one in a cart, and the rest to the train, that reached London in half a day. But I stood and watched my poor friend limping over the stones, as long as he was in sight, and then turned and went on my way, seeing in him the picture of very many pilgrims to the Celestial City. It is miserably sad that any should go thus, limping and footsore. But hundreds, thousands, think there is no other way. They trust the Lord to take them across the river of condemnation, and then they step out on the other side and set forth on a dreary tramp in wind and rain, uphill, and over stony roads.

This is not the great salvation which our gracious Lord has provided for us. The trust that takes us across the river would take us right up to the gates of the Celestial City—ah, and farther than that—right up to the very Throne of God.

Hear now the story of Mr. Fearing and one Captain Faith. Once upon a time, and not long since, it chanced that in the King's castle there dwelt one Fearing. His dwelling-place was dark and comfortless—where but a ray of light fell through a grating. The place was cold and damp; and the scanty furniture looked more fitted for a prison than the home of a royal guest. It would indeed have been sad, but for one thing which seemed to all else exceeding strange—and that is, that Fearing need not have dwelt here. The whole palace was open to him, and he was as welcome in the King's banquetting chamber as in the dungeon. And yet there he lived, catching occasional glimpses of the King, and hearing the music from afar: "I trust I am one of the King's guests," said Mr. Fearing; "I think I heard the music."

So poor Fearing spent many months.

Now it chanced one day there hurried past this part of the palace, which was called Condemnation-row, one Captain Faith, who aforetime did know Mr. Fearing well and formerly lived nigh unto him. But as he fell upon his old friend now he scarce could recognise him, for the place was but ill-lighted, so that Captain Faith was like to have passed him by.

"Oh, Captain Faith, Sir! is that you?" said Fearing, in a melancholy voice.

"Why, Brother Fearing!" cried Faith, astonished, "what ails thee? What art thou doing here? And why is thy face so filled with sadness, and thy condition altogether so sorry? Art thou not one of the King's guests? What art thou doing here?"

Then did poor Mr. Fearing answer, groaning, "I cannot tell how it is, but it seems as if I was never meant to live anywhere else. You see I am so weak, and I have so many temptations and trials."

"Well," said Faith, "what else hast thou?"

"You see I am not like you, Captain Faith. I am so timid;" and poor Fearing leaned upon his stick and coughed.

"Well?" said Faith, wondering, and looking about him.

"I don't think it is any good for me to think of getting any higher up, though I do very often wish I could."

"What hast thou written over thy door, Brother Fearing, in those black letters?" said Captain Faith.

"The words of the Psalmist, Sir, 'Iniquities prevail against me.' It doth comfort me to think he, too, dwelt in Condemnation-row." And Brother Fearing sighed again.

"Ah! and then a full stop?" asked Faith, almost fiercely.

"I suppose so, Sir," said Fearing, rather frightened. "Why not?"

"Because there is none there," Faith answered, "and never was meant to be." Then Captain Faith sighed and spoke more tenderly, "Iniquities and me, me and iniquities! Nothing else. Thou wilt never be better so long as thou dost live here. This place is damp and cold."

"It is that," said Fearing, and he coughed again.

"Agues and cramps, and all kinds of diseases will prey upon thee here. Come up to where I live."

"Is it far up, for I can't climb?" asked Fearing.

"Only the next story," said Faith. And then did he straightway take Brother Fearing by the arm, and gently lead him up the King's staircase, out of the gloom into the sunshine, until he brought him to a chamber which looked forth into the King's garden; and at the open casement there came in the sweet scent of flowers, and the singing of birds, and the splash of fountains.

"What a lovely place," said Fearing, looking in, but afraid to set his foot upon the floor.

"Fear not," cried the Captain, cheerily, "it will bear thee, brother."

Brother Fearing let his eyes go feasting upon the place for awhile in silence. Then he turned to his friend, and said in an undertone of very awe:

"It must cost a great deal to live up here with so many luxuries."

"Cost! Not a farthing, brother. I am one of the King's guests, and dine daily in the banquetting chamber."

"So am I," said Fearing, timidly; "or at least I—I—" and he coughed again.

"Look here," said Faith, as he took Fearing to the window, and bade him look out into the King's garden, and he marvelled to see such great manner and variety of delights.

"It is a lovely place," said poor Fearing, overwhelmed.

"Sit down," cried Faith, "and I will tell thee the story of how I came by it.

"This place, wherein I dwelt aforetime, was as dull and cheerless as thy Condemnation-row, and upon my door was graven a cross, and underneath it the words, 'Iniquities prevail against me,' even as thou hast. Well, it chanced one day the King stood at my door, and he read that which was written, and methought his face grew sad as He read it.

"'Wouldest Thou, my Lord, that I should write something else?'

"'Wilt Thou follow Me?' He said tenderly. And instead of going before, He Himself took me by the hand and brought me hither. He led me within the door, and pointed over it to that which was written thereon. Canst thou read it, brother?"

Then Fearing looked, and there over the door was written in gold the one word, THOU, and on either side of it the rest of a sentence: "As for our transgressions, THOU shalt purge them away."

"Well," Captain Faith went on, "the King bade me tarry there, saying it was fitter for a king's guest than was Condemnation-row. And here have I dwelt ever since, and by the King's grace here do I mean to stay."

"I should think so," said Fearing, growing bolder as he listened.

"That is the secret of it all," and Faith, as he spoke, pointed to the word in letters of gold—THOU. In the gloomy place below it was all I—I—I—I—My weakness and my temptation; my troubles and my trials. And up here it is all THOU. The King, the glorious Lord who always maketh us to triumph. Ah, it doth make such a difference!

Now, as they two talked together, the King himself came in, and Mr. Fearing got him up in haste, and having bowed unto his Majesty, made as if he would hurry forth from his presence. But the King took him by the hand graciously, and spoke tenderly to him. "Thou art most welcome, do not leave us; I have often wished that thou wouldst make a better use of Me, my son. What wouldst thou that I should do for thee?"

Then Fearing found new courage in the King's grace, and falling upon his knee, he said, "My Lord, I would that thou wouldst write that on my door," and he pointed to the golden Thou, and the words on either side of it.

"I have long wished that thou wouldst suffer Me to do it," said the King.

And forthwith Fearing left his cell, and found himself in a place of beauty in sight of the King's garden, and sitting henceforth daily at the King's table. And he did afterwards become one of the King's own knights, and was known henceforth as Sir Valiant.

But he never forgat how much he owed to the noble Captain Faith. "Dost thou remember thy words, brother?" he would say; "it used to be all I, I, I,—my sins and me. But now it is THOU;" and he would point to the letters of gold. "Ah! what a wonderful difference it makes."

ISLINGTON.—Missions have recently been held in connection with the district of St. John the Evangelist, Copenhagen-street, Islington, by Mr. Somerset Gardner, of the Church of England Parochial Mission, and by Mr. Israel Sida, of Littlehampton. The Lord has owned his word to the saving of souls. The friends of the work ask for prayer on its behalf.

GEORGE TINWORTH.

[In a recent issue we advised our readers to go and see the Tinworth Exhibition, 9, Conduit-street, Regent-street, W. The following extracts from Memorial Sketches by Mr. Edmund W. Gosse, of "the painter in terra-cotta," will explain the nature of the Exhibition, and still more interest our readers by showing how far the genius of the sculptor is traceable to his godly mother.]

THE story of Mr. Tinworth's life should be singularly encouraging and stimulating. He is a man who has been lifted by the force of his own genius out of the poorest class, and who has become a distinguished artist without ceasing to be an artisan. He presents, perhaps, the most remarkable example in our age of a man of imagination who has found the means to express his genius while remaining quietly and unaffectedly in the sphere where he was born. It should be said at once that the very original and remarkable sculptor whose work is the subject of this memoir, is still a workman in the received sense of the word. When he is not modelling his friezes, he is busy making and ornamenting pots in the Lambeth Pottery, and it has never occurred to him, in the last phrase of artistic patter, to "put on a good coat and go into society."

GEORGE TINWORTH is in his fortieth year. He was born near Camberwell Gate, Walworth, Nov. 5, 1843. He was the child of parents from whom, at first sight, nothing in the way of artistic proclivity could be expected. His father was a master wheelwright in a very small way of business. Mrs. Tinworth was a woman of a type peculiarly English; she was what is called a narrow Dissenter, a member of one of the smaller Nonconformist sects among which the study of the Bible is not considered a duty so much as a luxury, and the exposition of it is not left exclusively to any minister, but cultivated at home even by those of very slender education. Tinworth grew up, therefore, in a Biblical atmosphere; the Scriptures were read to him and by him, from cover to cover, over and over, until they sank into his blood, and became part of his very nature. For the religious lines upon which his talent has developed, his mother must be considered wholly responsible. She trained him to look upon all other literature as dross, and to this day the Bible remains the only book which he reads without indifference. His early experiences of life were harsh, but salutary. Poverty pinched the household closely, and all through, like a jarring string in an instrument, there went the fear and horror of the head of the house. Through it all, too, went the harmonious faith of the mother, her Puritan ideal of the personal "walk with God," and the constant voluntary exercises of prayer and "expounding of the Word."

Meanwhile, this child in a dingy little Walworth shop was inspired, as spontaneously as though he had been the primitive first artist, with a craving for plastic expression of his ideas. His first attempts were made when he was a very little boy, and consisted of objects drawn in imitation of nature upon transparent slates. A little later his mother bought some paints for him, and he began to colour engravings. At last he took to cutting butter-stamps out of wood, and even to carving timid little wooden figures. All this time he was completely ignorant of even the simple processes which are taught to children, and was so far from receiving any encouragement that his father used to break up his figures and beat him for "wasting his time."

In 1866, at the age of twenty-three, Mr. Tinworth became for the first time an exhibitor at the Royal Academy. He sent a work which had no sort of connection with his academic studies, but was the first expression of his peculiar realism. It was a group of four or five small figures in plaster, and he named it "Peace and Wrath in Low Life." The scene was taken from his own doors; it was a page from the gutter-life at Hope-street, Walworth. Two little boys were fighting, two little girls were trying to separate them or egging them on, as the case might be. A dog in the foreground was barking with lively interest in the whole affair.

Mr. Tinworth found by degrees the work which he was really fitted to produce. His early terra-cotta panels are rather sketches than performances. It was about 1874 that his sculpture began to be mature. In that year he exhibited three large terra-cotta panels at the Royal Academy, the "Gethsemane," the "Foot of the Cross," and the "Descent from the Cross." They were bought by Professor Archer for the Museum of Science and Art in Edinburgh, where they are objects of never-failing interest to the numerous country visitors of the Museum. To the Royal Academy of 1875 Mr. Tinworth sent eight small panels in terra-cotta; these were grouped together, in three frames, in the vestibule at Burlington House. It was on this occasion that Mr. Ruskin drew public attention to the artist for the first time, and spoke of him with vehement generosity in his Notes on the Royal Academy of 1875. In 1876, Tinworth appeared again in the vestibule of the Academy with four panels, and this time he attracted the attention of the late eminent architect, Mr. G. E. Street, R.A. Both Mr. Ruskin and Mr. Street came down to Lambeth to see what he was doing and to encourage him with their advice. Mr. Street went further than this: he expressed an eager wish to combine his own architectural labours with the sculpturesque inventions of Mr. Tinworth. When he was engaged upon York Minster, an opportunity for doing so presented itself. The late Dean of York, the Hon. Augustus Duncombe, desired to present a reredos to the Cathedral, and it immediately occurred to Mr. Street that Mr. Tinworth would be the man to execute it. But he wanted it carved in wood, and this the sculptor neither could nor would consent to do. Mr. Street then proposed that it should be made in terra-cotta and copied in wood, but the artist very naturally refused this also. The project then lay over for eight or nine months, but Mr. Street had not abandoned it. He applied to Messrs. Doulton to make experiments in the colour of terra-cotta, and at last, when they had fabricated a tint which exactly suited him, he gave Mr. Tinworth the commission.

His successes may be said to be exclusively scriptural. With the Bible before him he has never gone far wrong; outside the range of its pages he has never succeeded in making a really successful group or figure; and it is as a Biblical artist solely that we have to consider him. He is, so far as I am able to remember, the only artist who has continued to express in his art the actual religious sentiment of the lower middle class in England. Mr. Tinworth is an interesting figure, if only to prove to us, by way of exception, that fine art is not entirely unattainable from the lower middle class point of view. His vision is neither classical, nor Italian, nor conventional; it is purely that of the average English evangelical. By degrees, the artist in him has grown more fervent, the preacher less obtrusive; but still his compositions have the same sort of merit, as discourses, which we find in the best of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons. He avoids, with great determination, most occasions on which he might be permitted to introduce the nude figure, and in those rare instances where he has employed it, the forms seem studiously spare and unattractive. To his devout and simple mind a sort of asceticism is suitable in contemplating the finite body of fallen man; and while he avoids, on one side, the love of Roman art for what is hideous in the human frame transfigured by suffering, he has no sympathy whatever with the pagan feeling for physical loveliness, for the rosy plumpness of imperturbable youth.

In all this, and still more in his humour, Mr. Tinworth resembles the best Puritan writers of the seventeenth century. We should never have expected to find in English sculpture a return to the spirit which animated Bunyan and Quarles, but we cannot fail to recognise that spirit in these Biblical terra-cottas. The artist treats his stories and his texts as Isaac Barrow consented that a lively preacher might without fault use them in his sermons, that is, "with a pretty, surprising uncouthness, in conceit or expression, to affect and amuse the fancy, stirring in it some wonder, and breeding some delight thereto." This dry wit is best seen, perhaps, in the text which Mr. Tinworth strews about the spare parts of his compositions, but often in the design itself. Sometimes it consists in combination of the two, as in the panel of "Daniel in the Lion's Den," where we see one of the younger brutes hastily standing up on his hind legs to read a citation of Psalm xci., which is graven on the wall. We turn to the Psalm, and we understand the emotion of the animal, for we read, "Thou shalt tread upon the lion . . . the young lion . . . shalt thou trample under feet," A typical instance of the more purely plastic expression of humour is to be found in "The Tribute Money," where, while Simon Peter pays the tax-gatherers, three impish children examine the fish which held the coin, and wrangle for this worthless prize. Underneath this group Mr. Tinworth has scratched "The World." An example of realistic high spirits is seen in the panel of the "Miraculous Draught of Fishes," in the distorted faces of the boy and man who are shouting lustily for help.

This mixture of Puritan asceticism with Puritan humour makes Mr. Tinworth singularly well-fitted to illustrate the Bible in the temper which we have already indicated. He is not trammelled in the least by what is conventionally called "a reverential spirit:" his vision is not marred or disturbed by too much antiquarianism: he sees things clearly by the light of London life, and he is not distressed in the least by his limitations. His soldiers, whether Canaanite or Israelite, Philistine or Babylonian, are dressed in the same Roman costume, a coat of mail, with greaves, a helmet and a cloak; his sages and divines wear a flowing robe, with a girdle, a species of costume that tends but too readily to the hour-glass shape; there is very little attempt at variety here, and no affectation of learning.

Where he is truly successful, his vigour is extraordinary. We take as an instance, "Casting Lots for the Garments of Christ." This composition contains about twenty prominent figures, not counting those which are partially lost in the background. Of these no two repeat the same action, not one but adds something of his own to the bustle and scandal of the scene. The three brawny soldiers in the centre, throwing their dice on a shield under the very feet of the Saviour, the man who stoops to fill a sponge with vinegar from a brazen pot, the negro boy lounging on the ground, the laughing youths who divide the coat, the adoring apostles and prostrate women, not one but has the directness and sincerity of actual vision. This is no perfunctory illustration of the scene; so it was, for so Mr. Tinworth has seen it.

There has been no more sincere or unaffected development of religious art in our time. Indeed, it may very well be doubted if there has been any so sincere; for the highly conscious temper of the modern races does not lead them to expression of this simple sort. In one of Mr. Tinworth's early panels we see Christ seated under a fig-tree, surrounded by learned and aged doctors, and holding a little boy of three or four years between his knees, while saying those words of exhortation to humility which we all of us know so well and practise so little. The art of Mr. Tinworth has close analogies with this little child of the parable, and in its simplicity and quaint sincerity it can teach many a lesson to the academic fathers of religious sculpture. It is occupied with the essential part of the story, rather than with its ornaments or accessories. The parable comes first, the illustration second, and the lesson is always more than the mode in which the lesson is taught. Very rarely are we conscious of the romantic intention of the artist.

Among his earlier compositions I see none except the "Gethsemane" in which he has been mainly occupied with beauty of composition. Here a rare poetry is gained by the veiled forms prostrate on the hills of the garden, the Christ resting his head on his arms, with his face to the ground, the bending angel whispering consolation into his ear. But this is quite exceptional, and usually the artist is principally occupied with giving us a vivid and consistent reproduction of the picture which is formed in his mind by the repetition of the sacred words. How naïve and droll this sometimes is we see in the "Zacchæus," where the short, stout man, uncouthly girded, hastens in a very clumsy fashion to drop from the branches of his tree. We feel inclined to call out, in the quaint distich of Quarles:—

"Well climbed Zacchæus! 'Twas a step well given—Hence to the tree, and from the tree to heaven!"

Yet he is not always occupied with the merely humorous or graphic side of his subject. The "Daughter of Herodias" is an early panel which is notable for grace of design, and for that conscious poetry of movement which is the very essence of a sculptured frieze.

Our "painter in terra-cotta" is essentially a parable-maker, and he is never happier than when he illustrates one of the stories with which Christ rebuked the dulness of the Jews. In "The Lost Piece of Money" we see this happy gift displayed in the pleasantest style possible. The woman, who has been sweeping, bends over the garden-fence to call her neighbour's attention to her lucky discovery, and the congratulations of the neighbours are exceedingly sincere and vivacious. The little boy under the palm-tree is too much astonished to claim what we cannot help conceiving to be his due—a share in the credit of this discovery; the woman in front of the group of neighbours looks as pleased as if she had found the piece of money herself; and the bourgeois type is wonderfully preserved. We feel from the pose, the dress, the features of each one of those respectable people, that they are in a condition of life in which the loss of so broad a piece of silver is a very serious and agitating one. They are not athletes and ladies of quality masquerading in Jewish robes, in the style of most of our religious painters. Their poverty, their honesty, and their Hebrew blood are translated to us in the very strongest words that realistic art can use; and we return to the text of the parable with a sense of its intimate truth and meaning which we have never felt before.

Not more vigorous than this, but more elaborate, is a still later panel, the lintel of the chapel door of Wraysbury, near Windsor, which tells the story of "The City of Refuge." Here Mr. Tinworth has given full indulgence to his love of parables. We see a section of the wall of the city. The Door of Mercy stands ajar, and has only just admitted the Shedder of Blood. The Avenger has almost caught him, and at the moment of his escape his enemy hurls the hatchet of Justice after him. It would strike and slay him, but a saintly form within closes the door, and Justice is foiled by Mercy. The Shedder of Blood falls swooning on the threshold of the House of Forgiveness. With all this direct didactic purpose, the realistic illustration is not neglected. Not only are the principal figures modelled with great alertness, but a crowd of bystanders, outside the City, watch the proceedings with intense interest. It is very rarely, even in the days of the Florentines, that a Scripture story has been seen so vividly, and rendered so vivaciously, in art as this.

The latest and most ambitious direction taken by Mr. Tinworth's art has been towards the elaborate illustration of the last days of Christ on earth. As early as 1875 it was the sketches for these panels which, on their being exhibited in the Royal Academy, attracted the notice of Mr. Ruskin. What he then said of them in his Notes cannot have been without its influence on the mind of the artist: "Full of fire and zealous faculty," Mr. Ruskin declared them to be,—faculty "breaking its way through all conventionalism to such truth as it can conceive; able also to conceive far more than can rightly be expressed on this scale." Those were indeed but sketches; among them for instance was that "Judgment of Pilate," of which Mr. Ruskin went on to speak in his suggestive manner: "And, after all the labours of past art on the life of Christ, here is an English workman fastening, with more decision than I recollect in any of them, on the gist of the sin of the Jews and their rulers, in the choice of Barabbas, and making the physical fact of contrast between the man released and the man condemned clearly visible. We must receive it, I suppose, as a flash of really prophetic intelligence on the question of universal suffrage."

[Mr. Tinworth's productions remind us very much of the personal sketches and the vivid descriptions of some of Mr. Moody's addresses; and we are sure that no preacher, teacher, or evangelist will look upon these genuine expositions of Scripture worked in terra-cotta without profit to himself and to his hearers.—Ed.]

OUR SAILORS.—A most interesting and hearty service was held at Commercial-road Chapel on Tuesday evening, May 29, in connection with the thirty-seventh anniversary of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society. The large chapel was well filled, and a great many seamen were present. A suitable and powerful sermon was preached by Rev. Archibald G. Brown, of the East London Tabernacle. Taking the words of Acts xxvii. 25 for his text, Mr. Brown regarded them, first, as indicating the best creed for a stormy night at sea, and secondly, as being the Christian's confession on the deck of a foundering ship. At the close of his sermon Mr. Brown spoke highly of the Society's work. A number of Christian seamen, who had marched from the Seamen's Chapel and Welcome Home in St. George-street, returned as they came, singing the praises of God through the streets.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

IN the pleasant drawing-rooms of the Earl of Shaftesbury, looking out on the fashionable Grosvenor-square, was held on Tuesday week the annual gathering of the English supporters of the Paris City Mission. His lordship presided for the greater part of the time, but having to fulfil another engagement in Shoreditch, left at the close of his remarks, his place being taken by Mr. Donald Matheson.

Mr. Weylland, Honorary Secretary, in submitting a brief statement of the work, said that last year's income showed a small increase on that of the previous year, a third of it being contributed by the Paris Christians themselves. There was abundance of Mission work to do in such a large and dangerous city, and the cry was going up to the Christians of favoured England, "Come over and help us."

Mons. Bertrand, of Paris, as a member of the Committee of the Paris City Mission and of the French Home Mission, said both societies were doing much elementary Christian work that had not before been done since Louis XIV. banished the Gospel from France. There had been in the history of France a constant rebound from Idolatry to Satan, from Ultramontranism to Communism. Now the nation had broken with Rome, and the rebound was seen in the rapid progress of infidelity. After a running review of past efforts to evangelise the nation, he said that they must adapt themselves to the existing condition of things. Mr. McAll and Mr. Gibson had succeeded better than their predecessors, largely because they began by instructing the people in the most primary truths of Christianity. The work of visitation was one of the most important, because through it the sympathy of the people had been gained. The good pastor related with much graphic power some conversations he recently had with a Parisian ouvrier who had been induced to attend some of the Gospel meetings by invitation of one of the city missionaries, and whose individual and family life had been completely metamorphosed. He also read extracts from the diary of one of the missionaries, full of deeply interesting facts, and all showing a remarkable readiness on the part of the industrial classes of the city to hear and receive the Gospel. France is in a great crisis; there is a strange mixture of light and darkness. If we want the nation for Christ let us make haste to bring the simple Gospel to those who are in danger of making eternal shipwreck. Now is the time for us to win a victory for our Lord over infidels and Romanists.

Rev. W. Newell, of the McAll Mission, as another deputation from Paris, said it was not possible to estimate the work of the society by merely numbering the seven agents at work. These seven are helping on all the Christian organisations throughout the city, such as those of Miss de Broen and Mr. McAll. Mr. Newell, in passing, paid a high tribute to the work and the heroic devotion of Miss de Broen, and said that English Christians ought to give such a Mission their heartiest support. One of the city missionaries is doing a great work among the gamins of the city, transforming them both in habit and appearance in a wonderful way. The speaker quoted a touching incident that recently happened to show that the communists are being reached with the Gospel through this instrumentality.

Lord Shaftesbury said he saw no reason why the Paris City Mission should not succeed as well as the London City Mission had done. He believed that very nearly the same results would be brought about with faith and patience and determination. Although France is now an irreligious nation, she has in former ages produced noble witnesses to the truth and power of the Gospel. Why should it not be so again? We have had an earnest of this in the marvellous work in Paris under Mr. M'Call and Miss de Broen. The attention of the people and their apparent gratitude, as witnessed by himself, were a singular tribute to the power of the truth. His lordship seconded the appeal for another helper to Miss de Broen, emphasising it by the fact that the return of many exiles to Paris opened up larger opportunities than ever. When in Paris he had a conversation with a Cabinet Minister, who, after referring to the different evangelistic efforts then in progress, said: "You don't know the good you are doing to the people of Paris by your various movements."

Rev. H. Webb-Peploe moved a resolution pledging the meeting to make increased efforts for the evangelisation of the people of France. He gave some of his personal experiences as a pastor in Lisle about twenty years ago to show the immense advance that had been made in the work of Christianising the French nation. He was sure that no agency could do this work better than that of the City Mission. Though there is much unbelief in France, a great deal of it is of the shallowest kind, and the testimony of such agents would be potent in meeting and upsetting it by the application of the simple truth. Mr. Peploe said there were many English families in France who had settled there, and who, not being able to accept Romanism, had sunk into unbelief purely through neglect. If we gave them Christ, the results would be glorious. If any English Christians gave their personal service, or their means to this work, the reward they would reap could not be estimated.

Rev. Dr. Pigou, of Halifax, said he had lately spent a few months in Paris and had noted the progress of Christian work in the heart of France. He could not but see that the door was fully open now without let or hindrance. From personal observation he could testify to the eagerness with which the people received the message of the Gospel. He also had a very warm word to say about the work in Belleville by Miss de Broen. He most earnestly expressed the belief that there could never be a greater opportunity for Christian work in France than now. Could not some of the many English Christian women who had nothing to tie them to their own country, consecrate themselves to this work of carrying the light into the dark places of the Continent? Paris has sent us many bad things, in fashion, in literature, and in art; let us return good for evil and send what will elevate and save the nation.

In calling for a hearty expression of thanks to the noble host and his daughter, Lady Edith Ashley, Mr. George Williams proposed that the meeting should raise £60, the sum needed for providing the Belleville Mission with another missionary, and offered to contribute his share. Mr. Greer, M.P., seconded; and several friends present responded in a practical form.

Miss de Broen, being present, was asked to say something. She pleaded very naïvely for this second missionary. She said they had every year access to 6000 new homes, but there were no workers to do the work of visitation, which had proved such a blessing. Miss de Broen greatly stirred and touched the meeting by her recital of the needs of the people and of the wonderful things God had enabled them to see in connection with the Belleville Mission.

The address of Mr. J. Weylland, Honorary Secretary of the Mission for England, is 31, Carlton Hill, St. John's Wood, N.W.

A NOVEL TEMPERANCE REFORM.

MAKEA, the Queen of Raratonga, has been so much distressed by the increase of intemperance among her people, that she has devised a new method of putting a stop to it. She summoned a popular assembly, and before them all she severely reprimanded the police agents for their culpable indulgence towards drunkards. She then dismissed them all, and created a new police composed of women of mature age.

The experiment succeeded perfectly. These women have shown an extraordinary ability and energy in discovering frauds and defrauders. They have found and thrown into the sea quantities of smuggled brandy. Since they have had the matter in hand a true reformation in the morals of the population has taken place. This Queen, who has so well understood that women are the most deeply interested in the suppression of the plague of drunkenness, is certainly a woman of head and heart.—Le Christianisme au XIXe Siècle.

WORK AMONG DISCHARGED PRISONERS.

ST GILES'S CHRISTIAN MISSION.

ALMOST interesting gathering was held in the lower Exeter Hall on the evening of Tuesday week in connection with this noble work of rescue. Sir Wm. Charley, Common Serjeant of the City of London, presided.

After prayer by the Chaplain of Newgate, Mr. Robert Scott briefly bore testimony to the excellent influence of this work. He had invoked the help of the Mission in a case in which he was interested, and that help was freely and effectively rendered.

Mr. Geo. Hatton, superintendent of the St. Giles's Mission, described the origin of this branch in 1877, through special Gospel services conducted by Joshua Poole. Since then the work has grown to large proportions. A few days since out of 76 men discharged from Coldbath-fields and Holloway prisons in one day, 46 accepted the invitation to breakfast. The Home Office authorities had granted a piece of ground opposite Wandsworth Prison, where it is proposed to erect an iron room, so that similar work may be carried on. The success of Mr. Wheatley in obtaining occupation for the discharged prisoners is truly astonishing. A Christian home, providing sleeping accommodation for twenty, enables many to be taken right out of their old surroundings and associations. The sphere of the work is daily widening, and the cries for help from these helpless men are most distressing, with the limited means at disposal. The authorities have done their utmost to further the work, and it rests with the Christian public to provide the wherewithal for its adequate extension and maintenance.

Mr. Wheatley, Secretary, read letters from some of those who had been helped, expressive of gratitude for all the kindness shown to them. He said he wished something could be done for the wives of those undergoing punishment.

The Chairman said the more routine duties of a judge were sometimes pleasantly diversified by an opportunity of doing something to help a prisoner back to the paths of honesty. What such a man chiefly needs is a fresh start in life, free from old influences and associates, and this is what the St. Giles's Mission seeks to give him. He appealed for the heartiest support of the public, both on the grounds of Christian philanthropy and of social economy. The Home Secretary never did a wiser thing than in granting a site for the erection of a new room at Wandsworth Prison for the reception of prisoners as they leave its portals.

Dean Vaughan, of the Temple, referring to the Chairman, said the administration of justice and the exercise of Christian benevolence went well together. What could be more tenderly touching to any man who knows himself than the thought that he has been preserved from the paths out of which this Mission is seeking to rescue those who have fallen. He had on several occasions preached on behalf of a similar effort to this, from the text, "The devil left Him, and angels came and ministered unto Him." He might well describe the friends who carry on this blessed work of rescue and help as God's ministering angels.

Mr. J. W. C. Fegan thought Mr. Hatton and Mr. Wheatley were real Christian heroes, for having the courage to enter on such a work and persevere in it, in the face of much difficulty. Such an effort must be very acceptable to the Lord, who loves to uplift the fallen and to save the sinful. Apart from the individual benefits conferred by its operations, he felt that the work of the Mission was one of the most powerful evidences to the power of the Christian religion. With its precious ministry of help and hope, the criminal becomes a useful servant of the Lord Jesus Christ. The claims it has on our sympathy and aid cannot be exaggerated.

The Chaplain of Wandsworth Prison also bore strong testimony, from personal knowledge, to the efficient manner in which the Mission comes to the succour of the discharged criminals in the moment of their deepest need. After this, some of the prisoners restored to respectability by means of the mission gave touching and effective testimony to the work.

DR. SOMERVILLE IN SOUTH AFRICA.

ON Friday, April 2, Dr. Somerville arrived in Port Elizabeth, Algoa Bay, from Cradock, having made the tour from Port Elizabeth to Natal by sea, and thence overland through the Free State and Diamond Fields to Port Elizabeth again in 132 days. During this period he delivered no fewer than 180 addresses. It may be interesting to your readers to have a summary of the work done on this journey of, at least, 1500 miles by the Rev. Doctor, and this I purpose giving as briefly as possible.

It is perhaps desirable that I should make some reference to methods of travelling in South Africa, of which the majority of your readers must naturally know little or nothing. With the exception of a distance of sixty miles in Natal, and 240 miles in the Port Elizabeth district, there are no railways along the route followed by Dr. Somerville, and consequently other means of transit had to be employed. Acting on the advice of friends, the journey was performed by mule waggon, an expensive and somewhat slow method of travelling, but far in advance of the ox waggons which are so common everywhere. In the Free State means of conveyance by public vehicles are very scarce, the post carts only running once a week, and affording very rough accommodation indeed. The roads, too, are not roads in the home sense of the word, but rather paths through the plains, with the inequalities levelled down by constant traffic. Not being metalled in any way, they suffer much during the wet season.

Dr. Somerville's work on this tour may be described as consisting of four great branches: First, Evangelistic services in towns to the English-speaking population; second, addresses, through an interpreter, to the Dutch-speaking population; third, addresses, through interpreters, to the natives employed in and living near the various towns; and, fourth, visits to regular Mission stations.

Beginning at Durban, Natal, on December 24, Dr. Somerville continued there till January 11; then, proceeding up the East Coast, he held three days' services in the town of Verulone, thereafter visiting two of the American Mission Stations, Umvoti and Inanda. From Durban to Pietermaritzburg, the capital city, was the next journey, and in the city Dr. Somerville laboured for a fortnight, in a large theatre, which was found very suitable for the purpose.

From Pietermaritzburg Dr. Somerville proceeded as far as Helpmakaar, on the Zulu frontier, visiting Greytown on the way, where he addressed his first Dutch audiences, and also the two important Mission stations at Impolwein and Umsinga. One more town in Natal, Ladysmith, was visited before the border was crossed into the Free State. From the border all the way to Bloemfontein, the capital, are small towns, such as Harrismith, Bethlehem, Senekal, and Winburg, in all of which Dr. Somerville delivered addresses, and was received with great cordiality. Nor was his reception less cordial in the capital, where he held services for several days.

From this Dr. Somerville proceeded to Kimberley, the chief seat of the diamond mining industry in Africa, and one of the most important towns in the Colony. There, business at present is in a very depressed condition, but in spite of this, great interest was displayed by all classes of the community in the Mission which, including visits to Dutoitspan and Barkly, lasted nearly three weeks. An urgent request that he would stay longer had to be set aside, on the ground of want of time to accomplish all the work before him. From Kimberley to Cradock was the next stage, and by the way Dr. Somerville addressed meetings in Fauresmith, Jagersfontein, Philippolis, and Colesberg. In Cradock Dr. Somerville spent a week very profitably, and now is about to begin work in Port Elizabeth, the so-called Liverpool of South Africa.

Such is a brief sketch of Dr. Somerville's journey, and I shall now say a few words about the different classes of people addressed on the way. In all parts of the Colonies there are to be found numbers of persons who have emigrated from Great Britain in search of wealth, and, as usual in a young colony, there are large numbers of young men among them. In the large towns they have the opportunity of attending church ordinances, and of sharing in the general religious life of the community. In many towns Young Men's Christian Associations have been established and are in a more or less flourishing condition, in others steps have been taken to form such. The case of the young men who are not in the towns is a peculiar one. They perhaps have stores or farms away from the centres of population, and are without any provision for religious ordinances save the chance visit of a clergyman. Dr. Somerville several times held a short service with young men in this position, and his ministrations were always appreciated. In all the towns visited the English-speaking population evinced much interest in the services, notably so in Pietermaritzburg and Kimberley. One very interesting meeting at the latter town was for Jews, which was largely attended. In one town in the Free State the interest shown was so great that all the canteens were closed at eight o'clock for want of customers.

The Dutch-speaking population were not behind the English in the interest they evinced in the services. As a rule, and specially so in the Free State, the Dutch are a simple-minded people, and readily attend religious services. The greatest respect was paid to Dr. Somerville by these people. A common title given to him was "Father," and in one district he went by the name of "Governor." One gentleman left his house and family for three or four days in order to drive Dr. Somerville in his waggon, and on bidding farewell he threw his arms round Dr. Somerville's neck and kissed him heartily.

The addresses to natives in the various towns visited by Dr. Somerville, were not the least interesting features of the work. In Pietermaritzburg and Kimberley the attendance of coloured people was said to exceed anything ever seen before in these towns. In one town, Bloemfontein, it was necessary for Dr. Somerville to have no less than three interpreters, Dutch, Kaffir, and Basuto, so that every word had to be spoken four times, thus prolonging the services very much. The natives seemed to enjoy the services, and listened with great attention. In their worship their singing is a great feature, and many of them possess fine alto and bass voices.

Last in order, but not least in point of importance, come the visits to regular Mission stations. At these places the results have been very encouraging. The self-denying labours of God's servants there have brought great numbers to the point at which a word spoken by a stranger seems able to bring them to decide for Christ. To the natives, a person of such venerable appearance as Dr. Somerville is quite a strange sight, and they regarded him with the greatest reverence and respect. From all the stations visited cheering reports have come of the good done by Dr. Somerville's visits, and of the encouragement given to the missionaries personally.

One word about music. In all places alike, among English, Dutch, and natives, Mr. Sankey's hymns have been sung with great acceptance, and in the large towns united choirs were formed to lead the singing. The hymns in the second part of "Songs and Solos" we found were quite unknown in South Africa, and have become very popular wherever sung.

Such is a brief and imperfect sketch of the work accomplished by Dr. Somerville in his long overland journey. Surely the results are encouraging enough to call forth thanks for God's wonderful goodness in enabling his servant to accomplish so much, and to urge them to renewed prayer for the teeming millions of the Great Continent of Africa.

JOHN B. CUMMING,
Port Elizabeth, April 28. Stud. Theol.

FINDING LOST SHEEP AT LEEDS.

THE meetings held in connection with the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and their helper, Mr. Scroggie, were most successful; the tide of blessing has been flowing into our churches, and not only there, but amongst the working class all around. A drayman stopped me on Wednesday, to ask if we could speak to the men in the railway yard, as he believes many of them are under deep impression. Already I can count upon eight new members for my class, and others have been roused to new life.

After one Sunday afternoon service, a boy about ten years old gave his heart to God, and would not go home until he knew where he could go to class; on the spot a young gentleman promised to meet him and another boy during the week. This has been already formed into a boys' class-meeting.

In going to my Bible-class, on Wednesday, March 28, I found a man who had for three years abstained from strong drink, and been an earnest Christian, but during the severe weather this winter he had broken his pledge, and had been drinking sadly. He saw me first, and said:—

"Are you seeking me?"

"Yes, I want you at the class to-night."

"Oh, I'm too bad to go there; I'm going to the public-house."

"No," I said, "you must not go there again, if I have to follow you all night."

He looked astonished, but submitted, as many a drunkard will, and went to a cocoa-house, to have a cup of tea, and wait until my class was over; another man from my class stayed with him.

By nine o'clock he was sobered, and very wretched, quite sure he had sinned far more than "the man that ate husks," and he feared there was no hope for him—he was sorely burdened with his load of sin. Two men tried to take him home, but at every step he seemed more miserable.

"I can't go home with this burden on my conscience; will you pray with me?"

"Yes, I'll go to your lodgings, and ask God o forgive you."

"No," he said, "not there, my mates wil laugh at me. I dare not do it."

Poor fellow! his distress increased so much, that at the top of New Briggate he again stopped, and said:

"If you will kneel down just here, I believe God will save me!" Remembering the Salvation Army's meeting-place close by, we guided him there. He went straight forward to be prayed for, and pointed to Jesus. He was truly penitent, and cried from his heart, "God be merciful to me a sinner." At once the Saviour met him with pardoning love. "He's done it again," he cried. "Does my face look different? When God forgave me before, a friend said that my face showed the change." And, indeed, it did this time, too; the burden was gone, and the light of God's presence had come instead. He then signed the pledge, with a very trembling hand, but with a new trust in God to keep him firm to his promise, knowing well how weak human strength is against the strong temptation that has already caused him to fall.

"Will you give me two pledges, for my mates?" was his next request. In coming out of the room, a man asked my friend if he had given God his heart? "No," he said, "He's taken it;" and was speedily on his way home, assuring me I need not watch him any more; he could go home now with his burden gone. He proposed to return to his class again the next night, but was hindered. He has been at the Mission services every night since, growing stronger day by day.

On the last Friday of Mr. Scroggie's services, I again found my friend in the after-meeting, wanting to see me. He had brought one of "his mates" with him, and the man was under deep conviction of sin; he was easily persuaded to join the other inquirers, and I trust he too is enjoying the blessing of pardon. A GROWING WORK IN SPAIN.

THE FIGUERAS MISSION.

ON Easter Sunday we had the joy of opening our new hall and schools, which have been certainly given to us in answer to prayer. With hearts full of praise we dedicated the hall by a service which was largely attended. Notwithstanding our personal efforts, the necessary outlay has drawn considerably on our small funds. We therefore appeal to the Christians of England to help us in providing this simple building for the proclamation of the Gospel.

The work in Vilabertran has given us much joy of late. The increasing attendance at our Sunday-school so roused the anger of the priests that they influenced the Count who owns the land to turn three families out of employment because they refused to withdraw themselves or their children from the school. A week or two ago, the twenty-five converts partook for the first time of the Lord's Supper, which was a solemn and happy event to us all. My husband gave an address to the converts, and I wish the friends in England could have seen the bright, earnest faces of those dear, brave witnesses for the truth. Each convert has been excommunicated by the priest, and all of them have removed their children from the day-school, because confession was enforced. Now they have petitioned my husband to give them a Protestant school. An excellent master has been recommended for this post. He could also act as an Evangelist, preaching on days de fiesta in adjoining villages, distributing Scriptures, &c. Such workers are most difficult to find in Spain, so we are very anxious to secure the one who now offers himself. Will not the Lord's stewards help us to supply this need by providing the salary of £60 a year?

A few weeks ago we had Dr. Stoughton and his daughter with us. I quote the following which he wrote in our visitors' book on leaving: "I have visited the schools in Figueras with much satisfaction and pleasure. Our friends are doing a noble work, and well deserve the sympathy and assistance of British Christians. I heartily commend to them the whole institution, and pray that God may bless and prosper it."

News has come to us from Rosas of the arrival of a Spanish squadron in the harbour. My husband is busily packing two portmanteaus and a carpet bag with Gospels and Testaments to give to the sailors. I would take this opportunity of thanking the friends who have from time to time so kindly sent us texts. Our supply is all but exhausted, so we shall be very glad of more. Any help in aid of the Mission will be gladly received by Colonel Baynes, 87, Elgin-crescent, Notting-hill, London, W.— Yours sincerely, EMILY L. RODRIGUEZ.

P.S.—A copy of our last report and balance-sheet will be sent to any friend who may apply either to Col. Baynes or to us here.—E. L. R.

WOMAN IN MOHAMMEDAN LANDS.

M. BERTRAND who, with M. Réveillaud, has been holding a series of religious meetings in the departments of Oran and Algiers, gives the following as an illustration of the position assigned to women by Mohammedans: He met with a very pretty little girl, and said to her father, "Your daughter is like a beautiful rose; can she read?" "No," he replied, "my daughter is a girl." "And because she is a girl, do you teach her nothing?" "Nothing; for a woman is happy only when she knows nothing." "But she cannot read in the Koran, which tells of Allah, who made her so beautiful." "So much the better; my daughter will not busy herself with the mysteries of the Koran." "I believe with the Great Prophet, Christ, that she has a soul like you and me." "I tell you, my daughter is not a boy."

So it is: a woman is an object of luxury, a beautiful article, a jewel, a flower, if she is young and pretty; an object of some value if she is ugly and strong, for she can labour like an ox; if she is old and weak she is old rubbish; but whatever she is, she is only a thing, not a man, not a soul

THE FLOATING BETHEL IN GENOA.

GENOA Harbour boasts one of the finest Bethels afloat. It is built of iront lined with wood, and seats 200 comfortably. It has also small rooms for the man in charge, for the missionary, and for Bible and tract depôt. The cost of this beautiful vessel amounted to £2000, of which £750 was given by the Sunday-school children of Scotland, and the rest collected by Rev. Donald Miller, of the Presbyterian Church, 4, Via Peschiera, Genoa, who superintends the Mission. The Reading-room is supplied with papers, and is open for the sailors to read and write free of all charge.

Several evenings in the week meetings are held; it is found easy to collect the sailors by going in the small boat from ship to ship; as many as eighty are often assembled, to hear the good news of salvation for sinners through faith in the crucified Redeemer. They need the very simplest language, and are, as a rule, very attentive. Besides the salaries of missionary and caretaker, &c., the vessel has to be put on the floating dock every year to be cleaned and painted, at a cost of £12. CHEYNE BRADY.

THE RATCLIFF "BRIDGE OF HOPE."

IN the letter to Miss Macpherson, to which reference was made in a recent issue, Miss Steer of 26 and 27, Princes-square, E., says:—

"I feel to-day full of gratitude to our God for his great goodness. The past winter has been a very busy one, and though our strength has been often severely tried, yet it has not been beyond measure, and has been equal to the day. We have been much encouraged in the attendance at our mothers' meeting; the room is as full as it can hold, and we could get many more could we receive them. We invite especially those poor women who, many of them from necessity, are living in bad courts and alleys, frequently next door to houses of ill-fame. Our especial object in gathering them, next to telling them of Christ as the Saviour for their own souls, is to show them our sympathy in having to bring up their children under such adverse surroundings, and to help them as much as we can with their girls. The friendliness which is thus established between us is wonderful. I can see a very great difference in the welcome we meet with now and the way in which we were received two years ago.

"We also have lately begun a service on Sunday evening, and many gladly come to it. The children's Gospel service is as popular as ever: I cannot say it increases, because we have been as full as ever we could be for a long while.

"As to the rescue work among the poor girls, about 150 have passed through this house since our last report was issued in September; we have sent forty to Homes, found situations for twenty, restored about the same number to friends, and helped others in various ways; in some thirty or more cases our work has seemed in vain. To-day our family numbers in all thirty-nine. There cannot be a work where there is often such sorrow and disappointment; nevertheless, we often get the most blessed joy, and I can now think of several who have not only been rescued from a life of outward sin, but who have found Jesus as their Saviour, and are living consistent Christian lives.

"Through the kindness of Lady Ashburton, who has given us a house rent-free, we have lately been able to open a Home for training, either for service or emigration, rough girls, who, though their surroundings and antecedents have been bad, have not yet themselves fallen into evil. Some such whom we have already emigrated are doing well; two are now on their way to Natal under careful escort to situations already provided. It is such a comfort to know, when work presses, that we are remembered in prayer by other Christians, perhaps not so heavily weighted as we are."

THE BLUE RIBBON.

WELCOME cheery ribbon blue,
Bravely will we wear it;
To our pledge abiding true,
Let us thus declare it.

Let this tiny token show
Our determination
Firmly to resist the foe,
Spoiler of our nation.

Let it tell of earnest zeal,
Darkened lives to brighten;
Wounded, broken hearts to heal,
Burdens sore to lighten.

Satan's captives to release,
Drink's strong cords to sever,
Souls to lead to Christ and peace,
And a bless'd forever.

Resting on our Captain's Word,
Seeking his direction;
Doing all "as to the Lord,"
Claiming his protection;

We will guard our badge of blue,
Sign of high endeavour;
For our God, and brother, too,
We will wear it ever.

Bright, uniting ribbon blue,
Who will come and wear it?
Order of an honour true,
Who with us will share it?

AT WORK IN GERMANY.

WRITING from Wiesbaden, on May 16, to a friend in England, Pastor Scheve says:—

"Five weeks have been spent in Berlin, whither I had been called to minister to the church in the absence of their pastor. The Lord has richly blessed my stay there. Seventy souls professed to have found peace in Jesus. Although this journey has somewhat hindered me, personally, in my Mission to the poor people in the flooded districts, I had previously so arranged that the work could run its blessed course without me.

"The colporteurs, Gärtner and Opel, laboured together in the distribution of the Word in the towns and villages of Biebrich, Schierstein, Castel (on the Rhine), and Bischofsheim (Maine), while Pastor Reimer and Colporteur Bonn visited Worms, Frankenthal, Edigheim, Oppau, Friesenheim, and Hemsdorf, to give testimony of the Lord, by the written and spoken Word. With the Bible-carriage they went from house to house. Everywhere the word was received with great gratitude and movings of heart. Not unfrequently the people thronged round the Bible-carriage, and listened with tearful eyes to the simple but quickening message of salvation in Christ. Through the Lord's gracious guidance and the willing offerings of Christian friends, we were enabled in these places freely to give away about 2000 Testaments, as well as 3584 tracts and other Christian writings, besides relieving some deeply distressed families with money to the amount of £25. I have a small balance still left, which will find its use within the next few days."

Any communications with respect to this interesting effort should be addressed to Mrs. C. H. Christie, Hill House, Belstead, Ipswich.

STORNOWAY, N.B.—The coffee-house for the smoking workers has been opened here, and is a great success, meeting, as it does, a felt want. The masters of the surrounding yards and smoking-houses have been very kind, some of them visiting the coffee-rooms in person, and expressing their thankfulness for such a place. They send in their women workers by relays. About 250 were thus supplied with hot coffee and bread on the first night, and the place seems to be increasing in favour. We are most thankful to God for this. On Sabbath short services are held, and also on Monday nights. A lady superintends each day. The workers themselves seem most grateful. The cost of the building is £70, and for that we have received about £30, leaving a debt still of £40.

EIGHT DAYS' Gospel Temperance Mission,

IN EXETER HALL,

May 27 to June 3.

SABBATH EVENING, MAY 27.

The Desecration of the Sabbath.

THIS important, though all too brief campaign, was opened on the evening of the Lord's-day, May 27, when the large Exeter Hall was well filled by an audience that manifested a great and enthusiastic interest in the subject under consideration. Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS presided. The praise was led by an excellent choir, under the leadership of Mr. Croil Falconer, which, it may be here observed, did splendid service throughout the entire Mission. After an opening hymn, Mr. Francis Murphy read 1 Cor. xiii, and Mr. Cameron Churchill, Secretary of the Central Y.M.C.A., offered earnest prayer for God's blessing on the effort.

OPENING REMARKS BY MR. GEORGE WILLIAMS.

WE commence to-night our Eight Days' Gospel Temperance Mission. Your presence in such large numbers is an indication of the growing interest manifested in this increasingly successful and important movement.

Our grand and noble forefathers secured for, and have handed down to us, the inestimable blessings of the Christian Sabbath. Be it ours rightly to appreciate, and justly to maintain, this glorious heritage. But more. Be it ours, by every means within our power, to extend these blessings which we enjoy, to those who, sad to say, are in a great measure deprived of them. If there be one class of the community, more than another, needing the girding power, the sacred, sanctifying influences of the Christian Sabbath, surely that class must be the publicans. They are exposed to great and manifold temptations—how great only those engaged in the traffic can know. And yet these people, as a class, either by necessity or choice, do not largely participate in these blessed and helpful privileges. Now, why is this? It ought not to be so. The publicans in Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, enjoy the blessings of the Christian Sabbath. Why should not the publicans of our beloved England also share these blessings? Let us seek by prayerful effort to do all we can to bring about so desirable an end.

Mr. Williams quoted the details of several cases of attempted suicide by persons in the trade out of sixteen such cases recorded by Rev. J. W. Horsley, Chaplain of the Clerkenwell House of Detention as having been committed to prison during the past twelve months.

He then proceeded: Sometimes people say they are wishful to be usefully employed for Christ. Here is a field of labour for such—for I cannot conceive of any better or more thoroughly religious work than to endeavour to procure for these people—the publicans—the blessings of the Christian Sabbath. Think for a moment what calamities would overtake our land if we were deprived of the privileges of the Lord's Day! Can we imagine such a thing as all the houses of prayer closed; our five millions of Sunday-school scholars turned into the streets; our half-million Sunday-school teachers without occupation? What if all the ministers of the Gospel were prohibited from preaching; if all the London City Missionaries and Bible-women and Scripture-readers and open-air preachers were to be stopped from continuing their glorious work! Why, if such were to take place, we should have to write "Ichabod" upon the Queen's palaces, our churches and chapels, and all our great and good institutions, for surely our glory as a nation would have departed. But, God helping us, such a state of things shall never come to pass. We know from experience the Sabbath to be a day of rest, of joy, and gladness. Shall we not do all we can to extend the benefits we enjoy to all our fellow-subjects in this great Empire?

ADDRESS BY MR. T. E. MURPHY.

Having made a brief and appreciative reference to the kindness that had been shown to him and his father since their arrival in this country about two years ago, Mr. Murphy said it was an admitted fact that the drink traffic was the great agent in causing the desecration of the Sabbath Day. If we could only succeed in doing away with this traffic, then peace and righteousness and virtue would flourish in our midst. The publicans are not to be held wholly responsible for the traffic; the root of the evil lies more in the habits of the people. If we could but induce the people to abstain, the publicans would soon go out of the business.

Looking at the progress of the temperance reform in the light of the history of other great movements in byegone ages, Mr. Murphy showed that reformers must not be dismayed because for a time they are in a minority, or because their labours were not immediately crowned with success. This has been the lot of all who have worked for the public good. Thank God for those who, amidst ridicule, persecution, and contumely, have steadily persevered, and have made it possible for this movement to occupy the place it now holds in the public favour.

The speaker then appealed in earnest words to those in the audience who were, to any extent, under the thraldom of the intoxicating cup. Perhaps, he said, you think your parents and friends do not know anything about it. But your Christian mother finds it out, and what does she do? She goes aside, and quietly weeps over the failings of her boy. Young man, for the sake of that mother, I ask you to sign and to keep the pledge. You will never know the beauty and the grandeur of a mother's love until she is taken from you. I well remember the hallowed influence of my mother, as I knelt at her knee, and learned to say, "Our Father, which art in heaven." I remember the day she died. She put out her emaciated hand, and, looking at me, she said, "God bless you, Edward; remember the teachings of your mother, and meet me in heaven." These were the last words she ever spoke to me. She is gone, but I thank God that her sweet voice still lingers in my ear, and the smile on her calm face is stamped in the innermost recesses of my memory. When I remember that there are thousands of such mothers, who are as anxious for their boys as mine was, and when I think that this traffic is doing so much to destroy the young men of the present day, how can I but resolve that as long as this stammering tongue shall have the power to give utterance to thought, so long will I speak and do all that I can to induce my brothers to come and stand on the platform of abstinence from this accursed thing! Let each one of us be resolutely determined to do his duty. Let us catch inspiration to-night from the glorious opportunities that are opening up before us for noble and heroic action. Let those who sigh for higher horizons and wider fields of usefulness labour where God has placed them. They shall have the reward, not only of doing their duty, but of helping some poor struggling brother to come up higher in the fight. They shall know that he who is instrumental in turning another to righteousness, shall save a soul from death and cover a multitude of sins.

ADDRESS BY MR. GAWIN KIRKHAM.

God only gave two laws at creation; one was the law of the Sabbath, and the other the law of marriage. The purpose of the Sabbath was rest on the one hand, and worship on the other. The institution of the Sabbath was destined to be from creation to the end of time. The Sabbath is no more Jewish than marriage is Jewish. Though the Jews may have loaded the Sabbath with a ceremonial which is not binding on Christians, the right and due observance of the day is as much the duty and privilege of the Christian as ever it was to the Jew. Therefore we are dealing with first principles to-night. In the sevenfold impeachment of this drink traffic we begin by impeaching it with reference to the Lord's Day. I shall present to you briefly a sevenfold view of this aspect of our subject.

First, I charge the drink traffic with robbing the Sabbath Day of its rightful purpose. I am told that you cannot make malt within a week, so that you must have Sabbath labour in order to produce the malt that produces liquor. Here is a direct infringement of the Day of Rest. Again, this Sunday traffic keeps 340,000 people in bondage—that is supposed to be the number of persons engaged in dealing out liquor in connection with the public-houses of Great Britain every Lord's Day. It is as clear as daylight that the drink traffic interferes with the Lord's Day by keeping these thousands in bondage; and as the Chairman pointed out, it is our duty as Christians to let the oppressed go free.

Again, this traffic interferes with other traders. There is a law against Sunday trading in this country, and it is sometimes enforced. But here is a trade legalised by Parliament to be carried on on Sunday, and the money that is flowing into it ought to be distributed over the whole field of commerce during the six working days of the week. This Sunday trade in drink further throws a strong temptation in the way of the drinkers. I believe nobody would welcome the closing of public-houses more than the drinkers themselves. Though they cannot pass the public-house when it is open, they hate themselves for it, and they would thank God and the Government too, if these houses were closed, so that they could not do what they hate themselves for doing. There is an Act in this country called the "Bonâ Fide Travellers' Act," by which any man who chooses to say that he is three miles from the place where he slept last night can demand that he shall be served with drink. All the suburbs of London to-day are witnesses of the folly of such a provision as that. Highbury New Park Tavern, in the North of London, was open for a number of years for the benefit of these precious bonâ fide travellers. One Sunday morning the police counted up at least 1200 people who went into that tavern during the two hours of divine service.

Again, this traffic robs the Sunday-school and the Church of Christ. What becomes of our young people—those who should form our senior classes, and be trained as the teachers of the future? They fall into the ways of other young people; they drop into the public-house, with the result that the Sunday-school and the church are robbed of them and their influence. Once more, this Sunday traffic unfits men for work on Monday. There is such a thing as "Saint Monday." The calculation has been made by one of our great ironworkers that somewhere about £45,000 a year are lost by his firm because the men do not go to work on Monday, chiefly owing to their Sunday drinking. That is but a specimen of what the legitimate industries of the nation suffer from "Saint Monday."

What are to be the remedies for all this? Not the Sunday opening of picture galleries and museums. There is a pious fiction, believed by many, that somehow or other the opening of such places would diminish Sunday drinking. Let me tell you a fact that will suffice for argument. Some years ago I had a correspondence with the Secretary of the Sunday Band in Regent's Park. He came to my office and wanted me to subscribe to the funds of the band. He showed me his list of subscriptions, and on looking at it I saw that more than half the subscribers were publicans. I asked him how that was. "Oh," he said, "don't you know that we are the publicans' best customers? People come to hear the band, and then they want refreshments." So you see, as I have said, it is a pious fiction, that if you give the people entertainment on Sunday you will keep them out of the public-house.

What is our duty in reference to this subject? Whether we are total abstainers or not, we must give our Parliament no rest till it has given us a Sunday Closing Bill. If meetings like these are multiplied throughout the kingdom, so as to make their voice heard in the House of Commons, we shall get it. Parliament never gives the nation anything that it does not ask for; but when they have been asked long enough, and pressingly enough, they will give you anything you ask for, whether it is right or wrong! So if we only knock at the door of St. Stephen's long enough and strongly enough we shall get this Bill. God helping us, we shall never rest till the thousands who are in bondage through this accursed traffic are set free.

Mr. Robert Scott, Secretary of the Mission, having briefly spoken of the need and the power of prayer in connection with this crusade, there followed an

ADDRESS BY MR. FRANCIS MURPHY.

I am not going to talk much, he said, about the desecration of the Sabbath; that has already been well and ably presented to you. What a day is this—how sweet, how bright, how beautiful! I was wishing to-day I were near a garden where I could catch something of the splendour of nature, as it opens its bountiful hand, under the sunlight of God's love—vale and hill and tree-top, all singing praises and uttering thanks to Him who, high over all, has opened his great loving heart and sent the waves of sunshine and distilled the dew upon the budding foliage, until nature, so to speak, is rising from her grave and putting on her beautiful garments. God help us to do our work calmly and patiently as He does in the great processes of nature.

I believe in this Gospel temperance work, because it saves men and it does harm to nobody. I want you all to be kind in this work. The world needs the Gospel of love. I read in the good old Book, "If I speak with the tongues of men and angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass or tinkling cymbal." We have been talking a good deal of the publicans. There are worse people than they. If you do not want to have anything to do with them stay away from them. I have been a publican, and I know it is pretty hard for a man in that position to keep the door closed on the Sabbath Day. If you people would all sign the pledge and give your hearts to God, the publicans would have a chance of keeping the Sabbath and perhaps going to the Lord's House. I have seen a man beg and pray of me, with tears in his eyes, just to give him a little drop, or he would die. I can pity that man. That is the man who needs the Gospel of Christ. In this historic hall, where Wilberforce inspired the nation till its great conscience was lifted up to the mountain-top of righteousness, and the word went forth, "Let my people go," I call upon you to let your own enslaved people go free. The publican has not got much chance to do better. Every time we get on to a platform we are after him. I wish I had signed the pledge before I did, but I went to a temperance meeting one night, and the burden of the discourse was that they were getting ready to hang all the men who sold drink, and to bury all the men who drank it. I was not ready for the entertainment! Some of the best and noblest men and women in this country have been under the power of the drink; and it is only a little while since any of us got clear of it. Those of us who have lived in glass-houses must not get pelting anyone else with stones. As a publican, I longed to get out of the business; I was sick of it; my wife never would come near the place. She was a Christian woman. She said, "I wish you would not sell the drink." I said I would not touch it. "Well, some other body will touch it." Then, she said she was afraid for the children. God help us to be kind to the publican, to go and plead with him as Christians to give it up, for the sake of his wife and children as well as for his own.

After a reference to the work at Hoxton Hall, where the work had been carried on for 1,930 consecutive evenings, Mr. Murphy told, with much dramatic skill, of a cripple boy in Belfast, who, during the recent mission there, was so patient and so persistent in his efforts, that he got more than 170 signers of the pledge. If we want to stop the desecration of the Sabbath, continued the speaker, let us all sign the pledge, and keep away from the public-house. Nay, I will not say that; next Sunday, go to the publican and try to bring him to church. In 1869, in the city of Portland, Maine, I knew 365 liquor sellers. Three years after that I could almost have counted all that I could find left on the fingers of one hand. Having exhorted his hearers to keep the Gospel of the grace of God ever before the people as the only power that would save them from the slavery of the drink, Mr. Murphy concluded his address by relating with much power and pathos the story of a reformed inebriate in America, a man of great gifts, who had fallen to the lowest depths through the drink, but is now an honoured citizen of his country.

MONDAY EVENING, MAY 28.

Exeter Hall was again crowded on Monday night, the subject for consideration being

The Demoralising Influence of "Treating" in Commercial Circles.

Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., presided. The proceedings were begun with the singing by the choir of the hymn,

"Let the lower lights be burning," after which Mr. Francis Murphy read a few verses from Romans xv. appropriate to the occasion, the Rev. Oswald Sharp subsequently offering prayer.

ADDRESS BY MR. S. MORLEY.

I believe that the keystone of the commonwealth is the hearthstone, and that the strength and power of England may be more accurately measured by the virtue of her people and the purity of her homes than by her wealth or the strength of her army. If our people are to be intelligent and strong they must, by God's blessing, get out of the habits that are enslaving them. That we are lessening the extent of that slavery I am thankful to know, and I feel assured that the future Chancellors of the Exchequer are likely to have trouble enough from a diminished revenue. I have been many times cheered by the words of a man who has taught the English people a lesson which they might well lay to heart. I refer to the Malagasy Envoy who said to a deputation that waited on him upon this subject, "It is better to have a falling revenue than a degraded people." I remember well Lord John Russell, who ought to be held in honoured remembrance by all, saying to a deputation at which I was present, that "the Government would not dare to tax the people as the people taxed themselves." If the people only knew what they were spending on that which is valueless, there would be a determination on the part of the masses who consume these particular articles to save their money and improve their social position. I heard another distinguished leader, Richard Cobden, say, years ago, "The moral force of the masses lies in temperance. I have the utmost faith in that movement for the elevation of the working classes. We do not sufficiently estimate the amount of crime, of vice, poverty, ignorance, and destitution which spring from the drinking habits of the working people."

Speaking as a commercial man, and looking with deep anxiety often at the condition of the artisan class, especially in the manufacturing districts, I would mention a statement that was made in America not many months ago, and which I hold to be, if it is at all true, very appalling. It is a report presented to the American Government on labour in Europe and America. Dr. Young, the chief of the Bureau of Statistics of New York, said, speaking of England: "It is evident that the intemperate habits of the men, and the loss of time consequent thereon, prevent them from performing a full week's work. It is quite true, English workmen work as rapidly and as well as those in the United States. I believe, however, that, owing to the above cause, 900 men in the United States, employed in the branches indicated, as well as in many others, will accomplish as much efficient work per week as a thousand Englishmen." Now, I remember the time when it used to be believed that an English workman was as good as at least one Frenchman and a half. The misuse of one day in the week by thousands of the working men in England—I will not say all—will beat us in competition with other countries unless we can carry on this temperance crusade to a successful termination. I have been too much indebted to the integrity and perseverance and ability of English working men, to utter a word that would seem to savour of want of confidence in them; but you may depend upon it, that unless they conquer this tendency they will be beaten in the race. This means something very serious indeed, because we manufacture enormously more than we consume in England, and have, therefore, to find markets for our products in different parts of the world. In the competition, which is growing very severe—not from France, Switzerland, Saxony, or other European countries, but from the United States—we may depend upon it, unless we can look out with confidence on this subject a very serious future lies before us. It is calculated that the wages of the working men of England amount to £30,000,000 a year. Now, although I do not pretend to say that this first working day is wasted by all English workmen, or perhaps by half, still it has been calculated that by the appropriation of Monday little short of £25,000,000 or £30,000,000 are wasted by the working classes. I should be thankful to see all that money transferred to the wives at home. The statement is often made that the working man occupies an inferior dwelling, and that he drinks because of this. I contend that it is all the other way; he inhabits an inferior dwelling because he drinks. If, instead of spending money in the public-house, the working man gave the amount to his wife, he might double the comfort of his home, and raise himself in the social scale.

Keeping to the commercial aspect of the question, I would refer with extreme grief and dissatisfaction to the system of "treating" by agents and tradesmen, as a means of promoting their business. It is immoral and demoralising. Young men are tempted from the City warehouses—and this is a fact to which I can well testify—to go sometimes to the houses of inferior agents, and are induced to buy goods, because they are "treated" in that way. There are two evils arising from this. These young men are lowered in their own estimation, because they are led to purchase goods which they know are not so good as could be got elsewhere; and they are encouraged in a self-indulgence which often results in the loss of their situation, and their deterioration in every respect. I am thankful to know that a custom against which I raised a respectful protest thirty years ago—the custom that was observed in commercial rooms in hotels in respect to dining—is wonderfully improved. Those who enter upon the important and responsible life of commercial travellers, assuming the performance of important duties, used to find themselves at the commercial table in hotels, under the necessity of taking their share of a certain amount of wine, as a condition of having a much better dinner than was otherwise obtainable at the same price. I believe that custom is almost entirely changed, and that there is now perfect freedom in that respect.

Mr. Morley entreated every one who had not yet abstained to do so before the battle was over, so as to take a share in the great conflict. He could not sit down, he said, without referring to a little Bill in which he was very much interested—a Bill to stop the payment of wages in public-houses. It had been passed through the House of Lords twice and had been put into his hands, supported by his friends, Mr. Broadhurst and Mr. Burt, who knew thoroughly the habits and the wants of the working people. He had been attacked a good deal in private and anonymous letters, in which it was stated that the working man did not want this Bill. He contended that if the custom did not exist the Bill would do no harm, and if it did exist then the Bill ought to be passed, in order that men might not be forced against their will to go to the public-house to receive their wages. He could not conceive that a working man could have a feeling other than that he was entitled to the protection which this Bill would give. It was a satisfactory thing to know that the House of Commons was in thorough sympathy with the measure, but they were blocked by a handful of men who were an absolute nuisance in the House; still, the Government would, no doubt, devise some means by which to secure the passing of this and other needful measures.

ADDRESS BY MR. WILLIAM NOBLE.

At the commencement Mr. Noble read a long letter from a friend, with whom he was associated in boyhood, and who is now connected with a large City firm, setting forth the evils of the drinking customs amongst commercial men, and wishing that much good might result from ventilating publicly this particular phase of the drink question. One principle by which I stand, he continued, was illustrated by Alderman Lusk years ago when he was trying a woman for stealing milk cans. Turning to another woman who was giving evidence, the Alderman said, "Do you ever say your prayers?" The witness bowed, and said, "Yes, your worship." "Do you ever repeat the Lord's prayer?" "Yes, your worship." "Well, do you know that in that prayer you have these words, 'lead us not into temptation'?" "Yes, your worship." "Then what right have you to tempt your neighbours to steal your milk cans?" The Alderman dismissed the case, and gave the prisoner 2s. to help her on her way. If every Christian man and woman in Exeter Hall to-night, and in the country, will only put this doctrine into practice in reference to drink, and say, "I have no right in view of eternity, I have no right when I come to consider that alcohol is an insidious poison, to put a temptation in the way of my fellow-men by offering to them intoxicating liquors," the land will soon be free of this curse. I can remember the time when in business I took my parcel of samples under my arm and tried to get orders. At times I was very successful, but I would tell these young men whom I see before me, that wine and billiards beat me. Drink is not the only curse to-day. There are billiard boards underground and above ground in this great city, and young men are thus being led into the outer circle of the fearful whirlpool which has engulfed so many in the past. I would say to you as one who loves your souls, "Drop the billiard cue." Or if you will have billiards, see to it that you do not go through the public-house to get to the billiard-board.

The Chairman has very wisely said that we do not go so far as to say that a man commits a crime by drinking a glass of wine, but there are hundreds and thousands of men in the City of London who have been led astray by taking that glass, and it is the doctrine of the Blue Ribbon Mission not to have anything to do with it. Duty is ours, not results, in this question. I would ask in great earnestness, every man and woman in this building in the name of God—for strength without Him is very weak indeed—in the name of that dear Saviour who brought peace and joy into this world, to join us in the resolve to devote the future of our lives to the abolition of the drinking customs of society.

ADDRESS BY REV. CANON BARKER.

In the course of my travels—and they have not been few—throughout the length and breadth of England, I have noticed in stopping at hotels, where I have sometimes been led to be present in the commercial room, that there has been a great consumption of strong drink. When I was informed that commercial travellers were expected to purchase the strong drink "for the good of the house" in which they stayed, it struck me as most unfair to a body of men who are not perhaps the wealthiest in the world, and to whom money is not less valuable than it is to most other members of the community. Another point that strikes me is this, that if a man is not able to buy or sell before consuming some strong drink he will not be the better able after he has taken it. For my own part, when I have to do anything that requires judgment and discrimination I prefer having a clear head, and as far as my experience goes, I have not discovered that alcohol has any quality for clearing the brain. I have generally found that it has the effect of muddling it. Therefore I cannot see what sensible purpose commercial men have in undertaking to buy or sell under the influence of strong drink.

There is another reason worth consideration why it should not be taken, and that is, that many people in consequence of being obliged to carry on their business under such conditions, that is to say, being often sorely tempted and led astray from the path of strict temperance, end by becoming absolute drunkards. We are all mortal, and very few persons can drink without suffering from it sooner or later. I would like to know the statistics with regard to drunken commercial travellers. I would like to know how many such men have lost their situations in consequence of intemperance. I would also like to know how many bad bergains have been struck when men have had their brains confused with strong drink. It would be interesting, too, to know how many persons have bought bad articles which they would not have bought unless they had been under the influence of strong drink. The speaker then pointed out the striking analogy between the first Napoleon and the prominent leaders of the Blue Ribbon Mission, in their power to make men rise up around them as soldiers in their several spheres. When the history of the nineteenth century came to be written he would make bold to say that the achievements, moral, social, and religious, won by the Blue Ribbon movement, would stand out in glorious and splendid relief as a great and religious movement of this active and philanthropic age.

TUESDAY EVENING, MAY 29.

Another full house rewarded the hopes of the promoters of this effort to forward the good cause. Mr. J. H. Tritton presided over the enthusiastic assembly. An unexpected interest was given to the proceedings by the sweet and expressive strains of Mrs. Richards, Mr. Murphy's eldest daughter, who rendered the first hymn in "Gospel Temperance Songs," "How can I but love Him?" with much feeling and effect. The topic for the evening was

The Wrongs Inflicted Upon Women.

ADDRESS BY THE CHAIRMAN.

After referring to the wonderful extent of the present movement on behalf of Temperance, Mr. Tritton said: The aspect of the question that particularly engages our attention this evening is one of supreme importance. It is a vast subject and one that needs the artis t hand and the most eloquent speech of the orator to do it justice. It is sometimes said of men who speak on temperance platforms that they use intemperate language. God deliver us from that; but when we see the blackness of that against which we are testifying we are constrained to speak as we feel. If I had had the drafting of this evening's topic I think that in place of the word "inflicted" perhaps I would have used the stronger word heaped upon women.

The subject naturally divides itself into two branches, to which I can only just refer. There are wrongs personal and relative. Who does not know something of the personal wrongs inflicted on women by the use of strong drink? I ask you whether, supposing intoxicants were out of existence at this moment, we could see in our city, or many other cities, such sights, or hear such sounds, as daily greet our eyes and ears in the main thoroughfares of all our large cities and particularly in London? Were it not for the use of intoxicants there would be no such pandemonium possible as is enacted in our streets. But the relative wrongs inflicted on women by the use of this drink far exceed those that are merely personal. Who does not know of a mother's heart that aches and throbs as she listens for the return of a son—awake when all others are hushed in sleep? Who does not know something of the horror she experiences as she hears the unsteady steps of that son upon the stairs? How few families or households in which there is not some one who has succumbed to the power of this terrible evil? In the case of every drunkard is there not some womanly heart that is broken, or breaking, because of this thing? When we think of all this misery our hearts are stirred, and we long to do all we can to remedy the awful wrongs that are being heaped upon the women of our land. We have almost canonised those who in other days have gone forth to remedy some social wrong, and have succeeded. We honour Howard for his labours for the amelioration of prison treatment throughout Europe, and we honour those brave men who toiled day and night that slavery might be abolished wherever the English flag was hoisted. Our Queen has recognised the bravery and merits of those nursing sisters who care for the wounded on the battle-field. Has the time not come when we shall band ourselves together, sisters and brethren, in a united struggle against intemperance, that we may reap the magnificent reward of seeing England sober and England free?

ADDRESS BY REV. J. R. WOOD,

OF HOLLOWAY.

I think in all the list of subjects for the week, there is none of greater moment than that which engages us now. In the form in which it is put it assumes that which nobody here will be inclined to dispute—that the use of intoxicating drinks may, and very often does, pass into the abuse. Closely connected with the use of these drinks, and almost inseparable from it, there is a constant danger. Whatever may be said in praise of moderation—and even now there are not lacking men who will sound its praises—it certainly cannot be said for it that it is in all cases a safe practice. The other day I took up a pamphlet issued by the United Kingdom Alliance, entitled "The effects of the Traffic in Strong Drink." There are in it 35 pages, in double columns of closely printed matter; and five of these are devoted to a single subject—"Assaults upon women." I looked through several paragraphs of these pages, and I confess that as I read I sickened; I felt that along that line at any rate it could not be my province to go to-night. The catalogue of ills so inflicted is too dark and too dreadful for me to dwell upon. Only let us remember that "this fatal process of brute making," as Hugh Miller called it, is one that constantly goes on even in this Christian England. Although we do not open these dark chambers, let us not forget that they exist, and that many of our English mothers and children are locked up in them to-night.

Passing from the region of the police-court, and the coroner's inquest, and the newspaper Press, I should rather like to touch on another part of the subject. Half of the tale of the wrongs inflicted upon women by this evil will never be told; it is purposely hidden away. It is suffered with an uncomplaining patience that reminds one of the patience of the Celestial throne. I should like to call special attention to-night to the sorrows and sufferings of those who will never speak of their own sorrows and sufferings, which are perhaps keener and deeper than some of those that take a more tragic hold upon the imagination. I dare say most of the speakers will be dealing with facts that have come within their own knowledge, and I may be forgiven if I notice some such facts in illustration of the sufferings which I have indicated.

I visited, to-day, a godly widow. As her pastor, I have watched her struggles through the three years of her widowhood. During that time she has been struggling to bring her family up in something like respectability. Three years ago there was smitten from her side her husband and help-meet. She owed that death and all the sad consequences that have followed to strong drink. I never look upon her sorrows, or come into sympathetic contact with her sufferings, but I remember that the drink demon was at the back of it all. Not that her husband drank himself; but, in a fit of drunken frenzy, a neighbour suddenly took his life. She has been left alone in the world, to face the difficulties of life with her family. It was the drink that deprived her of the strong and manly helpfulness which God had given her. That is one instance of silent suffering that would never get into the papers; and how many such cases there are everywhere!

I was paying a visit awhile ago, and as I sat talking with my friend a lady was introduced, past middle life, and pleasant in bearing and manner. I had some slight recollection of her some thirty years ago. As she came into the room I saw that she was dressed in deep mourning. When I knew her she was then the young mother of a family of five boys and girls of great promise. Now there were the lines of care and thought and suppressed grief. She struggled bravely to enter upon the ordinary topics of conversation, and when she had left the room my friend said, "She has just lost her eldest son. Drink was the cause of his death." There was a Christian mother, far advanced in life, who had to follow in hopeless sorrow to the grave a son who for years had been her pride, her hope, and her joy. Nobody would ever hear of that kind of sorrow and suffering; of the eclipse of hope, and the laceration of love she has to bear, and which by this Gospel Temperance movement we desire most heartily to relieve and to comfort. Why, there are lives that are a prolonged martyrdom; there is no other phrase that can describe them. If this martyrdom were demanded by Christ or by duty, I think that on this platform we should thank God for those who had the heart and the courage to endure it. My soul was thrilled the other day when I heard of a brave young missionary who had succumbed to disease in the Cameroons. He had been in the Mission field little more than twelve months. Before he went out his college tutor was pointing out the special dangers of the work in Africa. Said this young Christian hero: "Sir, you know that when a bridge is being built a good deal of the material goes into the foundation; it is buried out of sight, and nobody thinks much about it. If Christ wants my life for such a purpose I will not keep it back." Christ did require his life. It has gone into the foundation of missionary work in Western Africa, and we thank God that his Church in these days can raise up such men. But the sacrifices of which we are specially thinking—the sufferings of living women—are not sufferings that are demanded by Christ. They come out of sinful indulgence; and I protest against their existence.

Proceeding to notice some circumstances that were an aggravation of the wrongs inflicted on women, Mr. Wood remarked that there is in life an ascending scale of value. Woman's nature is the highest and noblest of all. The poet has expressed it:—

"So much nearer God—Woman!"

In the large loving faculty, in the quick perceptive faculty, in the keen, incisive moral faculty, woman's nature stands highest, and the man who inflicts any wrong upon her aggravates the wrong by reason of the one upon whom he inflicts it. We plead, then, to-night for our mothers; and what mothers some of us have had? We plead for our wives; for the best man would not be half so good as he is but for his wife. We plead for our sisters; and how some of us have reason to thank God for what they have been to us! When I think of the close relation which the woman sustains to the man, I feel that any man who inflicts wrong upon woman aggravates it by the fact of the closeness of their relationship. Mr. Wood closed his admirable address by quoting two mottoes from a Homily by John Foster, on "Better is the end of a thing than the beginning of it." "Just persevere" is what we say to ourselves in this Gospel Temperance crusade; "Reform" is the message we bring to those who have not yet joined our ranks.

ADDRESS BY REV. S. STUBBS.

OF PENTONVILLE.

Very prevalent are the personal evils from which women suffer through the use of intoxicants; they meet us continually. Some years ago I was living in the best road of a certain neighbourhood; and on either side of me the lady of the house was killing herself with drink. But this phase of the evil is a comparatively new one. In the oldest Book within the reach of most of us—the Bible—we have, so far as I can remember, no instance of a drunken woman. When one was charged with being drunken, she resisted the insinuation: "Count not thine handmaid for a daughter of Belial" (1 Sam. i. 16). The report issued by the House of Lords Committee three years ago contains this statement: "That the increase of female intemperance is of so gigantic a nature, and so rapid, as to be a new source of disgrace and evil."

It is natural, therefore, for us to consider what is the probable cause of this. Undoubtedly the confectioner's licence, which is altogether of modern growth, supplies facilities for one class of the community, and the shopkeeper's licence supplies opportunity for another, for the more dangerous form of consumption, in the boudoir and the bedroom. Statistics sometimes mislead us, but they are, at times, of such a character that their teaching cannot be mistaken. As, for instance, this fact, that in Manchester, thirty years ago, the number of women brought up before the magistrates for drinking was annually on an average 250; at present the average is 2000! Considering the prevalence of this evil I doubt whether the Christian poet could have written in this century what he wrote in the last:—

"Can a woman's tender care Cease toward the child she bare?"

The evil effects of parental drinking upon the children are most marked. A drunken mother means to the child the imbibing of alcohol with every portion of its early food. Go into the pawnbroker's shop, and there you see a row of little shoes. You conclude that they are the shoes of the children of drunkards; and so they are. But they are not the shoes of the children of a drunken father, so much as of a drunken mother. The last thing a drunken man will sell to obtain drink is his children's clothing; but they are the first thing that a drunken mother will part with.

In speaking of the wrongs inflicted on women by others, I will not refer to any terrible list of assaults, but to that which is less palpable to the world, though equally sad. In the earliest period of life the more delicate organism of the female child suffers more from the hereditary taint than that of the male. While the boy is at play the little girl is in the house, and more conscious of the misery of a drunkard's home. Then in domestic service, what sin and trouble do they become acquainted with, from the evils and temptations presented by an intemperance not their own. When the time comes for settling it may well be said that the woman's sins are those that "go beforehand,"—"evident" is the revised reading. In the case of a man they "follow after." The woman often finds out, too late, that she has a drunkard for a husband. Some of the sorrows of a wife I cannot allude to, but they should be imagined by those who have any thought, as most have, of entering "the holy estate," if only to make them very cautious, and to draw forth, it may be, their sympathy and prayers. What can a drunkard's wife know of manly help and comfort—one of the things for which, in God's grace and mercy, marriage was instituted. What hope can a mother have that her children will be religiously and virtuously brought up? A drunken husband means the spending of a large proportion of that which he earns—some say one-tenth. I should say one-sixth. That means a home unhealthy, food unsuitable, clothing insufficient. It means too often the wife going out to work, instead of being "a keeper at home," and a worker at home. That, in turn, means the daughter kept at home to help, when she should be receiving her education.

More than that, it means sickness. Dr. Andrew Clark stated in a lecture, two years ago, that among his patients in a London Hospital seventy out of every hundred were brought there by intoxicating drink. This means sorrow and trial in the home, and an appeal to the charitable, thereby taking from that which should go to the widow and the orphan. This drink also means premature death, as our insurance and other statistics of mortality amply prove. Not only does it mean sickness and death, but crime. I had to spend five hours every day last week in one of our largest metropolitan prisons. I had personal converse with 100 prisoners, and I found that twenty-five out of the hundred were there directly through the use of intoxicating drink. Another twenty-five were there indirectly from the same cause, while another twenty-five were there through dishonesty, committed probably to satisfy their craving for the drink. That shows seventy-five per cent. of our criminals to be the result of this evil; others place the proportion as high as eighty or ninety per cent. We are face to face with a habit which, as our Premier has said, brings on the human race evils greater than the combined evils of war, pestilence, and famine. I appeal to every woman who has not yet done so to join this movement. There are some women even with drunken husbands who cannot be induced to give up their glass. I appeal to men—to the chivalry that is inherent in every right-minded man, and to the Christianity that furnishes the highest motive of all. As Christ loved the Church and gave Himself for it, so ought men to love their wives and think nothing to be a sacrifice that will promote their happiness and comfort.

ADDRESS BY REV. W. STOTT,

OF ST. JOHN'S WOOD.

After a spirited defence of the gentler sex from the flippant speech of some who would place them on a lower level than the male portion of the community, Mr. Stott said that neither Jesus Christ nor his apostles ever put woman in a secondary position. I hope the time is coming, he said, when our sisters will take a more prominent part in this great movement than they have yet done. Some of us have to come, almost daily, in direct contact with this fearful evil, which for the last forty years has been sweeping like a tornado through England. We have not been able in the past to get men in Parliament or in the pulpit to wake up to the greatness and extent of this evil. But things are changing. Our cause is rising—50,000 recruits a week—4,500,000 badges of blue. What is the result? In December last, in a single insurance office, a friend of mine told me that he actually gave out policies to the tune of £40,000 among working men.

This "wrong" inflicted on woman, of which we are to speak, is, first of all, a physical one. If there is anything in this world calculated to stamp out the fair image of Jehovah from the woman it is the accursed drink. If there is anything that will shorten human life, which may be bright, and beautiful, and buoyant, and useful, and philanthropic, and God-fearing, living in the enjoyment of heaven's smile now, and having the glorious prospect of life beyond the grave—nothing can more effectually curse, and blight, and wither that fair prospect of womanhood than the drink.

Then there are social wrongs. We do not properly gauge the enormity of the social wrong inflicted upon women through this curse. It does not always appear in a moment. A little while ago I met a man in Lancashire. He came up to me with a hand ready to grip mine and said, "Do you know me?" "Upon my word, I don't." "Well, I am Mr. W——. God bless you; it was through your instrumentality that I signed the pledge." I promised I would go and see him, when he said, "We won't be ready for you for three weeks." "What do you mean?" He replied, "I have got a large amount of work to undo. I have to get my silver watch that was presented to me by the factory hands where I worked, but which I put in pawn. My wife's best silk dress and a lot of the children's things have vanished in the same way, and all the furniture has gone. I should be ashamed to have you come and visit us now, for there is not a chair." I went to the house in about a fortnight and the wife came to the door. I smiled and she smiled, and then put her hand to her mouth. She said, "You see I have lost my teeth." "How did you come to lose them?" As she went away the husband interposed and said: "She is too good-natured to tell you. I came home one Saturday after having spent all my week's earnings. I never brought her home more than 7s. a week out of £3 10s.; yet I expected her to have a chop always ready for me on Saturday afternoons. Because everything was not as I had expected it I struck her on the face—God forgive me—and knocked out her teeth. Oh, sir, God bless you; we will have happy days yet." I found that there were now in the house a chest of drawers, and half a dozen chairs. One of the daughters was busy kneading dough, to make a pudding, while another was washing the floor. A fortnight after, when going to my chapel, I met two little girls having hold of each other's hands. They told me they were Mr. W.'s children; they were going to school. Said the smallest one, "I have got a new frock, and it has got a pocket in it." Bless the dear little thing! she never knew before what it was to have a pocket; if she had there would have been nothing to put in it. But the best is to come. In less than six months I gave the right hand of church-fellowship to this man and his wife. Only in eternity shall we know the extent of the social wrongs that this drink inflicts on women, from the lady with the jewelled hand down to the poorest working woman.

But there is also a spiritual wrong. I have been pastor of one church close on twenty-one years, through the mercy of God, and I say here, with humbling and with pain in my soul, that we have had to turn out of fellowship—I thank God not a large number—but more women than men; it has been three to one. In every case it has been through the drink. In some cases they were servants. If there be any here who employ servants, let me speak a word to them. You pay them, say, £18 a year "and their beer," as if they could neither scrub a floor or bake a pudding without the beer. A greater delusion was never imagined. Yet some of these servants, strange to say, because the missus says it, think it must be true; therefore they drink the beer, whether they like it or not. Oh, I beseech you, be careful! you are your sister's keeper. Though you may have the moral courage and self-possession to say "No," and to turn your back upon it, that is no proof that your next neighbour can do it. In this work we uplift the Bible, and Christ higher than the Bible; He is our talisman. In his strength we fight, and by the blood of the Cross we will conquer.

ADDRESS BY MR. T. E. MURPHY.

Mr. Murphy said that from lack of experience he did not feel he could do justice to the subject for the evening. As a young man, he would say that if a son desired to honour his mother he would keep out of the public-house. Having quoted the saying,—

"When the wine is in the can the wit is in the man,
When the wine is in the man the wit is in the can,"

the speaker gave a humorous account of a young man's experiences after attending a dinner party where the tables were loaded with wines, of which he had taken "a little too much." He went successively into several trains that were not going in the right direction for him, and on being apprised of the fact he always said, "Very well, I will get out." At last he entered a train in which a person asked him if he knew where he was going, when he replied "I am going to Manchester." "No, sir, you are going to ruin." "All right! Wrong train again! I'll get out." That is a specimen, he said, of the influence that drink has upon a young man. Whilst we laugh, it is a sad thing to think that a young man, made in the image of God, should thus "put an enemy into his mouth to steal away his brains," and make himself the laughing-stock of all around. I appeal to the young men before me to be true to themselves, and then they cannot be false to any man. People say they do not want to wear the blue ribbon. Well, I had rather be laughed at for wearing a blue ribbon than for wearing a red nose. The publican hangs out his sign, which says, "I sell intoxicants." I wear the blue badge to intimate that "I do not buy any." The wearing of the badge has a wonderful effect on those who are engaged in the traffic; it does not encourage them much. They come to the conclusion that people are becoming sober—that total abstinence is rising; and, as it rises, the traffic goes down. It cannot go down too soon. When I was in Kendal, the Mayor of the town came out boldly and put on the ribbon; that act shook the town, and during the Mission about half the population put on the badge of blue. The legitimate trade of the place increased as the publichouse business went down. A milkman in the town signed the pledge. He was in the habit of serving a publican with milk. When he called one day, the publican said: "Have you got the blue ribbon too?" "Yes, I have." "Well, you need not leave any more milk here." "Very good, sir; there are about 5000 people in the town who are wearing the ribbon, and if they cannot take what milk I have got, I will drink it myself!" The result was that the milkman could not supply the demand.

I do not say that it is a sin to take a glass of beer or wine; but, as a Christian man, my influence for good is much greater if I am an abstainer than if I am a moderate drinker. It needs no argument to prove that this drink makes my brother to offend. Therefore, I will deny myself for my brother's sake. God will honour those who act up to this principle. There are many who quote Paul's prescription to Timothy as an excuse for indulgence; when the fact is, their name is not Timothy, and the prescription does not apply to them at all. It seems to me that if Christ has died to save us, we ought to do something to advance his cause. I plead for the unhappy victims of the drink-curse—the little waifs of the city. I was walking down Fleet-street this afternoon and I noticed in an alley three or four little children huddled up together, and gnawing at a crust of dry bread. I said to myself, "The drink is responsible for that." But who is responsible for the drink? The people. They are the Government. Let them sweep the evil thing away. God help us in this great conflict. Mr. Murphy closed his stirring speech by some personal reminiscences as to the sufferings his father and the family had endured in bygone days through the fell power of intoxicating liquor.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, MAY 30.

The meeting, which was again a large one, was opened with the singing of a hymn, after which Mr. Francis Murphy read Psalm i., and Mr. Oscar Snelling, of Swansea, offered prayer Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard presided.

The Influence of Drink upon the Working Man—His Person, Family, and Home.

ADDRESS BY THE CHAIRMAN.

I think we may all congratulate ourselves upon gathering together on such an auspicious evening, when we can rejoice over the fact which has just been announced to us, that the second reading of the Bill for promoting Sunday closing in the county of Durham has just been passed by the House of Commons by the satisfactory majority of 96. (Loud and prolonged applause.) At the same time a monster petition, which required no less than the united energies and efforts of three hon. members to carry it, was presented at the bar of the House in favour of Sunday closing in general. But while we have cause to rejoice in these and other efforts that are being apparently crowned with success, we must remember that there is a great deal to do, and a very short time in which to do it. So with the view of carrying out our work to-night we must proceed immediately to consider the subject which is before us in our programme. You will doubtless have seen that it is "The influence of drink upon the working man—his person, his family, and his home."

Now I suppose that many of our eloquent speakers here will immediately claim that they are entitled to the name of "working man," and, consequently, they doubtless will be able to give us their experience, as well as tell us many a lamentable tale of the misery and woe that are brought more particularly upon what we know as the working men of our land. Whilst seeking to find a remedy for their trials, we should not forget the women that were spoken about last night, and also the children. When the evil of drink gets into the working man's home, the wife and children must suffer as he does. Then we shall have to consider not only what the evil really is, but how to prevent it; and I am quite sure we should come to this conclusion, that "prevention is better than cure." We must look round for many remedies, and we may suggest many, but I believe the first remedy that we can bring to the working man is the pure and simple glad tidings of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Having brought that to bear upon his daily life and upon the daily life of his wife and children, we shall find him more ready to listen to what we believe is the fearful curse of drink. The result must be that total abstinence will be the course he must adopt. We have cause to congratulate ourselves that we are met to consider this subject in this hall of the Young Men's Christian Association. I venture to say advisedly, as one interested in these Associations, that every Branch should take up this matter with an undaunted front, and endeavour to strike at the root of this fearful evil that is impregnating the land.

Having brought the Gospel to the working man and led him to see the advantages of abstinence, I think our next step will be to try and educate those who very much need education upon this subject. I am very sorry to believe that the doctors are comparatively ignorant upon this subject. It is not long since I met with a poor man who had almost drunk himself into one of "Her Majesty's hotels," with all his family to follow him. He was induced to take the pledge, which he maintained for about twelve months, and secured a good position. He was a clever man and had every prospect of advancing in his profession, but, alas! illness overtook him, and the doctor recommended him "strengthening medicine" in the shape of some alcoholic beverage. The usual result followed, and he is now drinking himself into a drunkard's grave, and his family are being brought to ruin. So I say, let us try and educate even the doctors, and ask God to bless the literary productions that have come from the pens of Dr. Richardson and very many others.

The choir and the audience having sung "Yield not to temptation," the Chairman said he was desired to state that the petition to the House of Commons for Sunday closing by the British Women's Temperance Association contained over 208,000 names, and that sent to the House of Lords 183,000 names. The Earl of Aberdeen had undertaken to present the latter.

ADDRESS BY REV. CHARLES SPURGEON,

OF GREENWICH.

I feel I cannot speak much about "the influence of drink upon the working man, his person, his family, and his home." Not because I have not seen, and heard, and smelt the effects of drink, for these three senses have told me that it is the greatest evil that exists in the present day. My lack of knowledge must be from want of lengthy experience, though still as God has given me eyes and ears I have sought to use them both, and thereby I have often looked upon the hideous scenes, and heard some of the hideous cries, that come from the consequences of drink. As I looked at the subject, I thought. Take away the first part, "the influence of drink," and you will have a working man, a person, a family, and a home. Given the first half, "the influence of drink," and you have done away with the latter half, "the working man, his person, his family, his home." Consequently, you know well that I can only add to-night facts to facts.

Taking the theme as I find it, I say, first of all, that the influence of drink brings no work. Consequently we have done with one part of a word in our subject—work-ing man. It was only as I left home I saw a young fellow, about my own size and age, walking down the street in Greenwich. He took two or three steps, and then said, "Hard up—many miles—from Manchester." He took three more steps, and said, "Hard up—many miles—from Manchester." And so he went along the street—that his only text, and that his only sermon. I thought: "he is not a working man. Nine chances to ten drink brought him to that." He had only a week previously passed down that same street, and I had heard him singing, in a droning fashion:—

"There is a fountain filled with blood."

I thought, Brother, if you would plunge into it you would find that coming from the crimson tide there would be healing. Christ has wrought out for you a grand work of salvation, and soon your hands would find labour to do, because your heart would be washed from the crime of drink. He is only a sample of hordes of similar beings. What speak we, then, for? It is that you and I, knowing that drink will take away work from the working man, should be working men, so as to rescue them from this bondage, and bring them into liberty. What comes with no work? Untold misery, blasphemies, and oaths. Very seldom the intemperate will arouse themselves, but, peradventure, will heap opprobrium upon their Creator, and blame Him for what they are forgetting, that He never made a drunkard. He has always given us the ways of righteousness wherein to walk, and not upon those hard stony paths of sin and unrighteousness.

Then I come to the influence of drink upon the man, and I say, it will make a man no man. I never entered the doors of a gin-palace. Let me, however, in fancy take you inside one of those hell-houses—for here it is that souls are verily damned. I ask you to observe that man who is not strong enough to stand up. Do you call him a man when the demon of drink has got hold of him? Is he not unmanned? We have to answer again in the affirmative. We know that the nerve, the muscle, the sinew, the pluck, the courage, that make a man a man—that energy which God has given him, has all been drained out of him as he has been draining all out of the pot and out of the cup. I tell you with such a spirit—alas! that that name has been given to the liquor which is drunk by the myriads—he is brought down lower even than the beasts. And yet, why stand we here? For this reason—that we may preach to them the more acceptable gift, that we may bring to the working man something that shall make him more of a man; for until the Holy Ghost comes within the soul of a man he is not a man. Away with the alcoholic spirit, and give us more of God's spirit in the heart. Then we shall find men and women as they should be, and the little children born to them as little men and women who shall grow up to become great and grand Gospel temperance workers too, because God has saved them.

May I be allowed to change my next subject? I say that the influence of drink will cause you never to find "a purse-on (person) a man." (Laughter.) If you go to a working man given over to the influence of drink, you will never find a "purse-on." You will often find his hands in his pockets; and why? Because there is nothing else there. And if you address him outside a public-house as he is loafing about, feeling the want of bread—for he hasn't any other "loaf" at all—ask why he is outside. He will say, "If I had twopence I should be inside." He never spoke a truer word in his life! his only "till" being the treasure-till of the publican inside. He never deposits at any other than the place where he gets drink. Consequently we find him penniless, and very often knocking at our door. I have learned to know their knock. They are men who stink of drink. We see drink in them, and consequently we can see no cash. They go and spend all they have—so my third influence of drink is this, that the "purse-on" is done away with. He has no money to buy anything for his family. It is hard enough in these days to get an honest livelihood. It is hard enough in these days to make both ends meet, but you never will with the gap of drink between. They say "extremes meet," but I tell you, working men, in your extremity you will never find both ends meet, for the more you drink the more you will drink. Drink is that which seizes the soul and takes all from it until both soul and body are lost.

What about the family? Ah! methinks now if I had a woman's heart and a woman's tongue, I could speak more tenderly than I do. It wants such a fine chord as is to be found within the heart of a wife, such tender strings as may vibrate within a mother's soul, really to speak to the working man about the evils of drink in the family. Yet, did I hear it said that women drink? Did I hear it muttered that mothers drink? Alas! it is too true. Last Monday evening after one of the brightest and happiest anniversaries in connection with the Sunday-school in my own church, as I was just leaving, a man came to my vestry door whom I had seen before when visiting a little lad who seeks admission to my father's Orphan Home. He was the boy's uncle. Tears were running down his face, and I could see anxiety pictured in every feature, and as he bared his arm he said, "I have come from my wife—what am I to do?" She had been scratching and biting him, and he had tried to keep her off with his arm. "It's all drink. I'm afraid of the boy's life—he's outside." I said, "I don't know what I can do for you. I have put your case before the Orphanage, and the little lad will be taken in as soon as possible if there is any chance." "I have offered (he said) to take her and sign the pledge with her, but she won't." I said, "You may do all you can, but have you tried prayer?" "Pray to God—I'm tired of it;" and that is how he looked in my face, with a look of despair as if everything had gone from him. What is the result? If the husband takes to drinking don't be surprised if the wife does. She has a bad example, and it is easier to follow a bad example than a good. The family is utterly ruined, and the home is broken into by this dreadful influence of drink.

I come to my last word; and that is, What about the home of the drunkard? Have you ever been inside one? I went inside the home I have just named. I do not think I would give a sixpence for all I saw in it. Oh, the poverty and destitution portrayed there, and all because there was a drinking wife! What about the homes of this England of ours? Are they to be bettered? By God's help we will seek that they shall; and, as far as we are able, we will do our little best. After all, it is not always these great meetings that push on the cause of temperance; it is individual enterprise. It is the one speaking to another, and that one speaking to a third. When old St. Paul's was pulled down to make room for the present St. Paul's, Sir Christopher Wren came across a big piece of old wall of a very formidable character. He gave orders for a battering-ram to be prepared. They poohpoohed the idea, and began to laugh at it. It, however, went away, day after day, against the wall. Not so much as a stone budged, or a piece of mortar cracked, until on the fourth day, about twelve o'clock, bang went the old ram, and a crack was seen from the top to the bottom. Everybody was looking for the next blow, when with a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether, crash went the wall into a thousand pieces! The wiseacres held up their hands, and said, "Dear me, what a big blow that was to be sure!" It was not that particular blow that did it, for that was probably the most easy of all; the succession of blows that preceded it had prepared it for the final result. And if you and I can only strike a blow for God's sake and for the sake of the world, may God just take us and hurl us both against this wall of drink. If we are not in at its final crash we shall have at least made some contribution towards the grand result. Our reward should surely come, for He is the righteous One who has to give all the honours in the Last Grand Day.

Let us then boldly and steadfastly, with our trust fixed in Jehovah, still pursue the right course. God is with us. By Him who died on Calvary we will stem the tide and influence of drink, and by his omnipotent saving power there shall yet be working men with families and with homes calling Him blessed for evermore. Methinks that to-night is the point of divergence with some of you. Brother working men—and I worked hard when I was only about seventeen in preaching—as a working man speaking to working men, I beseech you to drop your drop of drink for God's sake and your own.

ADDRESS BY MR. JOHN W. KIRTON,

AUTHOR OF "BUY YOUR OWN CHERRIES."

We are naturally led to ask, "Is the influence of intoxicating drinks good or bad upon the working man, his family, and his home?" It is sometimes wise to go back to the beginning of things; to trace, if we can, the reason of things. I have come to the conclusion that if we adopt this course with reference to drink we shall not be long in coming to the conclusion that the influence of drink is bad at the beginning, bad in the middle, and even worse in the end, so long as it continues. And this is no accident. It must be so from the very nature of the drink itself, because in the first place it is delusive in its character. The best of Books says, "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whoso is deceived thereby is not wise." It is delusive in two or three ways I charge intoxicating drinks, in the first place, with being a seducer. It always tempts people to evil. If a man wants to thrash his wife he says, "You only wait till I get a glass or two in me and I'll let you see." It will prime a man to do what in his sober moments he never would think of doing. If you want to swear, if you, young women, want to indulge in unchaste thoughts, take intoxicating drink, and it will help you. Therefore, if we are wise, we should have nothing to do with it.

It is a firebrand, inflaming the passions, and exciting to that which is evil. Strong drink strengthens the motive power to do wrong, and at the same time weakens the inclination to do right. One of the earliest things I met with in my experience of this movement was a working man getting up and saying he had been a teetotaler so many years, and he could do anything. But there was a man in the body of the meeting who cried out, "You can't?" "I can," he said. "You can't, Jack; for when you used to drink you used to thrash your wife two or three times a week. Can you do that without drink?" "No, ladies and gentlemen," said the man, "I beg to apologise. I ought to have said I can do anything that ought to be done, without intoxicating drinks."

Finally, it is a traitor entering into any person's home, because it does not stay its deadly hand anywhere. It betrays our best friends. I challenge any man or woman to produce a fact which will confirm this position—that the constant use of intoxicating drink in the home has ever made a better husband, a better wife, a better child. You never knew a man made a better husband, or a woman a better wife, or a child more obedient, by going to the public-house two or three nights a week. You know they are constantly being made worse; and therefore if we have common sense, apart from the religion of this Book, we ought to say, God helping us, we will drive out the traitor and save the homes of the people from being destroyed.

Further, this influence is not only delusive but dangerous, and therefore evil. I do not hesitate to say that the use of intoxicating drink is dangerous at all times, in all places, and to all people. If there is a virtue about drink it is this: it is no respecter of persons. It does not stay with the working man, but goes up into high places. I could take you into churches of all denominations, and pick you out cases where strong drink has influenced the people there, not for good, but for evil. I could tell you the history of men who have stood upon this very platform, preaching the Gospel and speaking on behalf of Missions, who have been cursed and ruined by this terrible drink—men with whom I have had to do myself; and therefore I say to-night, this drink is an evil because it is a dangerous thing. It has the tyranny of a despot over those it controls, because it has the spell of a fiend when it once attaches itself to their highest nature, and becomes as the hold of a giant, so that nothing but the Divine grace will enable a man to snap the bonds when once he becomes its victim. An old American temperance ditty says:—

"Write it underneath your feet,
Up and down the busy street,
Write it for the great and small,
In palace, cottage, and in hall,
Where there's drink there's danger."

Write it so that you may never for a single moment forget it. Thank God, while I am speaking of the danger of drink, it is perfectly safe to let it alone for everybody and everywhere. Thomas Fuller said, "It is dangerous to gather flowers that grow on the banks of the pit of hell, for fear of falling in." At first it looks very pretty in the drawing-room and the parlour to hold up the sparkling glass; but, after all, it is gathering flowers by the edge of the pit of hell, and some moment when you least expect it you may take one step too much, and be hurried down into a hopeless eternity.

Then, it is evil because it is destructive; it is destructive of the health, the home comforts, and the family joy of you, working men. People say to me, "Do you think working men can do without beer? Do without it!—that is settled. If every public-house were to be closed to-night we should start up and sing, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow;" but at eleven o'clock you would be singing, "Oh, dear, what can the matter be? I can't get my beer." I spent four days recently in a prison. I went in of my own accord, and came out again when I wanted to. I asked the Governor of the prison, who had had an experience of thirty years, if he found the health of the prisoners injured because they could get no beer? "No, sir," he replied; "the fact is, that when they have been here six or twelve months, our rule is to send them out of gaol weighing heavier than when they came in." Hard work, spare diet, and no beer do not kill. Over every prison door there should be written, 'Government Temperance Hotel,' so that you drinkers might see it.

It is also destructive of home comforts. A working man came to me the other night and said, "Do you know how much three quarts of ale cost me?" I said, "No, I do not; I suppose it means that you got into trouble. Well, what did it cost you?" Here is a copy of the paper he handed to me. He knocked his wife downstairs, broke her ribs, and assaulted a policeman: Doctor's bill for curing his wife and mending her ribs, £7 13s. 6d. He had to buy extra things for his wife's comfort in the shape of beef-tea, &c., £2 8s. He got behind in his rent, £4 15s. He had to pay the nurse £5 10s. He spoilt his wife's clothes, which cost him £2 10s. to replace. He was fined 5s., and costs, 18s. 6d. The ale cost him 1s. 6d.; total £23 6s. 6d. He said, "When I had to pay that bill I thought it was high time I joined your lot." I said, "I think so too." He has now become kind to his wife, attentive to his children, happy in his home. He went to a place of worship, got converted there, and is on his way to heaven.

I have a book written by a celebrated brewer, Mr. Buxton, "How to Stop Drunkenness." He makes in that book this confession: "There are 500,000 homes in England in which home happiness is never felt through the one vice of intemperance." There are, then, 500,000 reasons why we should do our best to dry up the source from whence the misery flows. Ask yourself, "What can I do to come to the help of the Lord against the mighty?" I appeal to you in the language of one who was rescued from this terrible evil and became a Christian man. Drink had sapped the foundation of his life, had shortened his days, but God gave him a message to give to us here to-night when he said—

"By the ties this vice hath riven,
By the homes this sin hath marred
By the souls this curse has driven,
Unreclaimed to their reward;
By the earth which it is thinning,
By the hill which ends its track,
Use your influence with the sinning,
Help to drive this demon back."

Mrs. Richards here sang very sweetly two verses of a hymn, "Oh! Galilee, sweet Galilee."

ADDRESS BY MR. F. MURPHY.

We are speaking to you, working men, to-night. Anything that is derogatory to the home is demoralising, and there is not a greater pest to the home than the drink traffic. I believe every man can make his home exactly what he likes. It is not the wages a man earns, but the way in which he expends them. I commenced housekeeping when I was eighteen years of age, and I married for love. Let a man marry for love, and he can eat bread without butter, and drink tea without sugar. A man and woman who have married for love can cut an egg in two and eat it—half each. I married for love, and I worked for money. They said we were not rich, but if we did not have much we did not want much. The difficulty with me was, I didn't know how to invest. The little money I had I gave to my wife, and she acted as financier of the family. There was a balance on each week's account, and it was always on our side. Live within your means. Be honest with yourselves; do not get into debt, and do not mortgage your honour. Dignify yourself by labour. Better a ragged coat than a ragged reputation. Live right and you will do right. Do not transgress the laws of God. The moment you step outside God's law, that moment you introduce trouble.

How drink affects working men: that is our subject. I believe that this Gospel temperance movement has done as much to make homes happy as anything that can be named. Let me tell you one thing, that if you people don't mind, the Yankees will beat you in your own markets. They are sending their cottons and their tweeds into Manchester, and Canada is already doing the same; and all the things that you make, and that you ought to sell to us, we are trying to sell to you. Now, why is this? It is because the capitalists of this country have not been able to keep their men steady. Your Saint Monday and Saint Tuesday, your decorating public-houses and putting gilt letters, and putting plate glass into their windows, and enabling those who keep them to ride in carriages, and to dress in silks and satins, whilst your own homes go bare, and your own backs and the backs of your family are poorly clad—all this is against you. Cut off the drink, sever yourselves from the public-house, and you may snap your fingers in the face of competition, and let America do as she pleases, for you could get along without her, and in spite of her.

There was a Yankee who was trying to introduce a superior form of steel into America, and he could not do it without the aid of a skilful Englishman, whom he found and pursuaded to go with him from Sheffield to America. This man drank in America, where he was making a pile of money. He was married, and had one of the most lovely little women in the city for a wife, but he did not treat her very well. He forgot his wife and children in the drink. On Saturday night he became a victim of drink to such an extent that at the store at which he dealt he was always known to buy a liver, and yet he was making £15 a week. Tom came in one Saturday night and as he wanted the least expensive article—a liver—he was the last served. Whilst waiting the butcher's pleasure the man came in at whose saloon he used to leave the better part of his £15—came in with nice overcoat, hat and trousers to match, and kid gloves, smoking a 15 cent cigar. The butcher, leaving Tom to his own devices, was all attention as the great man gave his order. "Cut me, thick, five pounds of tender lean steak!" "Yes, sir," said the butcher. "You need not wait, I will send it up to the house;" and off the great man went.

Then he turned to Tom and said: "I know what you want;" and he cut down a liver, put it into a piece of paper, and handed it to Tom. The scene he had just passed through impressed Tom, for he went away muttering, "Beef-steak—liver—5 lbs. of beefsteak cut very thick—liver." Tom said not a word that night at supper, but on the Monday following he refused to drink at the usual time, and whenever resolve began to fail he repeated "beefsteak—liver." The next Saturday with all his £15 in his pocket he went to the butcher's store. "Oh!" said the butcher, "I know what you want;" and he went to cut down a liver. "Stop," said Tom, "not a liver, but cut me, thick, 5 lbs. tender lean steak." The butcher was astonished, but he said, "You needn't trouble to wait, sir, I'll send it to the house." Working men, respect yourselves and other people will respect you. Tom purchased a large basketful of all sorts of provisions, paid cash for them, and ordered them home. He allowed them to arrive first, and, coming up shortly afterwards, heard his wife saying to the man: "They can't be for us, I'm sure there's some mistake." "No mistake at all," said Tom. Imagine the joy of the poor wife to see her husband reclaimed; and since then he has become a Christian man and the owner of much property.

The foregoing are but the outlines of a narrative that Mr. Murphy considerably amplified, and into which he introduced many pathetic allusions to drink-cursed homes. He concluded as follows: Cross the line that separates you from Christ and get under the saving power of God. Keep out of the public-house; take your money home to your wife and children, and be sober and brave Englishmen. We have just had a sweeping majority in the House of Commons. It is the beginning of the end. Let England not rest with her present victory. Let England be as uncontrollable in the great path of reform as the winds of heaven and as the restless sea until every county in this dear old England of ours (for it is mine as well as yours) has been saved from the drink curse.

THURSDAY EVENING, MAY 31.

This evening the attendance somewhat fell off. The proceedings, over which Mr. H. M. Matheson presided, were opened with the singing of a hymn, and with the reading by Mr. Francis Murphy of part of Isaiah lviii. Rev. Burman Cassin offered prayer.

The Physical, Mental, Moral and Spiritual Deterioration resulting from the Use of Stimulants.

ADDRESS BY THE CHAIRMAN.

It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of this movement. I believe there is no question that has such a bearing upon people of all classes and of all ages. Like the friends who have preceded me in this chair, I do heartily rejoice at the wonderful progress made in the Temperance cause, and that the progress has been so widely associated with the Gospel. It is almost startling to see the great unanimity of opinion throughout the country upon this question, not only among the people and in the Press, but now in the House of Commons itself. Of course there is a little word that we had perhaps better keep in mind: "Woe unto you when all men speak well of you." But, lest we should be exalted and tempted to boast, we get a wipe now and then. There was a considerable wipe this morning in a daily paper, which intimated that we were going too far, and that we were depriving the supposed working man of his liberty. I suppose the liberty meant is the liberty to keep his wife and children in abject and utter misery. That we shall endeavour to deprive him of if he insists upon it; but the real working man, having been consulted, is entirely on our side. I believe I am right in saying that in the question under discussion in the House of Commons last night, the working men in the County of Durham have given their opinion in favour of Sunday closing.

Nothing can now stop this tide which is flowing with such a rapid movement. We have had the subject mentioned in the Queen's Speech for the first time. Then we have the most important of eminent physicians and surgeons declaring in its favour. We have Dr. Andrew Clark, the Physician in Ordinary to the Queen, declaring that alcohol is not so much a stimulant as it is an irritant poison. We have Dr. Carpenter, who was physician to the late Archbishop of Canterbury, who declares in the most emphatic manner that alcohol is not necessary for sustenance; in fact, that it is not an article of diet at all. These were great heresies some years ago; now they are received by the vast majority of the medical profession, as was witnessed at the great Congress held last autumn. A great many of us have been under a terrible delusion as to this. We have supposed that as we were not very strong it was necessary for us to take something in the shape of wine or beer. Some of us have been nourishing this delusion for a very long time. I confess that I was living in it myself until about five or six years ago, and it is an absolute discovery to many people, that instead of falling off when they have given up these things, they have improved so much that their friends hardly know them. I met a man a few evenings ago whom I had known as a very important officer in China, at the head of a very large fleet of commercial steamers, and I said to him, "Dear me, how well you are looking! When you left this country you were not looking half the man that you are now." "Ah," said he, "I have taken to water, and I have doubled my energy for work! What is more, formerly it was very difficult to find an engineer for the employment that I am in who was not given to drink; now it is entirely the exception." So the advance in that, as in almost any other walk of life, is immense in the direction of temperance.

The special subject for this evening is "The Physical, Mental, Moral, and Spiritual Deterioration which results from the Use of Stimulants." The only thing I wish to say about the clause which I have read is with reference to that word "stimulants." It is a mild description of the thing with which we are dealing. There is no doubt whatever, and it has been asserted over and over again, from very eminent quarters, that these things are not so much stimulants as they are poisons. Therefore we are dealing with something which it would certainly be better if we could get rid of. If this alcohol is what these men describe—a narcotic irritant poison—there is little wonder that it is to be spoken of as deteriorating to the human frame physically, mentally, morally, and spiritually. I wish that more and more we would go to the Word of God for the principles which are to guide us in dealing with this matter, and with every matter pertaining to our conduct in life. One of the very earliest lessons that we find in the Bible is that none of us can shake off our responsibility in regard to those around us. "Am I my brother's keeper?" is one of the first of the great unanswered questions of the Bible. And there is another Bible lesson that I might just mention in case many of you may not have observed it. In the rules which were given to the children of Israel there are many things that contain great leading principles upon which we to-day are, or ought to be, governing our conduct. There is a very remarkable statement that if an ox gore a man or a woman so that they die, the ox shall be stoned, but the owner shall go free; but if that ox had been known before to attack a man or a woman with its horns and the owner was aware of it, then not only should the ox be stoned, but the owner should be brought to justice. And that is what I think we ought to remember in dealing with this great drink question. Certainly this horrid drink has been known to do men and women great harm. It has been known to produce crime, misery, and poverty, to a huge extent. The ox has been known to gore, and it has brought people to death. Let those who have encouraged its use, reflect that they cannot get rid of their responsibility for doing so.

ADDRESS BY REV. CHURCHILL JULIUS.

We meet in the face of a very grave evil. I have but to touch upon one of its phases, but I would pause to remind you of the fearful evil it has caused, and is causing, in our land. What is the remedy we propose for it? Nothing less than total abstinence. You may say that the remedy is a violent one, but so is the disease; and in my humble opinion this is the only remedy. We remember that drink is not the only sin in the world. We are told that there are a great many who eat and sleep too much. I grant it. Then, they say, you never preach total abstinence in these cases. Quite true. I know people eat too much, but I never heard of anyone who preached total abstinence in that respect. I have heard of them coming down to the one potato for dinner; but never much lower than that. It is obvious we must eat. Nor have I heard total abstinence proclaimed as a remedy for indulgence in sleep. We must sleep. But when we come to deal with alcohol we treat it in a different manner. I do not think we have much ground to stand upon, at least as preachers of total abstinence, unless it can truly be shown that alcohol is absolutely unnecessary for our use. On the other hand, everyone with eyes to see and hearts to feel must know that there is nothing so productive of misery as this accursed drink. Therefore, we say, be moderate in your sleeping and feeding, and in the use of everything which God has given you; but as to drink—which, in my opinion, is man's invention and not God's gift—be not moderate in it at all, but give it up entirely.

The matter I have to speak upon is "The Physical, Mental, Moral, and Spiritual Deterioration resulting from the Use of Stimulants." I believe all that, but I am not in a position to touch upon the first two—not because I have no opinions of them, but because I have never looked sufficiently into the matter to justify me in addressing you upon it. Only this evidence can I give, which at least has the value of being positive. Seven or eight years ago I stood for the first time upon a temperance platform in the county of Somersetshire, and when I proclaimed myself an abstainer, an old lady in the gallery was heard to say, "Poor dear, he looks like it, too." I defy that old lady to make a similar remark to-day. I have heavier work, and many more cares than I had then, but, thank God, far better health than ever I have known before.

Let us come, however, to the deteriorating moral and spiritual effects of drink. I believe that the weightiest charge to be brought against the use of alcohol is that its effects are directly opposite to the work of the Lord Jesus Christ. He came into the world to lift man up from the state of a beast, and make a man of him. Now, drink leaves a man, not a brute nor yet a man—a strange, poor, ruined creature. Christ came into the world to lift man up, morally and spiritually, but drink ruins him, and therefore, as a humble soldier of the Cross, I am bound to withstand this great foe of my Lord and Master. Look at the effect of drink upon the conscience. There is nothing like drink to stifle it. The man says to his conscience: "It is the social custom of the country; I cannot hold my own and be a man unless I drink. It is necessary for me, and for every man who does a day's hard work." What can conscience reply to all that? When a man has so many seemingly irresistible arguments at his finger's end poor conscience retires into a corner. So the man goes down, down, till conscience ceases to speak. Can there be anything more terrible than that a man's conscience should be silenced within him?

Look at the deteriorating effect of drink upon the will of a man. It destroys his power of choice. He becomes a slave to drink, and despite the advice of employers and relatives, he becomes, whether he will or not, fast bound by a threefold cord. The first cord is that of liking. He finds that the alcohol which quiets his conscience produces certain pleasing effects upon him, if only for a time. That power of force and appetite lays hold upon his will. Then the force of habit seizes him, and habit is a mighty power. The last cord that binds him is that of necessity, or almost necessity. It is a terrible thing when drink becomes so great a power in the man that nothing but the power of divine grace can save him. I do not believe that total abstinence can save a man. I know that only Christ can do that, but how if that man has clogged his brain and drowned himself in drink, and made himself utterly unable to hear and appreciate the voice of God which speaks from heaven. What is there to help that man? I say total abstinence is the handmaid of the Gospel. We have to try to make a man sober that we may bring that poor sober sinner to the Lord Jesus Christ.

ADDRESS BY MR. H. BRANTHWAITE, F.R.C.S.

I am often asked why I wear the Blue Ribbon, and my answer is, "To show that I am engaged in a warfare with that which has cursed humanity and dishonoured God." As I look at this bit of blue, it becomes to me an emblem of hope. I look with the eye of faith beyond the din and smoke of the conflict in which we are engaged, and I see the dawn of a day when man shall have conquered habit, burst the bonds of appetite, snapped the fetters of social custom, and refused any longer to believe in the value of an agent potent for evil—an agent that deteriorates man's physical nature, blunts his mental perception, paralyses his moral powers, and hinders his spiritual progress.

Now what is this agent against which we bring such a terrible indictment? That agent is alcohol—the active ingredient in all those drinks against which we wage an uncompromising warfare. It produces in man a condition we call intoxication—a state in which a man is physically, mentally, morally, and religiously incapable of performing his duties. Now I have no intention attempting to define what drunkenness is; that is almost as difficult a matter as to define what moderation is. A very great amount of mischief has been done by calling these drinks by a wrong name. I contend that intoxicating drinks are not stimulants in any true sense of the meaning of that word. I should be sorry to stand here and say that stimulants deteriorate a man either physically, mentally, morally, or religiously, because I believe that the very best type of a stimulant is a good beef-steak or a mutton chop. The early Temperance reformers knew nothing at all of the action of alcohol upon the human system. They advocated total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks on purely moral grounds. They saw amongst them the existence of a terrible evil that was sapping the foundation of domestic, social, and national life, and they called upon all true men and women to aid them in removing the cause. To-night we stand on a different platform. To-night we have to admit that whilst the moral arguments have lost none of their force, we have, as the result of scientific research, found that intoxicating drinks are not only unnecessary to health but positively injurious. Combining, then, the moral and the physical arguments, the position of the man who voluntarily abstains, whether for his own sake or for the sake of others, is logically unassailable.

In order to secure good health every function of the body must be properly performed—digestion, nutrition, respiration, circulation, secretion, excretion—all these must go on with unfailing regularity. If we can prove that the use of intoxicating drinks interferes with the proper performance of any one of these functions, we prove the assertion that their use is productive of physical deterioration. We only want time to prove that the use of intoxicating drinks interferes with everyone of them more or less seriously, and to such an extent as to produce loss of vital power, thus rendering the system less able to bear up against accident or successfully to battle when attacked by disease. I am convinced that thousands die annually who, but for this fact, might have been safely steered through the shoals and quicksands of disease.

When alcohol is taken its first action is to paralyse the nervous energy. A gentleman once disputed this point with me. He said, "Suppose I want to jump across a chasm, and I feel on looking at it that I can't do it. Give me a glass of brandy, and in five minutes I will go over it like a bird." I said, "No, you won't; you'll go over it like a madman!" The effect of alcohol in enabling the man to leap that chasm was not to give him nervous energy, but to paralyse nervous energy, so that he did not realise the danger he was undergoing. The same thing happens when men take intoxicating drink to drown sorrow and banish care. They drink, and sing "Begone dull care: thee and I will never agree," but just let the effect of the alcohol pass off, and the care and the sorrow are there in a heightened degree.

A second action of alcohol is that it deteriorates the blood. Alcohol is a robber. It robs the blood of its water. It renders the solid portions of the blood, which ought to absorb the oxygen, less capable of absorbing that which is its life-giving power. What is the result?—that if a man has a pint of stout, he feels sleepy. The blood becomes carbonised instead of oxidised. Let me tell you an incident that will illustrate this point. Going into Somersetshire, in the autumn-time, by train, I found myself in a compartment with five or six passengers. We were all reading the papers save one. One of the passengers said to this gentleman, "Would you like to look at The Times?" "No, sir," he replied. "I never read when I am taking a railway journey in autumn. I like to admire the autumnal tints, and to have my thoughts raised from nature up to nature's God." I thought to myself, "I will watch that man." Between Westbourne-park and Reading he made four applications to a very large and suspicious-looking flask that he carried in his pocket. Within five minutes after leaving Reading he was as fast asleep as the most tired man could wish himself to be, and he might have been going through a coal mine for aught he knew of the autumnal tints or the beauties of the landscape.

A third thing that takes place is the effect of alcohol in reducing the temperature of the body. A person says, "If I take a little whiskey and water I feel warmer." Ah, but he is judging by his feelings! Now, although you may describe a good many of your feelings to your medical man—for your comfort let me tell you that he thinks very little about them. We doctors usually carry in our pockets a little thing called a thermometer, which is affected by no feelings. Put that into the mouth of a patient who has had a glass or two of whiskey, and within half an hour after he has had it, however hot he may feel outside, his general system has been robbed of heat, and the temperature generally reduced. Upon the equable condition of the temperature of the body depends life and health, and any departure from that normal standard means destruction. You will see how important it is that we should not go on taking that into the system which continually lowers the temperature. I never met with one single case in which there was not a reduction of temperature after the imbibation of alcohol.

You say, "Can you prove all this deterioration?" I can prove that total abstainers enjoy better health than non-abstainers. In Essex there is a lodge of Odd Fellows. Three-fourths of the members are moderate drinkers and one-fourth total abstainers. During five years they paid for sick claims £189. Clearly the total abstainers were entitled to one-fourth, which would be £47 5s. As a matter of fact, they did not want it, and they only received £17 2s. 10d. Of 356 days' sickness in five years the total abstainers were entitled to one-fourth, or 89 days; but they had only 29. £52 were paid for funerals and allowances to widows and orphans. It all went to the moderate drinkers, no teetotaler had any of it at all. The Temperance Hospital held their annual meeting the other day, when the report stated that the vast number of patients who had been received in the last ten years had all been treated without alcohol, and their death-rate was only four per cent. People imagine they get a benefit from alcohol, but it is purely imaginary, and in this as in many other things such a sensation is not to be relied upon.

Success has followed these temperance efforts, because we have gone with the Gospel in one hand and the temperance pledge in the other. Why has success been ours? Because the Church is recognising temperance as her handmaid. Depend upon it, when this coalition is complete, then will the Church go forth in her true dignity, "bright as the sun, clear as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners." I prophesy that our forces are now gathering from near and from far, and that the day is not far distant when this mighty Gospel Temperance Army, shoulder to shoulder, heart to heart, will to will, shall sweep down upon the foe and drive back to the caves of ignorance from whence it sprang the delusion that has broken hearts, blighted prospects, blasted reputations, robbed heaven, and peopled hell.

ADDRESS BY REV. F. A. C. LILLINGSTON, OF HIGHBURY.

I have two or three solemn charges to bring against alcohol. I feel myself in the position of a grand prosecutor. There is a demon at the bar yonder, and you are the jury able to pronounce an intelligent opinion upon his case. First of all, I charge him with demoralising people as regards the simple matter of independence of character and due provision for those who are near and dear to them. I do not know of anything that seems to me a simpler virtue than this, that a man should provide for himself and his family. Now I have seen how the independence of my fellow-countrymen is absolutely lost and ruined by this curse of drink. I find they have got into the habit of thinking they must have it, and they will part with anything for it. When the rainy day comes, having lived emphatically "from hand to mouth," they are absolutely without resources.

I come to the next charge—the want of honesty which is often produced because of this wretched vice, which causes people very often to abandon the strict path of rectitude. In nine cases out of ten, either directly or indirectly, dishonesty has been produced by the love of drink. Often a man enters into the path of crime through drink, leading him to condign and miserable punishment. Then drink destroys love. Is there anything in the world so necessary as love? Is there anything which so links together common humanity and Christianity? Yet see how this demon deals with that. Look at that man who has just married, after "keeping company," as the phrase says, or courting the girl he loves. The marriage day arrives, and he almost worships the ground on which he treads. Pass on for three or four years. Look at that miserable room. It belongs to that man whom we saw smart and proud and happy as a bridegroom. Look at that withered and worn and haggard woman. You can hardly think that that is the girl whom he married so short a time ago. The room is bared of everything by the awful demon, drink; but you see the poker there—only too well furnished in that respect. See him raising the weapon and dashing out the brains of the woman he swore to love, and then being dragged off himself to a miserable and early death. What has caused this tragedy? Drink. She would not yield the money for him to waste, and so he killed her. That has happened many hundreds of times—all caused by the demon of drink. Is there any love stronger than the pure and holy love of a mother for her child? Does not the scriptures say, "Can a woman forget her suckling child?" She can do so but rarely, except under the influence of this demon. You see the child poisoned with cordials given it to make it sleep in order that undisturbed the mother may spend her time in drinking. Thousands of little tiny coffins year by year are tenanted by the offspring of such "mothers." They have neglected them because of drink, and I charge all this upon it.

Then I come to truth. Is there anything more necessary for morality than truth? And yet drink destroys it. The moral feeling of truth is wholly destroyed, for the drunkard will do anything to gratify his passion. I pass on to common morality. Oh! what fills our streets at night with that which causes us to blush? When was the first downward step taken? In nine cases out of ten under the influence of drink. What is it that causes the neglect of public and private worship? Thousands never think of attending church or chapel; thousands more never raise the family altar, and thousands more never bend the knee in private prayer. What is it they worship? They worship the temple of Bacchus. I see them pouring in in one constant stream, and pouring out again filled with evil spirits—spirits which they have imbibed there. Let us use all the agencies we can, but the demon of drink confronts us at every step.

What about Christian hope? Who would be without it? What is it that sustains us in the battle of life but the glory of the Christian's hope? Think of the drunkard's hope: it is all gone. What has robbed him of it? It is the demon drink. Now in the face of all this let each one ask himself: What have I done in the past to oppose this evil? It is an evil which is all around us. I charge you as before God to answer the question—what are you doing in this matter? Come and join us. Are you holding out a hand to your brother? Come and join this noble band. If you are a "quiet total abstainer," see if you can't do a little more. Spread this blessing abroad. Put on this blue ribbon and let all men see that you are wearing it. Don't be ashamed of your colours. Go forth, bearing them, and you will be preaching a noble sermon from a little text that will be saying, "I can and will abstain."

ADDRESS BY MR. T. E. MURPHY.

I would like to get all young men interested in this movement, but if I could get all the young ladies interested, I should be sure of the young men. In a certain town where I was labouring for this glorious movement there was a Young Ladies' Club, every member of which signed the pledge and donned the blue ribbon. They resolved that all the gentlemen would have to do likewise. But they said they would do it in a kind and loving manner. Now I do not believe much in coercion. I believe what cannot be wrought for God in this world by the principle of loving kindness cannot be wrought by anything else. Therefore I am thankful that this is a loving movement, and that it rests on the basis of human sympathy and on the principle of our blessed Lord and Master: "Love one another, bless them that curse you, do good to them which hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you." If we would all live up to that doctrine, it would not be long ere London would be converted.

Some young men say they only want just a little, and some people assert it is very good to take it. Well, there may be young men who will not be injured by drink, but the experience of the past—and it is the experience of the past brought to bear on the present that enables us to some extent to solve the problem of the future—I say the experience of the past leads us to make this declaration: that there is no safety in the wine-cup. But there is perfect safety in the principle of total abstinence. Some people say this movement is a first-rate movement for children. Well, I thank God for such children as my father here and many of the well-known friends of the movement who have stood on this platform. But if we can only succeed in inculcating the minds of the boys and girls who are growing up now with the principle of total abstinence, in twenty years we will have not only a Sunday Closing Movement in England, but we will have a movement that will close up the public-houses every day in the week, and this is what we want. Twenty years hence the boys and girls of to-day will be the active business men and women of London. Twenty years hence some of the boys of this kingdom will be the members of Parliament, and they will pass a law that will put to the death this accursed traffic; so we cannot have too many children in this Gospel Temperance Movement.

The strength of every army lies in its reserve power, and the general who commands an army says at the critical point in a battle, "I will call up the reserve forces," and so, when these men who are veterans in this blessed cause shall pass away, they will call on the boys and girls who compose the Bands of Hope in this United Kingdom to fall into the line, and march until this devil shall be compelled to surrender, and until Parliament shall repeal every Act that clothes it now in the garb of respectability. Mr. Murphy closed with a powerful appeal to parents to sign the pledge, and then their children would be glad to follow them.

FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 1.

The Hall was more crowded on this occasion than on any previous evening of the Mission. Mr. GEORGE HOWARD, M.P., presided. The proceedings were opened as usual by the singing of a hymn and the reading of a portion of God's Word.

The Sufferings entailed through Drink upon Children from Infancy upwards.

ADDRESS BY THE CHAIRMAN.

I have never before presided at a great Temperance meeting in London, but I have often presided over meetings in the country with this object in view. It was when presiding at meetings of this kind that I first met Mr. Francis Murphy, who had come to help the work that was being done in the country districts in the North of England. Meeting him here again to-night makes me feel very forcibly the great difference between the work in which we were engaged there, and that which we are engaged in here to-night. The work is the same, but the circumstances are very different. The success of that work up in the country district I was telling you of was very great indeed; in fact, far greater than those who knew the people and the country expected it could be. I think this success mainly depended upon this—that the men and women who were engaged in the work did not satisfy themselves with having successful meetings and securing eloquent speakers, but they organised themselves in such a way that the enthusiasm which was excited by the speakers at the meetings was not allowed to die out. Work of that kind in a country district, where everybody knows everybody else for many miles around, and the force of public opinion is keenly felt, becomes far more possible than in a large city like this, where there are so many of us living close together who are not neighbours except in the sense of living near other.

What, then, are we to think of work in a town like this? Are we to be discouraged by the fact that the work before us seems so great that anything we can do must appear like a drop in the ocean? Those who are undertaking a work of this kind of course depend upon the hope that they will see some result: not only that they will influence individuals, but that by hard work they may produce a real alteration in the condition of the people. Is it reasonable to have such a hope with respect to London? I should be very much afraid that the answer would be discouraging if we were to look merely at the effect on grown-up men and women. If you look for any real, radical, thorough alteration, I think that you must place your hopes in the next generation. This brings me to the question that is before us to-night, "The Sufferings entailed through Drink upon Children from infancy upwards." It is a very vast one; so great that I shall only attempt to touch the points of it.

First of all, let me allude to what seems the most terrible side of the question—the results of drunkenness in hereditary disease upon children. We get accounts of the number of children who die in earliest infancy—happier, perhaps, than those others who survive merely to become the tenants of hospitals for incurables and madhouses; and such things are the saddest reading that I know of. There have been lately published some statements by a French doctor, of which I will read one as a sample of many others. In an instance reported by another physician, a man who has long been under treatment for delirium tremens had been married twice, and was the father of a family singularly numerous. By his first wife he had sixteen children, of whom fifteen died without attaining the age of one year, while the survivor is a martyr to epileptic fits. By the second wife this very unsuitable husband had eight children, of whom seven were soon carried off by the same disease that proved so fatal to their half-brothers and sisters. There are many terrible cases of this kind. We cannot well do anything to help these unfortunate children, except to take the best possible care of them in hospitals; but I think it reveals a state of things so horrible that we should do all we can to prevent such children from being born, by persuading their fathers not to be drunkards.

Then there are children who live with drunken parents. It would require the talent of a Dickens to describe all the horrors that take place in the houses of drunken parents; but even without the aid of such gifts we can form some idea of what takes place by looking at the short statements in the police reports. No sensational exaggeration can equal the tales that you see recorded, without note or comment, of scalded children, burned children, children thrown out of windows, children beaten with pokers, &c. Horrible as these things are, the cruelty and the violence that some children suffer is a small part of the evil that happens to those of them who live in drunken homes. When we think of the kind of surroundings that such a child has, of the amount of dirt and neglect, of the example that it sees, of the habits that it must form, I think we cannot fail to be deeply moved. Think of young boys whom, on our public holidays, you see about our streets—not of half men, half boys, but more boys than men, coming reeling out of the public-houses. They have merely imitated their fathers in going in there. There was a case I saw the other day in the paper, of a boy thirteen years of age who was brought before the magistrate. He had been drunk and incapable. The evidence showed that for many hours his life hung in the balance. The magistrates expressed their reprobation of this state of things, but it seems to me that in cases of that kind the punishment to the publicans who give drink to children of thirteen years of age ought to be more effective than it is.

If we think of the girls who are brought up in these homes, their case is even sadder. When you think of the young girls who spend their time in workshops, and who merely have a crowded, dirty home to go home to, we cannot be surprised that they should linger about the streets at the close of the day, and try to find warmth, light, and amusement in the only places that are open to them. Many sad revelations have told us lately the terrible results of that, and I think that all of us ought to do something for the sake of these virtually homeless girls who wander about our streets. I have alluded to the children of drunkards, and to those children, mostly of the poorer classes, who live in the homes of drunkards. It may be said that these things do not apply to the children of the rich and the well-to-do; they at all events are not exposed to these risks and to these temptations. Certainly to a great extent they are not; yet I think if most of us who have reached a certain time of life, were to look back, we could recollect some one who was our companion at school, a bright and manly boy, brought up in the same way, with the same surroundings, who since those days has come to grief through drink, who has become a sorrow to his family and a nuisance to everybody else. The thought of even one such should be enough, I think, to induce fathers with families to try and do all in their power to save their own boys from such a fate as that.

No doubt there are many people in this room who will say, "That is all very well for fathers of families, but we are not fathers of families yet. When we become such, we will think about it." No doubt a young man has less apparent and immediate reason to join this movement than a father, or a preacher, or a teacher; but still, I think, there is plenty of ground for his doing it as well. In some ways young men can influence more than anyone else, those who are younger than themselves—the boys. In the schools you know the Bands of Hope are doing a great and good work; but the moment comes when the boy leaves the school, and then he is very anxious to emulate and to imitate those who are just older than himself. It is then that the example of a young man is of more weight with him than the advice of his father or the example of his teacher. I hope that the young men will be induced to join this movement for the sake of their brothers and their younger friends. I hope they will show the boys that there is nothing particularly manly in getting drunk, and that a lad who wears the blue ribbon can be just as cheerful as anybody else.

The Hon. Conrad Dillon briefly moved the adoption of two petitions; one to the House of Commons and the other to the House of Lords, in favour of Sunday closing.

Mr. John Taylor (Chairman of the National Temperance League), in seconding the motion, said that, thirty years ago, when he came to London, his first work in the Temperance cause was to agitate for a Sunday Closing Bill, and after two years' work they succeeded in securing the passing of the Wilson Patten Act. He was sorry to say that, until the vote of Wednesday night, they had got no further in Sunday closing for England.

The motion was carried with acclamation by a standing vote.

Mr. J. C. Stevenson, M.P., who was on the platform, being asked to speak, said: I have no reason to be dissatisfied that you have taken the opportunity to-night to pass so heartily, and so unanimously, petitions to both Houses of Parliament in favour of the Sunday Closing Bill. We are sometimes told, that whatever may be the ripeness of public opinion in other parts of the country, we must always be careful how we deal with the Metropolis; and I think this expression of your opinion is all the more valuable as showing that you, at least, have no misgiving as to the application of this Bill to London. There is no doubt that this movement is making very rapid progress, and it must make rapid progress with the progress of temperance sentiments and temperance principles which you have met here this week so zealously and so efficiently to promote. I believe there is no question that so occupies the mind of the country at this time as that of Sunday closing. I believe it is a question which, beyond even the measures of the Government, the people are anxious to see settled, and I do heartily hope that we shall not have the disappointment of another session elapsing without a definite step being taken towards spreading, over some part at least of England, those benefits of Sunday closing which have been enjoyed and appreciated by other parts of the kingdom.

ADDRESS BY DR. BARNARDO.

It has already been stated by the Chairman that it is almost impossible to exaggerate the evils which arise out of the drinking customs of the community. And it was easy to see, from the manner in which that remark was received by the audience, that it carried conviction to almost every person present. Almost every phase of this subject has been or will be brought before your consideration, and that, too, by specialists in each separate department of which they treated. I am glad, therefore, without remarking on the general question of the evils of intemperance and the need of reform, to turn at once to the particular subject placed on the programme for our consideration to-night.

When we consider this subject we may well say that a long, low, sad wail is heard all over the land—England "weeping for her children;" and may I add, "refusing to be comforted," until he who would destroy the life of the young child is no more. But I argue from this series of meetings, from the spread of public opinion which has rendered them possible, and from the success that has attended this effort, that however dark the present time may be—and I think we must not hide from ourselves the fact that in some respects the present condition of things is really and truly a dark one—a brighter and better future is before us.

In considering this aspect of the subject I feel bound to do so from at least three points of view; first from the physical, then the social, and lastly from the moral and spiritual points of view. In treating of the physical aspects of the sufferings entailed upon children, we are brought face to face with that which is peculiar to this class. We know that in the case of adults, the evils flowing from the drink may be said to be chiefly acquired. But with regard to the children it is not so; the evils of which they are subjects, as the result of this particular vice, have been inherited. These evils have surrounded them from their infancy; I was going to say—and it would have been quite correct—that ere they had being, these drinking habits of society have absolutely handicapped numbers of unfortunate children, so that when they enter the race of life they are to a great extent unfitted for the task that lies before them in the journey.

It is indeed a sad fact, one that is widely admitted, and therefore needs no proof, that the intemperate parent bequeaths to his children a certain physical deterioration of tissue, besides absolute tendencies, and, in not a few cases, even diseases, which he may have himself acquired by his intemperate indulgence. Moreover, besides this deterioration which is now admitted to come upon the children of intemperate parents, it has been asserted by some of our leading physicians and surgeons, that persons who may not have been absolute drunkards, but only what is called moderate drinkers, have entailed upon their innocent offspring physical effects which, to some extent, unfit them for the battle of life. I may quote from the memorable letter of Sir Henry Thompson to the late Archbishop of Canterbury. He says:—

> I have had the conviction that there is no greater cause of evil, moral or physical, in this country than the use of alcoholic beverages. I do not mean by this that extreme indulgence which means drunkenness. The habitual use of fermented liquor to an extent far short of what is necessary to produce that condition—and such is quite common in all ranks of society—injures the body, and diminishes the mental power to an extent which I think few people are aware of. Such, at all events, is the result of my professional experience during more than twenty years of professional life devoted to hospital practice, and to private practice in every rank above it. Thus, I have no hesitation in attributing a very large proportion of some of the most painful and dangerous maladies which come under my notice, as well as those which every medical man has to treat, to the ordinary and daily use of fermented drink, taken in the quantity which is conversationally deemed moderate.

Professor Miller wrote, in 1861, on the same subject:—

> The worst of it is, that the disease so induced does not terminate with the life of him or her who produced it. If, unhappily, children be born, they will inherit the evil of their progenitors; stunted in body, and often in mind; fatuous, or foolish; drink-loving, and drunken, in their turn; scrofulous, rheumatic, consumptive, weak, useless. This is one of the punishments of sin, in the present life, which may in sad bitterness be traced downward from parent to child—"iniquity of the fathers visited upon the children, and upon the children's children," even "unto the third and fourth generations."

No one can afford when quoting such testimony to omit that of Dr. Richardson. At the conclusion of his famous Cantor Lectures upon "Alcohol," he thus speaks of "transmitted disease:"—

> The most solemn fact of all bearing upon these mental aberrations produced by alcohol, and upon the physical not less than the mental, is, that the mischief inflicted on man by his own act and deed cannot fail to be transferred to those who descend from him, and who are thus irresponsibly afflicted. Amongst the many inscrutable designs of nature none is more manifest than this, that physical vice, like physical feature and physical virtue, descends in line. It is, I say, a solemn reflection for every man and every woman, that whatever we do to ourselves so as to modify our own physical conformation and mental type, for good or for evil, is transmitted to generations that have yet to be. Not one of the transmitted wrongs, physical or mental, is more certainly passed on to those yet unborn than the wrongs which are inflicted by alcohol.

What these diseases are with which the adult community are affected, through intemperance or indulgence in drink, are well known to medical men in general practice; and it is not denied by any medical man who has examined the subject, that a number of diseases that used to be ascribed to other causes are now put down to this. Let me merely mention that such common-place complaints as gout, rheumatism, enfeebled heart, paralysis, eczema, apoplexy, epilepsy, liver disease, and dropsy may in a very large number of cases be directly traced to the use of stimulants. It is indeed an absolute fact that no vital organ in the parent escapes the consequences of even the moderate use of alcoholic drinks. It will not be difficult therefore to imagine or understand how certain is the process of transmission to the children, or how widespread are its effects. Of the diseases of childhood which may be directly traced to these causes, there are many to which I cannot refer. I will only speak very briefly indeed of three which are perhaps among the most marked. Idiocy or insanity is, to a very large extent, the direct inheritance of the child from intemperate parents. The same may be said of epilepsy, and of hydrocephalus, or what is commonly known as water on the brain. As to idiocy, one is appalled by the statistics collected by those who have examined the matter. Dr. Andrew Mitchell, one of the Scottish Lunacy Commissioners, in his evidence before the Select Committee of the House of Lords, on "Habitual Drunkards," said:—

> It is quite certain that the children of habitual drunkards are in a larger proportion idiotic than other children, and in a larger proportion themselves habitual drunkards; they are also in a larger proportion liable to the ordinary forms of acquired insanity.

Sir W. F. Brown, First Medical Lunacy Commissioner for Scotland, said:—

> The children of drunkards are deficient in bodily and vital energy, and are predisposed by their very organisations to have cravings for alcoholic stimulants. If they pursue the course of their fathers, which they have more temptation to follow and less power to avoid, they add to their hereditary weakness, and increase the tendency to idiocy or insanity in themselves and their children.

I might to a much greater extent pursue this branch of the subject, but time forbids; I must therefore pass on to say a few words upon what will, perhaps, be more interesting to many in this assembly than that of which I have spoken—I mean the social aspect of the subject. This is indeed a truly sad one to think about. Strong drink, which ruins the parent, involves the children in the wreck. Strong drink, which turns the tender-hearted and loving mother into an infuriated animal, transforms in numbers of cases the pet of the house into the victim. I was reading a little while ago a case which is recorded by the author of "The Temperance Reform and the Christian Church." He states that in Glasgow the wife of a well-to-do tradesman left her home on a Monday, and was arrested a few days afterwards with her baby in her arms. When she left her home, which was a comfortable one, she and the child were well clothed, and she had money in her pocket. When she was arrested the child was almost in a state of nudity, and the mother was little better. Strong drink had made one, hitherto a loving parent, utterly regardless of the dangers to which she was exposing her child.

But, as may be imagined, my own experience has furnished me with a large number of similar instances. In the peculiar work in which I have been engaged many cases have come under my notice of persons who, when under the influence of drink, absolutely behaved as if they were not human, and exhibited passions that we would scarcely imagine the lowest animals to be capable of. Some years ago my attention was drawn to the fact that a large number of little boys and girls, especially girls, who are found in the lowest lodging-houses, frequently changed hands. They were lent or hired by their parents or guardians to tramps or professional beggars, who carried them about, hoping to extract alms from the charitable, through the apparent helplessness of these unfortunate children. On one occasion I had to interfere with a rough tramp, who was at the time under the influence of drink, and who was ill-using a little girl of seven or eight years of age. I inquired into the case, and found that the mother of the little girl formerly lodged in that house, and was mostly under the influence of drink. She had actually, some considerable time before, sold her child to the man in whose custody I found her for the sum of half a crown! The deputy of the lodging-house added that she had not received the money ten minutes before it was spent in drink. Such a fact, extreme as it is, will show that, viewing this subject from the social point of view, the children suffer terribly as the result of intemperate habits on the part of parents. No one can tell how wide-spread and how far-reaching are the issues of such a sin.

Dr. Barnardo proceeded to quote the testimony of Dr. Thomas Guthrie, the founder of Ragged Schools, who was an ardent advocate of total abstinence when such advocacy was not so easy as it is now. Speaking of the sufferings entailed on children through the drink in his day, Dr. Guthrie said:—

> Believe me, it is impossible to exaggerate, impossible truthfully to paint, the effects of this vice on those who suffer from it—most of all on those poor innocent children that are dying under cruelty and starvation, that shiver in their rags upon our streets, that walk unshod the winter snows, and with their matted hair and hollow cheeks, and sunken eyes and sallow countenances, glare out on us, wild and savage-like, from these patched and dusty windows.

Dr. Guthrie repeatedly affirmed that 99 per cent. of the children admitted into ragged schools were the offspring of intemperate parents. I, too, examined the subject some years ago, and was then led to this conclusion, that of the 3000 who up to that time had been under my care, 77 per cent. had been brought there as the result, direct or indirect, of the drinking customs of the community.

In closing, Dr. Barnardo showed that it is a mistake to suppose that such sufferings are confined to the lowest classes of society—no rank, no grade, no class was safe. Many children whose parents once occupied good and even distinguished positions, had come to the direst degradation and poverty through the intemperate habits of those who had given them being. He then cited the cases of two girls who obtained a refuge in the institution over which he presides. They were daughters of a clergyman, and with their mother were on the point of entering the workhouse when they were brought under his notice by a philanthropic friend. One was nine, and the other fourteen years of age. Drunkenness on the part of the father had caused the loss of character, friends, and everything else, till these unfortunate girls found themselves in the position from which it was necessary to rescue them, by placing them in his institution.

The time having expired, Dr. Barnardo concluded his address without entering on the last point indicated—the moral and spiritual evils entailed upon children by the drink.

ADDRESS BY MR. R. T. BOOTH.

After some preliminary remarks, Mr. Booth said: I believe in honest, healthy enthusiasm; but that enthusiasm is not real, that excitement is not healthy, that does not grow out of truth, and that does not lift men heavenward. If this movement ever becomes a mere utilitarian movement, if it ceases to win souls for Christ, I shall then tear this blue ribbon from my breast, and have nothing more to do with it. The glory of this Gospel Temperance movement is this: that whilst it proves to the man that the public-house is bad, and the drinking customs of society are pernicious, it convinces him of his need of a Saviour. It is upon these lines that there has been created and fashioned in this country the mightiest power out of heaven—a public conviction—a conviction that is as universal in our land as in yours—that the liquor traffic is a nuisance and a danger to the community. There is not a city, town, or hamlet in the United Kingdom that has been visited by this movement in which hearts have not been healed, and homes made happy. Men have been redeemed, and in many instances these drinking places have been reduced and lessened.

You all know the results of last Brewster Sessions in many of the towns where the greatest work has been done. In the town of Newcastle-upon-Tyne there are fifty-six fewer drinking-places than there were two years ago. In Birmingham, where in three weeks no fewer than 51,000 pledges were taken a year ago, at the very next Brewster Sessions 106 licences were refused by the magistrates. All of them nearly, I believe, were off licences. But this has been the case throughout the country where these Missions have been held. In Brighton, where a Mission was held last year, many of the public-houses have been closed, and there are scores of public-houses to-day that are occupied by men who are absolutely paying not a penny for rent. One publican the other day put up the shutters, locked his door, and tacked a blue ribbon over the door. When he was asked why he did that, he said, "Because the Blue Ribbon plague is about." And so it has been in Swansea. Many public-houses have been closed, and no fewer than three breweries have gone to smash. Whenever I hear of public-houses going to smash and closing, my heart feels glad, for death to them means life to the people.

We may rail against the publican and the brewer, but all the sin does not lie at their doors. I indict society as the one power that is responsible for this drink. The wine-glass in the Christian's hand, the brandy-bottle on the sideboard, are the great stumbling-blocks in life's path. It is over these that thousands of our young every year fall into the gulf that never yields up its dead. When we can get society to set its face against the custom and lift its voice and its power, when we can get society to abstain, we will make short work of the liquor traffic. We have recently had some striking illustrations of the power of society. I would like to see the English gentleman that would dare to stand up to-day and advocate the slaughter of pigeons since the Princess of Wales has taken the position that she has. And you all know what a howl there has been going up amongst the farmers since the Queen has ceased to have her household supplied with lamb. I have hope of any nation that will protect the lambs of the field and the birds of the air.

But surely it is time that this great nation, as well as my own, should turn their attention to the little ones, whose bleeding feet you can track through all the slums of London, and whose little empty hands are held up to God, and whose pinched faces say to you and me, "Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? Behold and see, is there any sorrow like unto my sorrow?" It is not the public-house that we dread most. I could take my boy, sweet and pure as he is, into the lowest den of London, and let him see the sights and hear the sounds, let him hear virtue mocked, and prayer reviled, and the name of God blasphemed, let him see the drunken husband smash his wife's face until the blood starts from it. From such a sight he would turn aside and cry, "Father, take me away; I want to have nothing to do with that." My boy will never become a drunkard in such a place, nor will yours. But if he should go out into society, and enter the homes of refinement, and if the glass is presented with jewelled fingers, and it may be with a man of God smiling upon it—then it is that I fear for the safety of my boy. Therein lies the danger of your child. It takes courage to refuse to drink with a comrade in the public-house; it takes manhood to decline the proffered glass of a lady. May God speed the day when society in this land will set its face against this system of wrong.

Just a word in regard to the conflict that is taking place in the bosom of every drinking man. God pity the man whose appetite and passion drive him to drink. There is a conflict raging within his breast more terrible than most of you can ever know. But should drink conquer? Praise God, never. Our Captain has never lost a battle yet. Put your trust in the Lord Jesus Christ. Let Him put his loving arm about you; then you will be kept, and you can never fail. I want you to do all you can to aid a brother whom you may see fighting this terrific battle. When men say, "I can drink, or let it alone," I recollect the case of a man who had been a preacher of the Gospel. People had been fed from his lips, and souls had been saved. He had worn on his breast "the white flower of a spotless name," but he drank, and he fell. I have seen him begging for drink with all the fervency of despair. When you tell me you can drink or let it alone, it is a great thing that you can do it; but it is a better thing to let it alone. Do you say you will have no part in this conflict? Then you will never know the sweets of victory; you will never taste the joys of triumph. Fall into line to-night, and stand shoulder to shoulder with us. Wear this little badge of blue, and by and by, though the Red Seas of difficulty shall oppose us, and mountains of opposition shall rise on the right hand and on the left, these shall melt away as the dew before the sun. The waters shall separate and roll back as a scroll, and we will stand on the other side; then with the redeemed host we shall sing—

> "Sound the loud timbrel o'er Egypt's dark sea, > Jehovah has triumphed, his people are free."

ADDRESS BY REV. J. P. GLEDSTONE.

There are but few of us who have not assisted at an informal and always interesting domestic ceremony which takes place a few weeks after a child is born. When friends and neighbours call to make kind inquiries after the mother's health, and to see her child, the little one is carried round for each visitor to have a good look at him. The sight of him evokes a good deal of comment. "Who is he like?" is the question everyone asks, and tries to answer. "His hair will be like his mother's," says Aunt Emily, "for hers was light when she was a child." "His eyes will be the colour of his uncle Joe's," remarks a neighbour. One friend, who has a quick eye, exclaims that "the youngster has got his grandfather's thumb," which is of a very peculiar shape in that old gentleman.

And so they go on anatomising the baby, and assigning each several part to some relative more or less near. Only one young bachelor sits quiet, feeling a great deal amused at all this "absurd guessing," as he thinks it to be, about this "absurdly interesting baby." His opinion, when he was asked for it, was that the "little mortal was like everybody in general, and nobody in particular—was, in fact, a featureless little bit of flesh, which might assume shape some day." The bachelor stood alone. The rest contended for likenesses.

And one thoughtful friend of the family went away wondering what mental and moral likenesses, now certainly quite unknown and unknowable, lay hidden beneath the external features. For every child is an invisible photograph. You have seen these photographs, which look like sheets of white paper, but which, when immersed in water, show the lines of a picture which come out with growing distinctness, or the likeness of a face. So the hidden likenesses in the child, the great realities of being which are at once covered and revealed by the external dress of the body, with its mingled pattern gathered from progenitors, from ancestors, and from relations, will show themselves when mind and soul shall be steeped in the waters of trouble and temptation. The very texture of his body, the quality of his mind, and the temper of his spirit, have come to him from those who have given him being. Even the moods, the fears, the tremors, the tastes, the delights, the antipathies, which they possess have entered by some subtle process into his being. We are reconstituted in our children; we live over again in them "Their sins are our ghosts," says the great Norwegian, Ibsen.

Without committing ourselves to John Wesley's theory, that animals will exist in the world to come—though I do not know why they should not, if we only treat them better—we may gather a suggestive example of the transmission of feeling from the animal world. Mr. Buckland tells us that some young salmon which he was rearing in artificial pools, would show no sign of fear of a man's hand, but if a net were held over them they would tremble with terror. If salmonidæ are so capable of receiving the mental state—it is the only word I can use—of their mothers, how much more capable are the children of human mothers. The tastes we have, we communicate; and they will show themselves in due season. I saw an amusing illustration of that a few days ago. A child eighteen months old stretched out his hand for a cut lemon, perhaps thinking it was an orange; it was put to his mouth, and he sucked it, and looked sufficiently miserable. But its sourness did not prevent him from having another suck. Two days afterwards he had lemon again, and this time he pulled no wry face, but sucked it as a pleasure. A child of eighteen months enjoying the taste of lemon! Now, the explanation was that his father was fond of acid fruit.

What the law of transmission of qualities is, no one knows. But the fact is obvious enough, and most solemn in its import. Indeed, not only may the qualities of fathers and mothers be inherited, but the child may possess a taste which one of his grandfathers had, and which did not appear in either of his parents. This atavism, as it is called, this passing over one generation and appearing in the next, makes the transmission of qualities still more serious and admonitory; for we may now be indulging ourselves in gratifications which our children may avoid, because they see their evil effects, but into which we may draw our grandchildren when we are dead and gone! "The wilful sin of the father," says George Macdonald, "may become the sinful weakness of the child," yes, and of the grandchildren too.

What a tremendous responsibility is this! And when the taste imparted is an evil one, what shameful cruelty, what damning guilt does it lay at the transmitter's door! You communicate to the child something that becomes part of his nature, something that is interwoven with the very texture of his constitution, something that is in him, not upon him, and from which he can no more run away than he can flee from himself! You implant in him a base, vile passion, which, springing up through the purer tastes of his nature, overshadows and poisons them like a deadly nightshade. Remember the child with its perfectly innocent love of lemon—the latent love for sharp acid showing itself as soon as the child came from the bottle of sweet milk. Just so, boys and girls with this taste for strong drink, communicated by a father or a mother who never overstepped the bounds of moderation, but who created in themselves and in their children a certain condition of body out of which excess could easily grow—just so, these boys and girls will go forth from apparently simple habits and good associations, and show themselves sensual, devilish! A fire is kindled in them which they think of extinguishing only by heaping on more fuel. A thirst is created which calls for the deadly poison that originated it, and that strengthens it every time it is partaken of. A burning craving for drink! more drink and a hotter craving; a hotter craving and more drink! more drink! So the poison is taken for a remedy, until too often its fatal work is done, and death stops the ghastly process. "You cannot tell," said a fallen Blue Ribbonite to me a few days ago, "you cannot tell what a fire there is within me! My inside feels in a flame!"

Now the terrible thought is that that temptation to drink, that appetite for it, continues in some cases, with more or less intensity, as long as life lasts. It is the entail of vice which cannot be cut off in a generation, sometimes not in two or three. There is something specially painful when we further recollect how this dread birth-gift is the inheritance of some of the finest and most promising natures sent into the world. It spoils their all. You shall see a man endowed with some of the highest gifts, broken and ultimately ruined by the tendency he cannot control. Reason is powerful, imagination is bright, memory is strong; but there is this fatal flaw, this hidden weakness, which cripples effort and disappoints hope. He is always coming short. He ought always to succeed, but he always fails. Men of this kind are chapters of life which are never finished. Their work is like a temple carried a few feet from the ground, and then left open, wrecked, incomplete—a fine design, a noble commencement, but no accomplishment; and remember that the finer the nature, and the grander its possibilities, the keener its sufferings at its failures. Noble souls with this animal weakness despise themselves, loathe themselves, whenever it conquers them. They scorn to take their fill at the swine troughs, and yet they go to them. They know they ought to be sitting with scholars, judges, rulers, and yet they cannot break loose from the revelry of some of the lowest of men. Their shame makes them desperate; their failure reckless. They care for no one, and for nothing, and yet they care much; for their sufferings correspond to their capacity; and they would be glad to realise the better things they know, to do the higher things of which they are capable, and to enjoy the fellowship of purer men and women, whom they cannot approach.

He loathed the false, yet lived not true
To half the glorious truths he knew;
The doubt, the discord, and the sin
He mourned without, he felt within.

Untrod by him the path he showed,
Sweet pictures on his easel glowed,
Of simple faith, and love of home,
And virtue's golden days to come.

But weakness, shame, and folly made
The foil to all his pen portrayed;
Still, where his dreamy splendours shone,
The shadow of himself was thrown.

Lord, what is man, whose thoughts, at times,
Up to thy sevenfold brightness climbs—
While still his grosser instinct clings
To earth, like other creeping things?

So rich in words, in acts so mean;
So high, so low; chance-swung between
The foulness of the penal pit
And Truth's clear sky, millennium lit.

Now it depends upon the habits and tastes of parents whether their children, "Swung between the foulness of the penal pit, and Truth's clear sky, millennium lit," shall be more powerfully drawn to the darkness and foulness of the pit than to the light and glory of the sky.

To take another illustration of the life-long sufferings entailed upon children through drink, think of the pain and disadvantage of bearing a drunkard's name. Men are sunflowers made to grow, and expand, and become beautiful in the sunshine of honour, of love, of confidence, of respect. But a drunkard's child is placed in the shade at his birth. Poor child, how sad is his lot! He is ragged, dirty, unlovely in his appearance, and can only look upon the purity and brightness of better homes than his as upon the glory of heaven, and he can never enter. His very name is a brand of shame—a burden, a disadvantage, a cause of suspicion and fear among men. Remembering the hereditary tendency of which I have already spoken, they wonder whether he will turn out good or bad—they fear bad; and it is only natural they should fear. So he encounters the chilliness of suspicion where young child-nature should have at least the brightness and warmth of hope—if not the advantage of absolute trust, that he may have to win by worthy conduct—but he should not be denied hope. To have a fear from everybody, a shrug of the shoulder, a doubt, a hesitation, is enough to daunt the courage of a child, much more a child weak in moral resolution and surrounded by disadvantages of the worst kind. And though he may do well, though he may make a fair start in life, the name will always cling to him and the shadow always go by his side. To him is denied the wonderful aid of looking to a parentage that bestowed honour and called for high moral and religious effort to uphold it. Think of the difference between a drunkard's boy as he looks back to his home and his parents, and a Wilberforce, such a one as delights to plead the cause of Temperance among high and low. Why, the mere name of Wilberforce is enough to make a man ask himself how he can carry it worthily, and hand it down pure, unsullied, unblemished, undefamed, to his posterity. And asking it honestly, he will not fail to discover that the name was made illustrious by the grace of God welcomed into the heart, and obeyed in the life, and that only by the same grace can it be sustained. But a drunkard's child might easily say: "In the shade, where I was born, I must live and die; I have nothing worth striving for." Though to him also is this grace offered, whereby he may cleanse himself from pollution, walk as a child of God, and conquer as a soldier of Christ. With God all things are possible, and in the glories of Divine sonship the darkness and shame of human birth and heritage may be lost and forgotten.

Time will not allow me to do more than mention the sufferings of a physical nature which are sometimes inflicted for life upon children through drink. The broken limb which never regains its original strength and fitness for work; the sapped and undermined constitution which is never equal to hard effort, and never enjoys the luxury of bounding health; the scar which tells the tale of a father's violence, the paleness and weariness which point back to a mother's neglect—what a life-long disadvantage is here; what untold pain, when you count up the days, and nights, and years, over which it is extended. Only when the poor outraged body is laid in the grave will this suffering, the entail of vice, cease.

To any parents, then, who may be addicted to drink, whether moderately or immoderately, let me speak the weighty words of Dr. Pusey: "Wouldst thou not have children which thou wouldst wish unborn; reform thyself." And to all, whether they have children or not—indeed if they have none, they ought to gather a family of God's little ones from among the forgotten and neglected—to all I say, for the children's sakes, come over to the side of Gospel Temperance. Be abstainers, and by wearing the "bit of blue" show that you are abstainers. The children's eyes will sparkle at the sight of the badge when they see it. They will count you a friend at first sight. Let me beg of you, by the unspoken and unspeakable grief which drink has inflicted upon tens of thousands of them, by their shame which has covered them as a cloud from infancy, by their heavy burden of disadvantage never removed from their shoulders, by their fierce temptations burning within and assaulting them from without, by their alarming dangers, and by the utter ruin of body and soul, which too often is their fate, by childhood's wrongs and tears, than which none are so touching, come and aid us in this fight to save the children. If you do, and may God move your hearts to come, to you will be spoken the words of our Lord, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my little ones, ye have done it unto Me."

ADDRESS BY MR. F. MURPHY.

After some genial references to the Chairman (Mr. G. Howard), and to the fact that all the drink-shops on his estates in the North had received the death-warrant, Mr. Murphy said: We have had a good deal of speech-making; what we want now is pledge-signing. Thank God! we are beginning to break the spell of the intoxicating drink, and to find pleasure, and joy, and happiness in this beautiful beverage (holding up a glass of water). It is the same to-night as it was at the dawn of creation, when God Himself brewed it, and flung it out in dew, and set it up as a bow of promise from sea to land. I never knew a child to be hurt because its father drank this—never. It is wonderful what the drink will do. There was a newspaper passed up to me in which there is a statement about the man who makes Bass's beer—how he has built a couple of churches, and presented those churches to religious people. I hope God will help these people, who talk so much about religion, to get rid of their associations with this evil. As long as Christian people will accept churches and gifts from brewers you cannot get them to do anything. (To illustrate this point the speaker related with much graphic skill the story of a man who was acquitted of an offence in America because he had cleverly bribed the jury.)

But our subject is the sufferings of children through the drink. I read a statement in one of the City papers not long ago. A mother had a lovely babe, and that mother learned to love the drink. Somebody may say that she was a brute and a fiend, but she was not until the drink made her so. That woman came home when under the influence of the drink, and saw her little child asleep. She picked it up, and placed it on the fire. The screams of the child were heard, and a woman came to the rescue. She took the child off the fire, but the mother ran at her like a tigress, and caught the child and placed it on the fire again. The woman rescued the child once more; then the mother, to have revenge, took a kettle of boiling water, and threw it over the woman who had rescued her infant. The public press of London gave a mere paragraph to the matter; yet they will give an editorial about Mr. O'Kelly and Mr. McCoan, because they talk about going out to shoot each other. Let the people speak out on this question, and create such a public sentiment that the Press of England will speak out on it too. I thank God for this Gospel Temperance Blue Ribbon Work that is going on throughout the country. I don't know anything else that has helped the babes so much as this. Tens of thousands of people have signed the pledge, and where the children were hungry it has put bread in their hands; and where they had no shoes, it has put shoes on their feet; and where they were afraid of their father and mother, now, thank God, they can come and speak to father, and climb on his knee: instead of bringing home kicks he brings home a paper of candy. Blessed be God, it does not stop there. The family altar has been erected, and the voice of prayer has been heard.

In bringing his rousing speech to a close, Mr. Murphy urged Christians to more heroic sacrifice on behalf of those who are in positions of danger through the evils of drink. To illustrate this he related the well-known incident of the rescue of a child from a burning house by a brave member of the Fire Brigade. He described in glowing speech and with appropriate action the efforts of the noble fireman, baffled for a time, but, cheered on by the spectators, ultimately successful, though at the cost of much suffering to himself. The pent-up feelings of the crowded audience found vent in rapturous and prolonged applause, and the orator resumed his seat after another fervent appeal for signatures to the pledge.

MR. GEO. BLAIKLOCK, of Hoxton Hall, has paid a second visit to Ramsgate, and conducted a five days' Blue Ribbon Mission in the Cavendish-street Chapel. The meetings were very successful, and many new pledges were taken. Mr. Blaiklock will revisit Tunbridge Wells this week, and conduct a second Mission.

A WELL-MERITED REBUKE.—It would seem that a great deal of the Sunday traffic on American railways is caused by "camp-meeting trains." One of the leading lines has resolved to discontinue these, as well as all other Sunday trains. The chairman says: "If Christian people cannot find other places for worship, this company will not violate the Divine and civil law and deny its employés the essential rest of the Sabbath to carry them to camp-meeting grounds."

GRAY'S YARD RAGGED SCHOOLS.—The annual meeting of the friends and subscribers of the Gray's-yard Ragged Church and Schools was held last week, at Burlington Hall, Saville-row, W.; Lord Leigh presided, and there was a large attendance. The honorary secretary (Mr. A. G. Fraser) read the annual report, which described in detail the operations of the past year carried on by means of free breakfasts and dinners, Bible reading, church services, boot clubs, mothers' meetings, drum and fife band, and other agencies. The amount expended during the year had been £760, though unfortunately the income had been about £135 less. The Chairman, in the course of a brief address, said that of the many benevolent institutions of the Metropolis, none could appeal more strongly to their sympathy and support than that. He had formerly frequently wondered where the poor went to church, as he had seldom seen any but well-dressed persons attend. Since he had been in the habit of visiting Gray's-yard, however, he had found out where a portion of them went to. Rev. Donald Fraser, D.D., and other friends addressed the meeting.

WIMBLEDON PROPHETICAL CONFERENCE.

A CONFERENCE was held on May 30 and 31 and June 1, for the study of prophecy in connection with the Second Advent of the Lord Jesus Christ. The Lecture Hall belonging to Emmanuel Church (Rev. C. Skrine) was well filled at both morning and evening meetings during the three days. The addresses given, though expressing different views in many of their details, agreed in the essential points that the coming of the Lord is to be personal and premillennial.

Wednesday, May 30.

Mr. A. Churchill took the chair at the morning and evening meetings, and read passages of Scripture bearing on the subject. They were met, he said, to consider the blessed hope of the Lord's return, and though there are differences of opinion, it matters little so long as we are really looking for his appearing. During all these nineteen centuries He has been preparing a place for His Church; happy is the Christian who can say, "I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course," &c.

Rev. C. Skrine said that though many present had met in years past to study prophecy they had not disagreed; their duty was not to dogmatise but to investigate.

Rev. Canon Garrett read a paper. He said the most important question to begin with is the meaning of the expression "Kingdom of Heaven," or "Kingdom of God," or "The Kingdom." If it means the same thing as the Church of God's elect, then that Church must be a mixture of good and evil. It may be said, not indeed to be the Church, i.e., Christ's body, but the aggregate of visible Churches. John the Baptist and our Lord announced its approach (see Luke xii. 20, xvii. 21, xix. 11; Matt. xii. 28, and xxi. 43). Christ claims the allegiance of all nations, but receives it not (Ps. ii.), but they will yield it when He appears to take the Kingdom. The Kingdom includes rulers and subjects, and the Church is the body of rulers in the Kingdom (see Luke xxiii. 30, and Matt. xix. 28). The Lord called his transfiguration a coming in his Kingdom; it was an earnest of his Kingdom (2 Peter i. 16). The history of the world between the time then present and the appearing of Christ in glory is only sketched in the Gospels by parables. In John v. 28, 29, and Luke xiv. 14 there are two stages of his advent, and, there is reason for thinking, of other stages also. His appearing in the clouds to gather his Church is prior to his coming with his Church to judge and reign. A time will come (the Canon thinks) when signs will lead the Church to expect the Lord daily, viz., the closing of Gentile times, the sun darkened, &c.

Rev. F. A. C. Lillington said the coming of the Lord was a practical truth, intended to deepen our spiritual life, keep us separated from the world, and give us power to resist temptation and overcome Satan. First, it is a personal coming. The Gospels, Epistles, and Revelation, must all be rewritten if this is not so. How pleasant for every child of God to know that the Lord is coming as a Bridegroom for his bride, as a deliverer and rewarder. Second, his coming is twofold, viz., for his saints and with his saints. In 1 Thess. iv. we are led to look at the taking up of the Church to meet the Lord in the air as the first event of a series, therefore the children of God have good cause to look forward with joy. Then there is also a parallel of judgments: (1) the judgment of saints for their works; (2) the judgment of the world. Thirdly, his coming will be sudden; yet signs are given, such as Noe—"As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be when the Son of man cometh." Lot, too, and again signs in the heavens, and "men's hearts failing them for fear." The world scorns the subject of the Lord's coming; He will come as a thief to them, but not so to the saints.

Dr. Alder Smith directed attention to Matt. xxiv. Mark xiii., and Luke xxi., "Tell us," &c., but in Matthew only it is said, "What shall be the sign of Thy coming?" The advent is divided into two stages, yet they are, to some extent, mingled. In connection with the passages above referred to, the abomination of desolation is spoken of; but the Lord will come for his saints before these troubles, or at their commencement. The "elect will be gathered from the four winds." These passages Dr. Smith considers to be synonymous with the rapture of 1 Thess. iv., and the "gathering together unto Him" in 2 Thess ii. Considerable emphasis was laid upon the expressions, "waiting Christians," and "faithful ones;" and the term "generation," in "this generation shall not pass away," &c., means race or people, and refers to the Jews. The two signs given are (1) the preaching of the Gospel among all nations; and (2) the fig-tree, symbolising the Jewish nation.

Dr. Flavel Cook remarked that the difference of opinion on various passages relative to the subject which appear to be contradictory are not really so, and need not stumble us. The Scriptures speak in a language which condescends to man's way of thinking, by using expressions which he can understand. The coming is one, yet double: He will come for his people and He will be manifested; the former to perfect salvation, and the latter to judge the ungodly and deliver Israel. The Lord will come personally; and as to the necessity for a large amount of time ere the Lord can come, why should it be so? The Lord is able to do all things. Notwithstanding the development of anti-Christian power, the principles of infidelity in high places, and the lordship and godship of reason, the true bark will never sink.

Rev. H. E. Brooke spoke of a conference on unfulfilled prophecy which took place many hundreds of years ago. There were only two at that conference, and they were joined by a third, who, after having spoken to them on the subject of their conversation, said, "O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken." It is just this point "all" which expresses the position of students of God's Word to-day. Our differences are the result of not understanding "all that the prophets have spoken." Nay, these differences of opinion really help, and Christians should search the Word of God, not taking one side of the question, but compare scripture with scripture, and the teachings of men, also tested by the Word. The Lord said, "Let your loins be girt about with truth," and Peter wrote, "Gird up the loins of your mind." This indicates mental effort on our part, and a preparedness which we can only learn from the Word. There are at least twenty-eight allusions in the Epistles which refer to the Lord's coming, and which if carefully read will be seen to be the A B C of Bible truths, and not full of difficulty. The Thessalonians, "turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven;" thus we see the knowledge of the coming of Christ is a part of the truth learned—if properly learned—at conversion.

Rev. C. Graham spoke of the sanctifying power of the truth of the Lord's coming. He is sent forth for the very purpose of raising the saints and catching them up. The man of apostacy will be revealed, but the Lord will consume him by the spirit of his mouth; death will be destroyed, the books will be opened, and death and Hades cast into the lake of fire. Paul prayed that the Corinthians might come behind in no gift, "waiting for the coming of the Lord." James comforts the saints by saying, "The coming of the Lord draweth nigh." Peter assures them of "praise, honour, and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ." Set your hope on Him, and your purification will just follow. We shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ to receive the rewards for our services, and to take rank with Christ.

Thursday, May 31.

Rev. Gosset Tanner spoke of the various aspects of the Lord's coming as mentioned by the Apostles who wrote Epistles. St. James links it with patience, and that in connection with the wickedness of rich men (Jas. v. 1—8). St. Peter speaks of the Lord's coming in connection with obedience and holiness (1 Peter i. 13-16). St. John links the same truth with abiding in Christ—(1) abiding in the consciousness of the efficacy of His atoning sacrifice, in the power of his spirit, in tenaciously keeping his word and in unceasing, mutual fellowship. St. Paul speaks of the Lord's coming, bringing full redemption to all the saints (see 1 Cor. xv. 14-54; 2 Cor. v. 2-4; Phil. iii. 11 and 1 Thess v. 23)—viz., of body, soul, and spirit.

Rev. H. Webb-Peploe agreed with the last speaker in the main, but he had looked upon the Apostle Paul's statements about the Lord's coming as embracing all the others had said. The one great thought is that each believer will be like the Lord when He comes. St. James teaches us submission to God; this was one of the chief characteristics in the life and death of our Lord when He gave Himself for our sins. St. Peter was a man of action, ever and anon showing his devotion to his Lord and Master, whether in preaching the Gospel or suffering for Christ, having the crown of glory in view at the coming of the Lord. St. John's thought was one of constant and entire satisfaction in his Saviour, and that longing of his soul fulfilled at the coming of Jesus. Men say the Lord's coming is not practical, but from James, Peter, John, and Paul, we have a practical truth brought before us wherever it is spoken of.

Dr. Anderson read a paper on "The Casting Away and Receiving of Israel," as stated by St. Paul, in Rom. xi. 15. He said Israel was the key by which the storehouse of prophetic truth could be unlocked. The history of Israel in the future is brilliant beyond description. The time is at hand when Israel and the Church—that is, Jew and Gentile—shall be manifestly one in Christ, and the Jerusalem of earth shall be in happy accord with the Jerusalem of the heavenlies. Nothing in the past has failed of all that God has promised, nor will it. Connect and read verse 15 with verses 1, 2, 11, 12, 25, and 26. Blindness (or hardness) in part is happened unto Israel until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in; then all Israel shall be saved, and become the heralds of salvation to the world at large. The casting away of Israel is a fact still; a godly remnant will be spared, but the larger number of the Jewish race will perish, when the Lord arises to shake the earth. Simeon declared that God did visit the Gentiles to take out a people for his Name. This is going on during the interval of Israel's rejection. It is important to distinguish between the restoration and conversion of the Jews; the former takes place in unbelief, the latter when they look on Him whom they have pierced (see Jer. xxi. 10, xxx. 3; Ezek. xxxix. 28; Amos ix. 15; Hosea iii. 5, and Zech. xii. 10, xiii. 9). The result is as "life from the dead." The millennial blessedness, with Antichrist destroyed, Satan bound for a thousand years, the Temple set up, and the truth of Jacob's ladder brought to pass, will bring heaven and earth into loving accord. In view of these wondrous realities let us not sleep as do others, but look for his appearing, having this as an incentive to faithful service, waiting and watching, praying and working, in the daily expectation of his advent.

Rev. J. Wilkinson read 1 Sam. xii. 22—24, and remarked that God would keep his word. There was a practice among many Christians of taking all the blessings of the promises to Israel, and putting all the curses on the head of the Jews.

The Jews are not cast away finally, for they will yet be restored; they are not cast away individually, for the Gospel is preached to them, and is as free to them individually as to Gentiles. The cause of their being cast away as a nation for a time was—

(1) Idolatry:—witness the ten tribes.
(2) Rejection of Christ.
(3) Forbidding the Gospel to the Gentiles.

Wrath to the uttermost has come upon them, but in the Epistle to the Hebrews it is written: "He is able to save to the uttermost." The consequences of their fall are—the Gospel is preached to the Gentiles, but the loss to the Jew is that of country, constitution, home, and "the Kingdom of God." All through the Old Testament and a greater part of the New, we read of Gentile blessing being the result of Israel being blessed. The Lord cast off the only nation He chose to be his because of their sin, and is now taking out from among all nations a people for Himself, as a Bride; and presently He will restore the castaway nation to be the centre of blessing to all the world.

Rev. J. A. Aston spoke of the Lord's coming as, first, for his people; second, with his people; and, third, to set up his kingdom. Many persons got into difficulty through thinking that certain things must precede one phase of his return which properly belong to another. The "day-star" has arisen in the hearts of many of the Lord's children, and no subject is more calculated to stir up God's children to earnestness than a good understanding of the Lord's second coming. The Old Testament period may be considered as the dispensation of the Father; the present, that of the Spirit; the future, that of the Son, until all will be delivered up to God, and He will be all in all.

Rev. A. Fausset read a paper of considerable interest on the promised blessing of the latter rain which Jehovah promised Israel if they would serve Him with all their heart. He would give rain in due season. But they rejected the Lord and chose Cæsar. Therefore God has rejected Israel for a time, making her sin and the world the instruments of her punishment. Rain fell at intervals between the three physical and natural periods; so now, but the full blessing can only come when Israel's heart is fully moved toward God. Our Scriptural warrant for expecting the blessing of the "latter rain" is in Joel ii. The former rain is the outpouring of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost.

This promise of God is far from exhausted, though partly fulfilled at the first Pentecost. Just as the periods of natural rain are connected by intermediate showers, so the dispensation of the Spirit extends from the first outpouring till the Lord comes. We are on the verge of the latter rain: there shall be a full outpouring on Israel first, and then upon the world at large. Now is the time of the regeneration of individuals, by and by of nations (Is. lxi. 8).

The means for obtaining this blessing are (1) the promises of God (Zec. xii. 10); (2) labour for the conversion of sinners, see Acts iii. 19, 2 Pet. iii. 12, Is. xxii 15; and (3) patient expectation of the Lord's coming, see Jas. v. 7, Heb. x. 25, 2 Thes. ii. 1.

Then we come to the signs. It is "when the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up the standard," and "the Redeemer shall come to Zion," &c. (Is. lxix. 20; Rom. xi. 26). The first sign is the need of Israel and the world for the Spirit of God. Unclean spirits are notoriously manifested in infidelity, lawlessness, and spiritualism.

The beast, i.e., the Godless world-power, is casting off the harlot (Rev. xvii.). Rome stands at the front of Apostate Christendom. How great is the falling away from the living God and his Church? Many live without prayer and without the Word, and materialism and paganism dominate among the educated and uneducated alike. Another sign is as the Spirit of Christ in Noah preached to those before the flood, so now the Spirit is pleading with sinners before the elective dispensation closes. Another sign also is in Ps. cii. 13. There has been a learned and laborious research into the stones of Jerusalem.

The effects of the outpouring of the latter rain upon Israel is found in 2 Cor. iii. 15, 16. The Spirit of the Lord will deliver Israel from bondage. Instead of the harlot church and the beast-world power, there will be the Bride reigning with Christ in the heavenlies over Israel, and the nations will be freed from Satan's presence. Ezek. xxxvii. 9—19 will be fulfilled, "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

There are four ways in which the Spirit operates (1) on the soul of the believer; (2) regenerating the body; (3) He will regenerate the world-nations, with Israel at their head; (4) He will regenerate the world nature, Ps. xiv. 30.

Rev. C. Skrine said that the Apostle Peter did not say the prophecy he quoted from Joel was exhaustively fulfilled (Acts ii.) in the pouring out of the Spirit on the Day of Pentecost; it will have its final accomplishment when "all flesh" shall be reached. Now we have an interval of nineteen centuries, but the times of refreshing then begun will yet reach the Gentile world as a whole, with Israel as a basis. There are three reasons why we may believe the last days to have come. (1) The spread of the Gospel all over the world; there never was such a time as the present in this respect. (2) The Lord shall be in the midst of his people Israel (Joel ii. 27); and this is true of his people in the present dispensation; more true now than ever it was—witness the present and many other like conferences. (3) There has been since the Reformation a great revival of doctrine. It is better to have a weak theology with the Lord's blessing, than a correct statement of truth without blessing. The truth of sanctification has been considerably brought to the front of late, and also a revival of the precious truth of the Lord's Coming. For these, and many other reasons, he believed the appearing of the Lord was very near.

The afternoons were devoted to answering questions on what had been previously stated; on Friday evening all Christians were invited to gather around the Lord's table to remember his death.

In this brief report of the Conference a difference of opinion will be seen as regards some minor details respecting the Lord's Coming. The "historical" and "futurist" views were both represented, and there was a mutual forbearance on the part of the brethren present. That so large a company should be gathered to study the return of the Lord is a matter for profound thankfulness.

A full report of this Prophetical Conference will be found in the pages of Word and Work of to-day's date, price 2d.

CONVALESCENT HOME FOR CHILDREN.—Those desirous of placing children needing special care, from hospitals or otherwise, at the seaside, will be interested in learning that arrangements may be made for their reception at the Home for Children, established at 7, College-place, as a branch of the London and Brighton Invalid Home, Kemp Town. Inquiries may be addressed to Miss E. S. Elliott (Hon. Sec.), 66, Mildmay Park, London, N., or to the Matron, Mrs. Jenkins, 7, College-place, Brighton.

MARINERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.—The thirty-fifth anniversary of this Society was held in the Seamen's Bethel, Old Gravel-lane, London Docks, on Tuesday, May 29. The proceedings commenced in the afternoon with a Conference. The annual meeting was held in the evening. The Report showed an important work in the Port of London and on the sea-coast, including services ashore and afloat, distributions of Bibles, books, and tracts, in various languages, Sunday-school, mothers' meeting, temperance meetings, lodging-house services, free libraries, &c.; it contained the following: "The past year has been, perhaps, the most important in the Society's history, changes of magnitude, affecting the entire administration, having been effected after long and thorough investigation and prayerful consideration by the Committee." Rev. Philip Gast, Chairman of the Committee, Mr. W. R. Mumford, Mr. Skentelbury, Mr. William Dyne, Rev. H. E. Smith, Mr. J. Robey, Mr. Thomas Cogswell, and other gentlemen, addressed the meeting, urging the claims of the Society upon the Christian public.

THE MONTHLY TRACT SOCIETY.—The Council Room at Exeter Hall was well filled on Wednesday week at the annual meeting of this society, whose object is to bring the subject of personal religion periodically before the middle and upper classes and the general diffusion of evangelical literature. It has recently received into amalgamation with itself the Protestant Tract Society, whose special mission it was to afford a knowledge of events relating to Romanism, Ritualism, and Rationalism, to counsel and advise perplexed Protestants, and in other ways to help the cause of evangelical truth. This amalgamation has been an advantage to both so far as economy of working is concerned, although the funds for Protestant work are kept entirely distinct from those of the general work of the society. After a few words from Lord Shaftesbury, the chairman, who spoke highly of the good which was being accomplished by the Society, referring especially to its work in France and in India, Revs. H. Webb-Peploe, Burman Cassin, Dr. Wright, Dr. Wickson, H. J. Sharpe, M.A., and other friends, gave interesting testimony to the usefulness of tracts, and urged, with much force, the claims of the Society.

THE CHINA INLAND MISSION.

THIS Mission held its anniversary meetings in the Conference Hall, Mildmay, last Thursday afternoon and evening. In the afternoon a goodly company assembled in the large Conference Hall. It was expected that Lord Shaftesbury would have presided, but important and pressing business in the House of Lords prevented his attendance. In his regretted absence Mr. Robert Scott took the chair.

At the commencement of the proceedings Mr. Hudson Taylor expressed much solicitude that those present should not only feel interested but receive a personal blessing. A hymn was sung, and Rev. J. Wilkinson, with much unction, prayed that God's richest blessing might rest on the operations of the Mission, and that Christians all over the land might take a practical interest in its work.

Mr. Broomhall, secretary, said the income for the past year had been £13,878 4s. 4d., which was an increase of £4,327 over that of the previous year.

Mr. James E. Mathieson said these anniversaries were always of deep interest, because of the catholic character of the Mission and the growing progress that is reported. As representing Mildmay, he welcomed them to the Hall, and said he should feel very jealous if these meetings were ever transferred to Exeter Hall. China has been highly favoured in this respect, that direct Gospel preaching has ever been a chief characteristic of the Missions that have laboured in it. Many of the early Indian Missions were conducted on the educational principle, getting few conversions, and leaving those who were thus educated open to other and less evangelical influences. There is now in China a vigorous self-propagating Church. The Chinese, as a people, have a strong moral stamina above most other nations. Mr. Mathieson quoted several cases to show the self-propagating power of the Gospel when received by the Chinese. They have to suffer much persecution, and the loss of their worldly goods, in thus openly accepting and confessing Christ. Let us trust the coming years will see a wider and deeper blessing than ever before.

Mr. Hudson Taylor said it was five years since he had been present on a similar occasion; during that time God had given them very abundant blessing. He had many hallowed associations in connection with Mildmay, which seems to have had bequeathed to it much of the spirit that pervaded the meetings at Barnet. He would not venture to say much as to the rise and early progress of the Mission. In the matter of funds, God had been very good to them; He had given them ten new workers during the year, each of inestimable value. He had given them to see some very important openings in the Empire. Three large provincial capitals had been permanently opened up for missionary work. One of these was Ching-tou, the capital of the province of Si-Chuen. The people there flocked day by day to the house of Mr. and Mrs. Riley to hear the Gospel. They had been steadily planning and working to obtain a footing in the city of Sin-gan, the capital of Shen-si. The agent there, Mr. King, had had the joy of seeing his first convert. In Yun-nan, the capital of the province, permanent work is being done, and it is hoped that soon the same thing will apply to the province of Hu-nan.

Mr. Taylor referred to a map of China hanging behind him, on which a black line was drawn dividing the map. Five years ago there was no native Christian, and no settled work known to the west of that line. More than that, there was no lady missionary five years ago to the west of the line. Mrs. Taylor went out to China during the time of the great famine, and she with her companion were the first to cross the line. A number of the children who were cared for had been converted. Now in the Inland Mission alone there are sixteen lady workers in Western China. They have gone to the far west of Yunnan, a three months' journey from the coast. Not only are there missionaries planted in these provinces, but there are at least 150 native converts in these places. God has given the workers to see that their labours have not been in vain in the Lord. Nine new centres for work has been opened during the four years.

Referring to another map, on which red marks traced the itineraries of Mr. James Cameron, Mr. Taylor followed the wanderings of this redoubtable Christian missionary during the same period. The toil represented by these journeys is incalculable. Many of the other missionaries have also carried out large itinerant work. In two journeys Mr. Parker travelled 2000 miles, distributing and selling Scriptures as he went, in different languages. Over 6000 copies of Scriptures were sold, and through them some have already been brought to the truth. The speaker said he had met with at least six cases in which the simple reading of the Gospels had been blessed to the conversion of individuals and the enlightenment of those around.

The work, said Mr. Taylor, is a large one and the workers are greatly scattered. How are the needs of the work met? By God, through his stewards in England. We have shared the experiences of other Missions in having a falling revenue during the autumn. During last autumn and winter the amounts sent from England were not half enough for any one of these months. The remittance for October came. It was impossible to divide it between the workers, so I went to my room and spread the letter of advice before the Lord and asked his guidance as to its disposal. Then help began to come in China. One sent fifty dollars, and another sum came, and all the needs of that month were supplied; though there was not much left, yet no one had lacked. Next month when the remittances came I felt sorely tried, but I took the matter again to the Lord, and all the needs of the hour were met. So with the months that succeeded. We could never tell all the wonderful answers we have had to our prayers and our needs. Such service is the happiest of all service, and I feel as if I were the happiest man in the world—not carrying on my own shoulders the cares of this Mission, but knowing that I am carried on the shoulders of the great and loving God.

Dr. J. Edmond said that after the deeply thrilling facts given by Mr. Taylor, any general statement from him would be out of place. He had come simply to express his sympathy with the Mission, whose principles and practices he greatly approved of—simple faith in God for the supply of the needed means, and the proclamation of the simple Gospel of Jesus Christ for the conversion of the people. The itinerary work of the Mission reminded him of the work of our Lord, who went about from place to place, doing good and preaching the Gospel of the kingdom. He had always been struck with the genuineness of Chinese conversions, as shown by the way in which they immediately began to testify to others. Among the ten new agents who had gone out during the past year, one had gone from his church. The farewell meeting held when he went, had been made a blessing to his church and congregation. In giving lives as well as money, it is more blessed to give than to receive.

Rev. F. Greeves said every Christian heart must have been moved at the statements they had heard. As one who had not been a foreign missionary, he thought that Mission-work in China was exceptionally difficult, and should claim much thought and prayer. He believed thoroughly in carrying on Missionary work partly by education, but this was very difficult in China. There is not the same motive for the Chinese to seek education from Englishmen as in India. He regarded the opium trade as another serious hindrance to the Gospel in China. The evil thing would go on until the Christian conscience was aroused, and the nation sent only those men to Parliament who would remove this obstacle. He thought that this Inland Mission had a special claim on the Christians of England. Many foreign missionary reports are dry exceedingly, and so he turned with great refreshment, month by month, to China's Millions, and the stirring records it contained. In the Wesleyan Mission in China, they had lately had many pressing requests that they should arrange the meeting places so that women could attend. So many men had come to hear the Gospel that they wished their wives to hear it too. That was one of the outward indications that a great work was going on below the surface. Mr. Hudson Taylor might well spread his needs before the Lord, because he has laid himself and all his possessions on the altar. Have we done that? The first duty of the Christian is individual effort for others, and if the Christian Church were to duplicate itself every year for the next ten years the whole world would be converted in that period.

Mr. Geo. Muller said he had to bear his testimony to the value of the operations of this Mission, and he praised God for the abundant blessing that He had caused to rest upon it. In these days of scepticism the single matter of waiting on God for the support of the work, without pressing anybody for help, was of vast importance to the Church of Christ. The commission to go out and preach the Gospel to every creature, and the promise to be with those who thus go, implies that every need will be supplied. The assurance that in the end God will triumph over all the power of the enemy is a source of great encouragement to the missionary. Although we do not believe that all the world will be converted before the Lord's return, yet we ought so to labour as if the conversion of the world depended on us. The Lord yet tarries for awhile, that many more may be saved. Never since the creation of the world, not even in the days of the Apostles, has the work of conversion been so successful as during the last thirty-five years. We are commanded to "Occupy till He come." In July, 1829, my eyes were first opened to see the truth as to the Lord's Second Coming, and I can well remember the first thought was: What can I do to win souls for the Lord while He tarries? The question should arise in every heart: "May I not give myself to missionary work in China?" We may not be called ourselves, but if the Lord calls any of our sons and daughters, let us give them gladly to the work. If no call comes to us in this way, still we can by correspondence, by counsel, by advice and prayer, help those in the field. Are we doing anything in this way? How often do we pray for these missionaries? Do we seek to comfort them and strengthen their hands in God, as we have opportunity? Then do we help them with our money? We are not pressed for that help, but it is our business to stand before God and ask what He would have us to do in this matter. How much money have we given to this Mission or to other Missions among the heathen—the twentieth part or the fiftieth part of our means? I will say nothing as to the proportion, but as God's faithful stewards we ought to say to Him: "What wilt Thou have me to do with that which Thou has entrusted to me in this world?" It is this state of heart that the Church of Christ needs, and we should pray that we and all Christians may have this spirit more and more. If we were all brought to this, I believe one hundred times more could be accomplished than is now accomplished. The Church of Christ has ample resources. The Lord help us individually, and as members of the Church of Christ, to say, "What wilt Thou have me to do?"

Mr. R. Scott said the childlike trust in God displayed by the head of the Mission reminded him of his own little one, who, when he reaches home, says to him, "'Oo must take me on 'oor big tolder." So let us come to God as children and trust Him to sustain us in all our times of difficulty. Referring to the opium question, he said that unless we repent and forsake our national misdeeds, the Lord will visit our land with his judgments. He urged that Christians should combine, in a determined effort, leaning on the strength of God, to influence our legislators on behalf of what is right.

Another meeting was held in the evening, at which interesting addresses were given.

Letters to the Editor.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN SWITZERLAND.

Dear Sir,—The letter of "Sigma" in your last number on "Religious liberty in Switzerland" is partly true, partly exaggerated. It is true, inasmuch as the Salvation Army has been the occasion of rousing a sad anti-religious movement; exaggerated, inasmuch as the claims of religious liberty have not lacked from able and persevering advocates. The State Council of Neuchâtel had taken at first a firm and correct attitude; actually it seems to listen to the passionate suggestions of the radicaux (the leading political party), but the danger is not so great as "Sigma" says; if the house of Mr. A. H. has been assaulted, this sad incident will, no doubt, not renew itself. A petition of fifty-nine pastors of the canton of Neuchâtel has just been sent to the Great Council, asking this authority to take sufficient measures in favour of an entire religious liberty for anyone so long as laws and morals are not concerned. The religious services in chapels and church continue to be held quite safely everywhere.

May I say that "Sigma" has taken a tragic tone a little too soon; your countrymen may safely come here, and they will find Christian friends to welcome them.—Yours truly, P. J.

Auberson Ste. Croix, June 1.

ANOTHER REPLY TO CANON TRISTAM.

Dear Sir,—Canon Tristam, the author of the "Land of Moab," has lately said, and his words are reported in your "Notes and Comments," "Two-thirds of the Congregationalists are Arians, and there are few Congregationalists who dare preach the doctrine of the Atonement." He advances not one tittle of evidence for this most extraordinary and unfounded statement. I do not charge him with wilfully transgressing the ninth commandment, but I do not hesitate to say that he knows far more about the land of Moab than he does about Congregationalism. If he had followed with any degree of attention the history of the Independents for the last few years, he would have been compelled to believe that the vast majority of our ministers remain true to the cardinal points of the Divinity and Atonement of Christ. I do not deny that we have some "Broad Churchmen" amongst us, as there are in the Canon's own Communion, but these, as was abundantly proved at our Leicester meetings of the "Congregational Union," held about five years ago, were in a very small minority. In 1836 the Rev. Joseph Gilbert published, as one of the "Congregational Lectures," a treatise entitled the "Christian Atonement," in which the view of the Godhead of our Saviour and the substitutionary character of his sufferings was strongly maintained. Forty years after, Dr. Dale, of Birmingham, delivered another of the "Congregational Lectures," also on the Atonement, wherein the same great doctrines are eloquently and scripturally set forth. I have, as one of them, mingled a great deal with Congregational ministers for the last fourteen years, and I am convinced that the great doctrines of the Deity of Jesus and his Atoning Work are not only held but proclaimed by them as a body. I am simply astounded, and, I may say, disgusted, at the statement of the Canon, that "there are few Congregationalists who dare preach the Atonement." I doubt whether the Canon has ever been in a Congregational Chapel in his life. If he had, he would soon find reason to reverse his hasty and calumnious statement. I am glad to know that the Atonement is preached among us, and, from personal experience, I am sure that our people rejoice in our testimony.—Yours faithfully,

J. T. T. Hallowes,
Barnsley. Congregational Minister.

CAMBUSLANG, N.B.—At the invitation of the Cambuslang Sabbath School Union, Messrs. Steele and Mackeith, of Glasgow, came here, and, with the assistance of Mr. Pratt, displayed some beautiful views of the "Pilgrim's Progress." Mr. Mackeith gave the address on each evening, and took particular care on every occasion to impress the saving truths of the Gospel upon the minds of the young. In the after-meeting, Mr. John Colville rendered valuable service, also in addressing meetings of Sabbath-school teachers and others. As a result of these meetings, many a heart and many a home in Cambuslang have been rendered happy. The work received the co-operation of all the ministers in the district.

Notices of Books, &c.

Silver Bells (Longley) is a collection of short stories by several authors, adapted for young people, and well calculated to amuse and instruct them. They are nicely illustrated, and the book is very prettily got up.

Sermons. By Rev. Geo. Walker, B.A., Congregational Minister, Twickenham. Speaight & Sons, Fetter-lane. Suggestive, expository, and helpful to spiritual education.

Our Little Ones. 3d. Monthly. Griffith & Farran. Just the book for the "little ones:" beautiful pictures, quaint verses, and charmingly natural histories of the sayings and doings of small folk.

Those Watchful Eyes. By Emilie Searchfield. T. Woolmer. A touching story of a city arab who lost his own life in saving that of his benefactor. Although rather mournful in tone it is calculated to teach some good lessons to old and young.

Blue Ribbonism: An Oration. By Francis Murphy. This sixteen-page pamphlet contains one of the most earnest addresses delivered by the famous Gospel Temperance advocate. It abounds with striking and beautiful passages, and is calculated to deeply impress the reader. The publisher is J. P. Taylor, Clayton-bridge, Manchester, and the price, 1d.

Our Bobby: a Sea Gift. By Grace Stebbing. Book Society. The heroine is a child who was found washed up on the sea coast of a little village, where she was adopted and cared for by all the villagers, who called her "Our Bobby." The story tells of her usefulness in after life, and furnishes an example of self-denying and grateful devotion to the work of benefitting and morally elevating those around us.

Leaves from a Spiritual Diary. S. Harris & Co., Bishopsgate-street Without. A collection of blank verse, containing reminiscences of the author's own life and experience in various spheres. There is a great deal of sound, healthy moralising on everyday occurrences, and incidents such as are common to all, and not a little spiritual truth, well adapted to quicken aspiration and excite endeavours after holiness and consecration to God.

Footsteps of Truth. Monthly, 3d. J. F. Shaw & Co. The June number of this magazine, edited by C. Russell Hurditch, keeps up its good name for supplying sound expository articles on Biblical truths. The notes on the Epistle to the Hebrews are well worth perusal. The Sonship of the Lord Jesus Christ is intelligently set forth, and the ministry of angels is briefly expounded. "The Believer a Servant," by F. E. Marsh, is a good though brief digest of "how to work."

Life and Work among the Navvies. By D. W. Barrett, M.A. Third Edition. Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. We have here a vivid description not only of Mission work among the navvies, but of all the surroundings and details of navvy life. It is dedicated to the Bishop of Peterborough, under whose auspices the Mission work it describes was carried on. The book is full of interest from a general as well as religious point of view, and serves to show the urgent need there is for such special efforts. Those who are ignorant of the kind of life which a large class of their fellow-countrymen have to live, and so are indifferent to the mental and moral destitution which prevails among them, will do well to read this volume.

Doubts, Difficulties, and Doctrines. By J. Mortimer Granville, M.D. Ward, Lock & Co. The author in his preface states that he does not write as a theologian, but rather as a physiologist, or medical psychcologist, having found that minds diseased by worry and perplexity concerning the subjects he treats may be intellectually relieved. There is much in this book that is discriminating and helpful in the direction at which the author aims. But the intellect, as well as the heart, requires something more than argument to give it rest. There is a conspicuous absence of Christ and his Cross as the soul's true centre, and as the only source of peace and joy, which appears to us fatal to its success in the case of those whose anxiety is really spiritual and deep. There are many passages we should gladly place in the hands of those who are in mental distress, with the belief that they might dissipate some of their difficulties; but, as a whole, it is not the volume we should choose for the purpose, original and able as it may be from the literary standpoint.

The Sevenfold Gifts of the Holy Spirit. By John Spittal, M.A. 1l, Paternoster-buildings. An exposition of Isaiah xi. 2, 3. The Bishop of Manchester introduces this little volume by one short sentence, in which he says, "Your tract is good, and sound, and clear." This is so from a Churchman's point of view, and apart from the first chapter, which treats of Baptism and Confirmation from a sacramentalist's standpoint, we find profitable reflections on the work of the Spirit in the heart and life of the believer, such as may be commended to devout minds.

Little George's Mission; Found at Last; Unspoken Addresses. These are three books by Mrs. G. S. Reaney, and are published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton. 1s. each. They are worthy of very wide circulation, and we should think they are sure to find it. Full of evangelical truth, they find their way to the heart of the reader, by the simple pathos and earnest spirit which pervade every page. They are just the books to interest and attract, and are likely to win to a consideration of Gospel truth those who by other means are inaccessible. Mrs. Reaney has a mission for her pen which cannot fail to result in blessing to many.

Loving and Beloved. A Memorial Sketch of Mary C. Lowdell. Compiled by Emma Holland. Nisbet & Co. A beautiful, tender, and touching piece of biography, rich in its gracious influences upon the mind of the reader. Christian workers will find it not a little helpful to them in the prosecution of their work for the Lord. The extracts it gives from letters written by Mrs. Lowdell are specially worthy of attention. The book has our heartiest commendation. The profits derived from its sale are for the benefit of the Brighton Young Women's Christian Institute.

Early Graves. By J. R. Macduff, D.D. Nisbet & Co. In times of bereavement, when the heart is sore and tender, and friends seem to have no words wherewith to comfort, while yet they long to offer sympathy in some form, the gift of such a volume as this, showing forth the compensations of early death and the unerring wisdom of the Eternal Father, would be most appropriate. The plan of the book before us partakes of a series of word pictures founded on Scripture incidents, and concludes with a few choice scenes from the author's own experience in visiting death-beds among his own flock.

Animals, their Past and Future. By G. H. Pember, M.A. Hodder & Stoughton. Mr. Pember is a writer of superior skill and striking originality, as his volumes on "Earth's Earliest Ages," and "The Great Prophecies," fully prove. This little treatise is marked by all the author's thoughtful and earnest investigation of Bible teaching, and is full of suggestiveness on the theme of which it treats. Whether its conclusions as to the future of the animal creation be accepted or not, the essay cannot fail to induce a more just and humane regard to the claims of the brute creation than many at present display.

Three new story books, just published by Messrs. J. F. Shaw & Co., will keep up the reputation of that house for superior reading for the children. Lost her Shoe; and a Few Little Threads, by Grace Stebbing (1s. 6d.), contains a charming set of stories for elder girls, written with considerable talent. Ruth's Rescue; or, The Light of Ned's Home, by Emily Brodie (1s.), founded on the oft-told tale of a waif rescued from shipwreck, is brightly narrated, with a sensible and natural ending. Out in the Storm; or, Little Messengers, by Catherine Shaw (1s.), is the story of a poor consumptive who found peace at the eleventh hour. It shows how the Gospel has power to illuminate the humblest and most commonplace lives.

Influence of Mind on Mind. By John Bate. 12s. 6d. Wesleyan Book-room. A large, interesting, learned, and wise book, written by a man who has not been carried away from the old moorings, by modern currents of speculative thought. It deals with a wide range of subjects, illustrative of the influence (1) of human mind on human mind, (2) of the Divine mind on the human mind, and (3) of the human mind on the Divine mind. In the first section, the chapter on The Influence of Books is particularly interesting and suggestive; and in the last section, that upon Answers to Prayer. Some of the chapters are characterised by much depth of thought, expressed, however, in language of unmistakable clearness. While the volume is far more interesting than its title might lead some to suppose, its matter is also highly suggestive, and we do not doubt that many persons will use it with profit as a quarry from which to extract facts and thoughts to influence the world for good.

A HANDBOOK OF REVEALED THEOLOGY. By Rev. JOHN STOCK, LL.D. Elliot Stock. This is a new and carefully revised edition of a well-known book, which has done good service in upholding the standard of Evangelical truth against its assailants. Mr Spurgeon contributes a preface, in which he bestows upon the work high praise; indeed, his employment of it as a text-book in the Pastor's College is sufficient to show his hearty appreciation of it. Of course, like all attempts to systematise the truths of the Word of God, it contains some things on which great difference of opinion prevails, but, as a whole, no reader can fail to find it helpful to the investigation of Christian truth.

DAMASCUS AND ITS PEOPLE. Sketches of Modern Life in Syria. By Mrs. MACKINTOSH. Late of the British Syrian Schools. 3s. 6d. Seeley, Jackson & Halliday. This book gives a vivid insight into life in the still populous and thriving town of Damascus and its environs at the present time. It tells of the habits, customs, and religious observances of Jews, Mohammedans, and Greek Christians, of whom the population of the town is now composed, and contains a mass of information on all these points, such as could only be gathered by a continuous residence in the country. Read even without the Scripture references which abound, and to which there is a copious index, the book cannot fail to interest and please; if the references are searched out its value will be enhanced a thousandfold. We cannot but think that the chapter on The Shepherd and his Flock would throw some light on the tenth chapter of John's Gospel, even to experienced students.

COUNT BOBRINSKOY, from Russia, will preach in French, and Lord Radstock will preach in English, Sunday, June 10, at 3.45 and 7 p.m., in Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, three minutes from Victoria-station. It is hoped that the Lord's children will take this opportunity of getting foreigners who speak French under the sound of the Gospel.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.—Mr. George Williams presided on Monday week at the 111th annual meeting in connection with this organisation, at the Memorial Hall, London-street, Bethnal-green. The report stated that the free library and reading-room were developing very much in number of readers. The various ramifications of the work had been successfully prosecuted during the year. Temperance work particularly had been pushed forward with vigour. An effort had been made to extinguish the debt of £400 on the hall reported last year. Two friends had offered £200, and with the proceeds of a recent sale and other donations, they only now needed £30 to accomplish their object. In the open air ten stations in good places have been occupied during the season, where 500 services had been held. The number of workers was now 159. Mr. Williams expressed his pleasure at knowing that the institution, in which Whitefield and Wesley took some administrative part, was of such benefit to the neighbourhood. Addresses were also given by Rev. Dr. McAuslane, Hon. H. Noel, Revs. R. C. Billing, B.A., William Tyler, and J. Wilkinson.

DEACONESSES' INSTITUTION, TOTTENHAM.—The fifteenth annual meeting of this institution was held in the grounds, The Green, Tottenham, on Saturday week, when Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., presided. Advantage was taken of the occasion to lay the memorial stone of the first section of the new buildings, which will very much enlarge and entirely change the outward appearance of the establishment. This section will contain 24 beds, and the cost of its erection will be under £7,000, the necessary sum having already been raised. Dr. Laseron, the director, read the annual report, which showed that during the year they had nursed, counting the visits to out-patients, 13,362, or during the last 15 years 109,183 persons. The demand on the children's ward was, however, so great that applicants had to be refused. Mr. Morley said he believed there never was a time when a louder call was made for the sympathy of those who had influence to those who had need. He referred to the testimony he had received from Cork and Sunderland as to the work of the nurses, not only in exhibiting a kindly sympathy with their patients, but in endeavouring to lift up their minds to a knowledge of their best interests. He said that the drink bill at the parent house was only £5. They never did so well as when the consumption of this particular article alcohol was reduced to a minimum, and he hoped it would soon disappear altogether. Addresses were delivered by Revs. Dr. Paterson, Dr. M'Auslane, Dr. Bevan, Messrs. T. A. Denny, W. Noble, &c.

Mission and other Appeals.

THE POOR OF THE SOUTH-EAST.—Mr. J. SMITH, of 52, Chatham-street, Rodney-road, S.E., appeals to our readers for help towards providing a free tea and a Gospel entertainment for poor people in the neighbourhood of Kent-street, and some of the courts and alleys adjoining.

MILITARY EVANGELICAL CHURCH IN ROME.—The time has come when it seems absolutely necessary to secure a permanent building for the use of the Soldiers' Church. Signor Capellini proposes to purchase a site in a good position as regards the new barracks, while land for building can still be obtained. About £1,600 is the sum required for this purpose, towards which a little over £200 have been already subscribed; and once the site is secured the building would not be proceeded with until the funds required were provided. Will not Christians aid this devoted and self-denying labourer to secure the needed site before the present opportunity passes away, perhaps for ever? Contributions in aid of "The Building Fund" should be made payable to Mrs. L. W. FAIRLEY, 33, Holland Park, Notting-hill, W.

LITTLE EMIGRANTS.—On Monday, Miss Macpherson was at the noon meeting at Aldersgate-street, with a party of little girls, who sail to-day (Thursday) for Canada. One of them (a child of seven) had been sold for a shilling by a wicked sister, and there was a touching story about each one. Mrs. Birt, of Liverpool, has just taken a party of boys to the Province of Quebec, making over 5000 children which these two sisters have removed from our crowded cities to the open lands of Canada, to the great benefit of both countries.

MR. RICHARD WEAVER has been holding special services in Cardiff and the neighbourhood for the last month. He has also been in the Rhondda Valley, where, with its large chapels, there is not one large enough to hold the people that flocked to hear him preach in his inimitable style. Very great good has been accomplished in Cardiff; during the last week seventy souls professed to have found peace. There were a great many remarkable conversions. Among them was that of a captain and his wife from Dundee, and a man and his wife who had been notorious. Mr. Weaver's work will live long in Cardiff after he has passed away. J. R. H.

"THEY BECKONED TO THEIR PARTNERS."

Let me recall the incident, and suggest an application:—

On the Lake of Gennesaret were two ships, but the fishermen were ashore "mending their nets."

Jesus entered Simon's boat, and, launching out into the deep, He said—

"Let down your nets for a draught."

When they had done this, they enclosed a great multitude of fishes;

And their net brake.

Then it was they "beckoned to their partners" for aid, by whose means the mighty catch Divinely given was brought to shore.

In the deep sea of this awful City-Life, we, too, hearing His voice,

Have let down the nets of our Homes.

A great multitude (Twelve Hundred and Eighty and Three) have been enclosed.

The nets show present signs of a heavy strain, unaided they may break.

I beckon herewith to you, my "partners" of many years' standing, co-workers, supporters, and helpers all, "Come to our aid. The Master is with us, in the very ship. By His help the great multitude has been caught. But your help is required to bring them all to shore."

Can any work be more needful or more blessed than that of rescuing Orphan or Destitute Children from the perils that await them if neglected by the Church?

Certainly no undertaking has produced more permanent and blessed results.

Again, therefore, I earnestly invite your aid in His name, who said—

"Launch out and let down your nets for a draught."

Yours by His continued grace,

T. J. BARNARDO.

"We read in Rom. v., 'As by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned;' but Jesus Christ came, and by His death, by the sacrifice of Himself on the accursed tree, atoned for sin, paid the penalty, and bore it clear away, and now all men who believe the Gospel are entitled to all the benefits of His death and life. That is God's good news of glad tidings. That is the grand old-fashioned Gospel, the Gospel we want to-day, just as much as ever we did."—EXTRACT from page 3.

CONTENTS OF NO. 1.

Where is my wandering boy to-night?
One there is who loves thee
The mistakes of my life have been many
Long in darkness we have waited
Are you coming home, ye wanderers?
A ruler once came to Jesus by night
Fierce and wild the storm is raging
Why do you wait, dear brother?
Say, where is thy refuge, my brother?
Why perish with cold and with hunger?
From the riven Rock there floweth

CONTENTS OF No. 2.

What can wash away my stain?
Come, thou weary! Jesus calls thee
Should the death-angel knock at your chamber
The Gospel bells are ringing
Have you any room for Jesus?
Oh come, sinner, come! 'tis mercy's call
Make room for Jesus! room, sad heart!
Oh, do not let the Word depart
Brightly beams our Father's mercy
O Christ, in Thee my soul hath found
Light in the darkness, sailor!

CONTENTS OF No. 3.

When my final farewell to the world I have said
Standing by a purpose true
When the storms of life are raging
I have read of a beautiful city
Ring the bells of heaven! there is joy to day
I have heard of a land far away
"Land ahead!" its fruits are waving
Oh, tender and sweet was the Master' voice
'Tis the promise of God full salvation to give
When storms around are sweeping

CONTENTS OF No. 4.

Of course you know that to and fro, throughout our glorious land
She only touched the hem of His garment
Our Master has taken His journey
Tempted and tried
Father, don't you hear the angels
The prize is set before us
There is a Fountain filled with blood
Would you lose your load of sin?
Yield not to temptation, for yielding is sin

Calls to Christ.

A SERIES OF ADDRESSES BY REV. R. W. NICOLL, M.A.

"The Gospel scheme of salvation is fully set forth, and is pointedly enforced. It is a book which might with much profit be placed in the hands of the careless and unconcerned."—The Record.

"Force and freshness are eminently the characteristics of these 'Calls to Christ'; they are also brief to a proverb, and hence they may be of great service to an earnest evangelist who knows how to use another man's thoughts."
Kelso Courier.

"A choice book. Sweet-scented throughout with the name of Christ, it sets forth the 'old, old story' in eleven simple but explicit lines of Gospel teaching. Though on a familiar theme, it has an unobtrusive originality, and many touches of beautiful thought, which remove it far from commonplace."
Children's Record.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings; And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

"Choice Sayings."

BEING NOTES OF EXPOSITION OF THE SCRIPTURES.

REVISED BY ROBERT C. CHAPMAN.

Happiness, Joy, Comfort & Peace.	Salvation, Justification, Pardon.
Begin every day with the Word of God and prayer, if you would enjoy settled blessedness. It is in the Word of God that the fulness of Christ is revealed, as the rich portion of every one who trusts in the Blood of Christ. (Page 157).	"How can I be pardoned?" says the poor self-condemned sinner. "How can I not pardon?" says God. The sinner looks at his sins; but God looks at his Son's atoning blood. Sinner, do thou likewise. (Page 136.)

FIFTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN"

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK

CASE of Miss M. BONNETT.

This patient came to Coombe Lodge October 7 of last year. She then resided at Norfolk-crescent, Hyde-park. Her illness had commenced in the preceding Winter. Expectoration dark and thick, chest very painful, pains under both clavicles, breathing very short, dyspepsia distressing. The upper lobe of the right lung was found (on examination) to be seriously affected.

In six weeks the patient was decidedly better. In Dec., Jan., Feb., she reported continued improvement.

In short, she recovered her health, and writing me from South-cliff Lodge, Exeter-road, Bournemouth, at the beginning of April, she says: "I cannot tell you the good your medicines have done me, nor how thankful I am to you."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—SPECIAL NOTICE.—Mr. J. SHIPLEY SLIPPER, Surgeon Dentist, is enabled to fit artificial teeth without extracting loose teeth or stumps. These teeth are life-like in appearance, and can be adjusted without any injurious wires, from 3s. 6d. per tooth, and from 20s. a complete set (guaranteed), at the Holborn Dental Surgery, 37, High Holborn, London, W.C., opposite Chancery-lane. All information free of charge. Daily from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. "How to Preserve the Teeth," by J. Shipley Slipper, gratis and post FREE to readers of THE CHRISTIAN on application.

J. Theobald & Co.'s Telescopes.

Of special importance to Tourists, Holiday Seekers, Pleasure Parties, and others.

The leading London Press are unanimous in awarding us the highest praise for the quality and cheapness of our Telescopes. The immense number of repeat orders and unsolicited testimonials constantly received speak for their value more than anything we can say.

Gigantic Strikes! Immense Rise in Prices! A Great Privilege!

Our Glasses are now used all over the known world by Royalty, the Nobility, Army, Navy, Travellers, Tourists, Police, &c.

Owing to immense and continued strikes amongst the workmen in Paris (where nearly all Field Glasses and Telescopes are made), prices are rising rapidly, in many instances from 25 to 50 per cent. While our present stock lasts we shall continue to sell at our former remarkably low prices, but customers should send at once, as our stock is rapidly diminishing.

THE COMBINATION TELESCOPE.

The Marvel of the Age.

OVER 5,000 SOLD IN FOUR MONTHS.

The instrument, without the additional parts, has six best lenses, of such remarkable definition that it will distinguish hills at 25 miles, flags at 20, windows at 10, and time by a church clock at 4 to 5 miles' distance. In addition to this, there is a separate powerful astronomical eye-piece which can be attached, and enables the owner to examine the stars, Jupiter with his four moons, and, by adding the sun-glass also supplied, the spots in the sun. In clear weather the astronomical eye-piece can be used instead of the day one for ordinary purposes, thus giving much greater power, as, while the day eye-piece magnifies 146 times superficial, the astronomical one magnifies 324. The Telescope is made with three brass drawers and black morocco body, shuts up from 17 to 6 inches, and is enclosed with the extra parts in two neat cases, and will be sent carriage free for 12s. 6d. No. 2 size, opening to 24 inches, closing to 8¼, object-glass 16 lines, giving much more extended view, far clearer and longer definition, and less trying to the eyes, astronomical eye-piece also half as large again, and much greater power, 22s. 6d. carriage free. Or No. 3 size, having 19-line object-glass, closing to 10, opening to 27 inches, an intensely powerful glass, specially recommended, with very powerful astronomical eye-piece, 29s. carriage free. Carriage to India 2s. extra on No. 1; 3s. on other sizes. To all other parts 5s. extra on any size, except Canada and America, which is 8s. Table Stands, with double motion, 4s. 6d.; superior in maple wood, 6s. 6d.; Garden Stands, 17s.

All orders must be sent within 28 days, except from abroad, and be accompanied by coupon.

"THE CHRISTIAN" COUPON. 7.6.83.
Entitles holder to one Combination Telescope at above prices, if purchased within 28 days.
(Signed) J. THEOBALD & CO.

Read what the papers say of our Telescopes, and send for one at once, as it is impossible to offer them much longer at these low prices.

CAUTION

YOUNG WOMEN AND GIRLS SEEKING EMPLOYMENT.

LORD SHAFTESBURY has recently described the treatment to which numbers of the above are subjected as "more horribly cruel and detestable than anything contained in the records of the world." These young people are entrapped under false pretences into bad houses, chiefly by means of personal solicitation, advertisements, and registry offices. Therefore, Young Women and Girls are hereby WARNED to avoid conversation with strangers of either sex, and neither to answer advertisements nor apply to registry offices except under the guidance of a trustworthy friend.

East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions.

Mr. and Mrs. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS request the presence and fellowship of Christian friends on this occasion, when a number of Missionaries will be leaving for various parts of the world.

MONDAY, JULY 2, 1883.

AFTERNOON MEETING at 3. | TEA and CONVERSAZIONE at 5.

EVENING MEETING at 7.

FULL PARTICULARS IN NEXT WEEK'S "Christian."

THE BLUE RIBBON GOSPEL ARMY.

RICHARD BARLOW-KENNETT, Esq., has generously offered the sum of £250 as a donation towards the expenses of the Blue Ribbon Gospel Army, under the Presidency of the Rev. M. BAXTER, providing £1,000 additional can be raised in a few weeks. This Army has now more than one hundred stations in England and Scotland, in which Blue Ribbon Gospel Meetings are conducted generally every evening, as well as on Sundays, by 150 paid Evangelists. The expense of these Missions is more than £100 a week, over and above local contributions. It is earnestly hoped that the answer to this appeal will be such as to enable the Army to comply with the conditions, and to extend an agency which, under God's blessing, has been the means of rescuing thousands from lives of sin, drunkenness, and degradation. Collecting Cards will gladly be sent by the President to any who will help to collect for this object. Donations should be addressed to the President, the Rev. M. BAXTER, at the Headquarters, 1, Bakehouse-court, St. Paul's, London.

"Light and gladness and joy and honour . . . a feast and a good day."—Esther viii. 16, 17. "Fellowship in the gospel."—Philippians i. 5. "Rejoice evermore. Pray without ceasing. In everything give thanks; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you."—1 Thess. v. 16—18.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

The Seventeenth Annual Convention of the above Mission will be held (D.V.) at the Town Hall, Kensington (opposite Kensington High-street Station, Metropolitan Railway), on Thursday afternoon, June 14, 1883, at Half-past Three, when Samuel Morley, Esq., M.P., will preside; and Addresses will be given by the following ministers and gentlemen: Dr. Donald Fraser—subject, "Conformed to the Image of His Son." Dr. W. P. Mackay, of Hull—subject, "Christ's Unfinished Work." Reginald Radcliffe, Esq., of Liverpool—subject, "Arise." Refreshments at 5.30. The Meeting will be resumed at 7.30, when the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G., will preside. Dr. McKilliam will speak on "Answered Prayer." Bible Studies at NORTHFIELD.

BY D. L. MOODY, AND OTHERS.

"The Conference of Christian workers at Northfield, Mass., during the month of August, 1881, was a gathering of more than transient interest. The large experience in Gospel activities of those who presented the various topics, gave a peculiar competency to their words and specially adapted them to the instruction and upbuilding of all engaged in Gospel work."

BIBLE AND COLPORTAGE SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

AN undenominational Society, with Agents in all parts of Ireland. Carefully selected and trained Colporteurs are spreading the knowledge of Jesus by the living voice and the printed page. They have access to the people everywhere, and are not interfered with in their work. A contribution of £40 will secure a Colporteur for a year in any part of Ireland. Funds greatly needed.—Rev. H. M. WILLIAMSON, Belfast, and Rev. JOHN ELLIOTT, Armagh, Secretaries, by whom contributions will be gratefully received; or they may be paid at the office of this paper.

A CALL FROM FOOCHOW.

THE COMMITTEE of the SOCIETY for PROMOTING FEMALE EDUCATION in the EAST desire to make an earnest Appeal on behalf of the work which they have been enabled to carry on at this station, in co-operation with the Church Missionary Society, for more than eight years. The Rev. J. R. Wolfe has brought forward the importance of obtaining premises for the permanent occupation of their Lady Missionaries, and of strengthening their staff by sending out another, so that the Boarding School may be enlarged, Day Schools multiplied, and what may, in China also, be called Zenana work (although there are not any zenanas, properly so-called, in that empire), may be regularly carried on. The sum of £800 only is required to complete the purchase of premises which are suitable in every way. The Committee pray that He, whose is the silver and the gold, may touch the hearts of some of his stewards, and incline them to come speedily and willingly to the help of the poor women and girls of Foochow.

Contributions to the Foochow Fund will be thankfully received by Miss E. Rutt, Lower Clapton, E.; Miss Haldane, 118, Westbourne-terrace, W.; Miss Stirling, 77, Cadogan-place, S.W.; and by Miss Webb, 267, Vauxhall Bridge road, S.W.

URGENT APPEAL.—The Committee of the Ladies' Samaritan Society of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, 25, Queen's-square, Bloomsbury, earnestly appeal for contributions in aid of the poorer patients and their families. The work of the Society is not in any way curtailed by the rebuilding of the Hospital, but is still carried on in the new wing, and the Committee will most thankfully acknowledge the smallest gifts in money or clothing. Old coats and trousers are much needed.

KESWICK.—Ninth Annual Convention will be held (D.V.) July 23 to 24.—T. D. HARFORD BATTERSBY, Keswick; ROBERT WILSON, Broughton Grange, Carlisle.—For lodgings apply to Mr. POSTLETHWAITE, Eskin Place, Keswick.

LAWYERS' PRAYER UNION.—It is proposed to hold another social and religious Meeting in London for Barristers and Solicitors, and their Clerks only, on Thursday evening, June 14, 1883. Mr. Justice Pearson in the chair. Any Gentlemen in the legal profession, or their Clerks, who desire to attend, or will assist in inviting others, are requested to apply to Mr. H. C. NISBET, 35, Lincoln's-Inn-Fields.

HOLINESS AND FAITH-HEALING MEETINGS.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

Supported by Voluntary Contributions.
President—
The Right Hon the EARL of SHAFTESBURY, K.G.

Established 1822, for the purpose of employing humble Christian men, well versed in the Scriptures, to visit from house to house throughout the country, and visit all denominations Irish speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required. The work is carried on in a spirit of love.

Subscriptions or Donations will be thankfully received by the Secretary, Capt. KEARNEY WHITE, M., Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin; or at 9, Paternoster-row, London.

The Earl of Shaftesbury says in his last letter to the Secretary: Many thanks for your kind letter, and many thanks to Almighty God for the good intelligence you give me about your Scripture Readers in Ireland. I wish I could more effectively assist you. Your letter is the best thing that I have seen or heard from Ireland.

I enclose my donation, and only wish it was more.—Yours, SHAFTESBURY.

N.B.—Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society"

PARIS CITY MISSION.

Or, COMITÉ AUXILIAIRE D EVANGÉLIZATION DE PARIS.

President—The EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G.
Treasurers.
London—F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-st., E.C. Paris—M. de NEUFVILLE, 6, Rue Halévy.
Superintendents of Missionaries.
Pastors HUGMAN, THEODORE MONOD, GRIDOL, and LEFORT; and Rev. R. W. MCALL.

Seven efficient Missionaries with all diligence now make the Gospel known to the poor of Paris. The conflict with Romanism, error, and immorality is severe, but deep impression is made and trophies are won for Christ. The Committee ask for aid, as their needs are pressing. Income last year about £400 and this is failing. Five such pastors and English ministers are pressing for more of these labourers. Help will be gladly received and full information given by J. M. WEYLLAND, Hon. Sec. for England, 31, Carlton-hill, St. John's-wood, N.W.

GREAT COLEMAN'S, near Ongar, is now opened by Dr. and Mrs. C. C. GRIFFITH to give change of air and rest to educated people of limited means.—For particulars, apply to 45, Finsbury-square E.C.

GEORGE YARD RAGGED SCHOOLS, &c., Whitechapel, E.

GEORGE HOLLAND thankfully acknowledges receiving from E. H., £5.

When sufficient funds are in hand about 600 children from the courts and alleys for a "Day in the Country." Received from L., 5s. The Infant Day Nursery. Week-day and Sunday Schools. Evening Classes. Children's Services. Mothers' Meetings. Mission to Inebriate Women, and Temperance Work. Evangelistic and Open Air Services, and other Missionary Agencies in operation.

Friends are invited to visit the Institution any day but Saturday.

Post Office Orders should be made payable to 66, High-street, Whitechapel, E. Letters and Parcels should be addressed to GEORGE HOLLAND, The Ragged Schools, George-yard, High-street, Whitechapel, London, E.

MRS. WILKES proposes to be at home every Wednesday from Two till Five o'clock, for the purpose of seeing friends of Rescue Work. Trains from Liverpool-street to St. James-street Station, Walthamstow, every half-hour. "The Elms" is within five minutes' walk of the station. The Elms, Coppermill-lane, Walthamstow, Essex.

Figgis, Brighton; Rev. W. Hasham, 19, King's-road, Brunswood-park, N.

TO GODLY PARENTS.—The undermentioned (who is in no way connected with the school) is desirous of recommending an old-established YOUNG GENTLEMEN'S BOARDING SCHOOL, DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED FACING THE SEA on the South Coast, a short run from London, in which a thorough and first-class Education is given, based upon the teaching of the Holy Scriptures.

It is one of the few remaining schools in which the power of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ influences the hearts and conduct of the pupils.

The success, happiness, and training of the Boys have been so remarkable in this School that a BOOK OF TESTIMONIALS GIVEN BY THE PARENTS should be read to appreciate results so unusual. Two Vice-Chancellors have placed their wards as pupils in the school. Reference kindly permitted to Dr. THORN, Paddington, London.

THE WOODLANDS, Hitchin, Herts, Select Boarding School for Boys. For prospectus apply to the Principal, ISAAC SHARP, B.A., a member of the Society of Friends. Careful personal training. Efficient staff of masters, excellent recreation grounds.

BRAMFIELD, Cavendish-road, Clapham-common. Miss RABETT receives a limited number of young ladies as Resident Pupils, to whom she devotes her personal supervision. Refined and Christian influences. Careful mental culture. Special advantages for modern languages. High-class professors attend. Preparation for Cambridge Local and Higher Examinations. Prospectus on application.

For Delicate or Backward Youths

must always be far preferable to ordinary school life, where such boys are usually left to the care and tuition of inexperienced and often uninterested Assistant Masters, and to the rough treatment of harder Schoolmates.

MR. WILLIAM PENN

devotes his personal attention, care, and tuition to such Pupils, of whom he takes only a few, as he desires to preserve the strictly family tone of his home, wherein his Pupils are received as members of, and sharers in, the family life. In the fear and love of God it is sought to train this family, developing all kindly and gentle feeling, encouraging observation and a love of Nature. It is Mr. Penn's conviction that is of more value than an extensively stored memory, and the mere acquisition of knowledge apart from some perception of its significance as a factor in human life and interests is not encouraged. The House is admirably situated on the eastern brow of the northern heights of London, open on all sides and commanding an extensive and delightful view of over twenty miles of River, Lake, Hamlet, and the Forest of Epping, into which it is easy to penetrate for pleasant rambles, &c. Abundant opportunity for close by. A Carpenter's Shop is fitted up on the Premises, and Pupils are taught Carpentry and Joinery by a competent Tutor. Drawing, Painting, and Shorthand are included in the curriculum. Full particulars on application with References to parents of Pupils.

GARRATTONIAN PHILOSOPHY: WHAT IS IT?

"He is not the discoverer who first utters a truth, but he who says it again and again until he compels mankind to hear him!" So said Sydney Smith.

Delays are proverbially dangerous in cases both of incipient or of developed disease. Persons but slightly unwell, "not really ill," delay the use of means which, by invigorating the entire system, would preclude the possibility of the approaching disease becoming fixed. A case in point is at the moment of writing vividly before us. A patient, observing the premonitory symptoms of an incurable disease, wrote to us, stating the case at length, and requesting our opinion, to which we replied by an entreaty not to delay its treatment. Some time afterwards he wrote again, to say that the disease was unmistakeably developed, and requested us to prescribe immediately. Had he done so at first, we believe the disease would never have reached the point at which cure had become doubtful. We have known cases where hereditary disease has been to all appearance eradicated, while the patient had the comforting assurance that, should it reappear, the remedy was constantly at hand. In many such cases, in which youth maintains a constant and unequal struggle against disease, there could not be found a more valuable ally. For consumption, in the premonitory stages, we should recommend Magnetic treatment with confidence; and though in more advanced cases, where organic disease has made rapid strides, we do not pretend to cure, we have yet obtained results which look remarkably like it.

Odo-Magnetic cures are facts; they may be ridiculed — everything worth much has been ridiculed—especially by those whose interests must clash with what appears to them an innovation. What important change could take place in a community without some opposing interests? Harvey was persecuted when he proclaimed his discoveries in connection with the circulation of the blood. Stephenson was ridiculed in reference to the locomotive. Who does not remember, too, how scientific anathemas not only tried to stop the locomotive, but also to put out the gas? But, for all that, the engine runs, the gas burns, and Magnetism cures. The best reply to all misrepresentation is the growing popularity of Odo-Magnetic remedies among all classes of sufferers. They are at this date being used, recommended, and prescribed professionally in every quarter of the globe.

As a most admirable illustration of the remedial virtue of Magnetism we may instance the following:—Being officially associated with the Strangers' Benevolent Society, an ancient charitable institution, we came into contact with a case of confirmed paralysis. Although Thomas Challace, aged 54, had been treated both as an in and out patient of the Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, at Queen's-square, London, W.C., his weakness became so increasingly evident that he was apparently sinking. From the first we were convinced that Magnetic treatment would be successful in this instance, while his friends were anticipating much benefit from hospital treatment. On the 14th of April the patient was clothed with our Odo-Magnetic Appliances, and every second or third day we used the mildest possible electric current down his limbs; on the third day he was able to raise his hand, which at the commencement of our treatment had to be moved for him; on the seventh day he moved the foot, in which he had previously no power; on the fourteenth day he reached his door with the aid of a stick; on the twenty-first day he walked to the corner of the street in which he lives. He is now convalescent, and rapidly gaining strength. This patient is still in the enjoyment of the help thus afforded.

(To be resumed.)

Mr. Garratt will always be happy to confer with any scientific or medical gentlemen, either personally or by letter, upon any phase of the subject, or any case for treatment, and will send a private list of 850 names as referees to any address.—B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

FIFTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN"

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK

CASE of Miss E. W.,* PETERCHURCH —CHRONIC BRONCHITIS, merging into CONSUMPTION.

This patient was brought to me by Mrs. Beard, wife of Rev. Joseph Beard, of Peterchurch. She had been under two doctors in her native place in Wales; both had failed to touch her complaint, which had commenced two years before this and was gradually getting worse, and the patient was getting much weaker. I gave her medicine, with full advice; and, as the result, she recovered so decidedly as to get married, and her husband writes me as follows:— March 8 (from S——, where they now reside): "My wife's father considers it to be my duty to write you regarding her, and to say that two of your large bottles completely restored her to health. Before she commenced she could scarcely walk upstairs. Two of the most eminent medical men in her neighbourhood had attended her with no benefit. If you publish this, kindly forbear to print her name."

* The name and address of this patient will be supplied on application.

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

THE KING OF KINGS.

IN the decision of every question it is essential that we go back to first principles. When the Pharisees asked the Lord if it were lawful to put away a wife for every cause, He at once referred them to the beginning, when God made them male and female; and to their further question about Moses, He replied that Moses, on account of the hardness of their hearts, suffered a man to put away his wife, but from the beginning it was not so.

There are very few questions which do not lead us back to the beginning, and the question whether the law of England can consistently be so altered or constructed as to permit professed deniers of God into a share of the government is certainly not one of the exceptions.

It has been the boast of England that her greatness is founded on the Bible. As a nation we are unquestionably committed to the acknowledgment of God. That at least is ascertained ground. Is there any reason why the nation, having for centuries acknowledged God, should at this late period of history make his existence an open question?

It is declared that any man who is not an alien, a peer, or a felon, has a natural right, if elected, and that any constituency has a right to elect him, to a share in the government of this country, irrespective of any religious opinions he may hold. There are, at least, three fallacies in this view: (1) It claims human rights without considering the rights of God. (2) It makes no distinction between the right to be governed fairly, and the right to govern others. (3) It overlooks the fact that every constituency is a constituent part of the nation, and cannot have a right to act independently of the whole nation.

This country is pledged in a variety of ways, and has been, throughout her history for a thousand years, to the recognition, and acknowledgment, and worship of God. This recognition of God is based upon the Bible. But the Bible declares that GOD created man, and that He committed the government of the world into the hands of man. When the Psalmist asks, "What is man?" he replies to his own question, "THOU madest him a little lower than the angels; THOU crownedst him with glory and honour. THOU madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hand. THOU didst put all things under his feet." GOD, then, is the king-maker. He is the source of governmental power and authority. He who created the world, created man to rule the world. It is claimed, however, that man has a right to rule, independently of God; yes, even though he repudiates his authority, blasphemes his name, and denies his very being. Whence did man derive this asserted right? We deny that any such right exists; and we call upon those who affirm it to declare whence it is obtained.

When God chose a people out of the apostate nations after the Flood, He was himself their King; and when they clamoured for a king that they might be ruled like the rest of the nations, God himself nominated a king after the people's heart; and when Saul despised his commands God deposed him, and set up another king after his own heart. Through all the Jewish history God never for a moment resigned his right of setting up and putting down kings, and when at last backsliding Israel and treacherous Judah had alike rebelled and revolted against Him, He sent them and their kings captive into Babylon.

Then began that great period of history in which we live, and which Scripture describes as the Times of the Gentiles. Its first great monarch was Nebuchadnezzar. He affirmed the principle of human power and authority independently of God. He claimed the right to govern without recognising God, but when Daniel revealed his dream and its interpretation, he bowed down and acknowledged "of a truth it is, that your God is a God of gods, and a Lord of kings, and a revealer of secrets, seeing thou couldst reveal this secret."

But soon he forgot the lesson, and made an image of himself, to which he commanded all the subject nations to bow down. Three men who feared God refused to bow and were cast into the fiery furnace; but God asserted his own rights by delivering them from the fire, and again Nebuchadnezzar acknowledged God, and promoted the men who had disobeyed him, in their higher obedience to his and their Lord and King.

Once more the self-sufficient monarch, despite his warning dream, walked in the palace of the kingdom and said, "Is not this great Babylon that I have built for the house of the kingdom and for the honour of my majesty?" Immediately "there fell a voice from heaven, saying, "The kingdom is departed from thee," and he was driven from men, and had his dwelling with the beasts of the field, until he learned that the heavens do rule, and praised, and honoured, and extolled the King of Heaven.

We ask again, whence have we derived the right to ignore the King of Heaven, and to commit the power of government to men who professedly deny his existence, and burlesque his mighty works?

It is said that constituencies have a right to send what representatives they please to Parliament. We ask them to show their right. We say that God has a prior right to govern, because He is the Creator and Preserver of men; and until this English nation is ready to declare that this is an open question, we say that no constituency has a right to contravene the position which the nation, as a nation, has occupied throughout her history,—that "power belongeth unto God," and that "the powers that be are ordained of God."

There is a vast difference between the natural right to have our individual liberty respected, and the supposed right to be elected to govern others. England says her greatness is built on the Bible. The Bible says: "He that ruleth among men must be just, ruling in the fear of God." Is the nation to stultify herself by now making it an open question whether the foundations of her greatness may not be rooted up? England at present acknowledges, by her statute-book, that he who governs must fear God. It is true that this is not positively stated, but it is implied by the religious character of our coronations, and by the opening of Parliament with prayer to God.

The measure known as the Affirmation Bill was not chiefly or primarily intended to release the consciences of those who objected to the form of an oath, but to do away with the requirement by the nation that her rulers shall be men who acknowledge allegiance to God as the King of kings, the Lord of lords, by whom kings reign and princes decree judgment.

A great deal is said as to civil rights being independent of religious opinion; but the personal rights of a subject in a free country are clearly distinguishable from the right of government. The government of this country is divided between King, Lords, and Commons. If the nation has a right not to admit any but a Protestant Sovereign to the throne, much more it has a right to refuse to admit to its Parliament one who denies religion and God altogether. For the Sovereign and the Member of Parliament each represents a fraction of the ruling power, and although the Sovereign is the larger fraction of the two, the principle is the same. If we have no right to consider the religious profession of the Member, neither have we of the Sovereign; let it therefore be distinctly understood that the principle of the Protestant Succession Act is on its trial and that when we rob ourselves of the right to keep Atheists out of Parliament we rob ourselves also of the right to keep a Papist from the Throne.

MR. PHILIP PHILLIPS writes on board the Furnessia, off Queenstown Harbour, June 4:—"How strange it seems that with my dear family I am again so near the shores of England. After a most delightful sojourn in Jamaica for four months, we are en route for Amsterdam, where we have been invited to give one hundred services of praise under the auspices of several Christians in Holland during the World's Fair. Please do not forget to pray that our efforts may prove a blessing."

TRACT DISTRIBUTION ON THE CONTINENT.—Mr. Cheyne Brady reports an incident illustrative of the caution that should be observed in tract distribution on the Continent. A lady in Italy was recently giving out a tract entitled "The Coming King," when she was arrested by the police and conducted to a police-station, notwithstanding her protestations. On the way, however, a deliverer appeared in the person of Signor Gavazzi, who pointed out to the guardians of the peace the mistake they had made.

GREAT TEMPERANCE FETE AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—A Great National Temperance Festival, under the auspices of all the leading Temperance organisations throughout the kingdom, will take place at the Crystal Palace, on Tuesday, July 10. Great Temperance meetings, to be conducted by Mr. Richard T. Booth, Mr. Francis Murphy, and Mr. William Noble, the leaders of what is known as the Blue Ribbon Movement, are to be held throughout the day, and three Monster Choral Concerts by 15,000 abstainers, 5000 in each choir, are also to be given—contingents coming from all parts of the country. No intoxicating drinks will be sold at the bars. Excursion trains at low rates will be run from nearly a thousand provincial stations.

FAITH AND PROGRESS.

By Rev. HORATIUS BONAR, D.D.

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED AT THE CLOSE OF THE FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND ASSEMBLY.

THIS brief period now closing has been one of happy calm, as well as of genial Christian intercourse. We have looked each other in the face once more, and have found how truly we are brethren. We met in love, we took council in love, and now we part in love. These days have been days of sunshine, both without and within, and I think we shall have cause in after years to remember this Assembly as one of brightness and peace, reminding us of our happy assemblies during the early years of our history, ere we knew what strife was, ere debates grew fiery, ere words became sharp swords, ere divisions required to be taken in the House, or voting called for, ere parties had grown up and separated themselves into right and left, when majorities and minorities were unknown, and when we were all one great majority, one unbroken brotherhood.

Let us start upon another stage and period of our history, with peace as our watchword, and the God of peace shall be with us. We accepted office in the Church, not as doubters, but as believers; confessing not our unbelief, but our faith, in subscribing to the Church's standards. It is by faith, not by doubt, that we are saved, and our Gospel is not "doubt and live," but "believe and live." In the course of a long ministerial life the complaint (not loud but deep) has often been made to us, "A believing heart has gone out of me." There was in this complaint a heavy sense of loss—of a treasure lost—lost in the crowd—lost in business and bustle, lost in strife and controversy, lost in pleasure and politics—too thoroughly lost to be recovered, and far too priceless to be replaced by anything else. Have not many of ourselves experienced more or less these withering influences, and felt as if a believing heart were slipping away from us, we knew not how? The invisible, the supernatural, the divine, seemed to be unloosing themselves from our grasp, dissolving into unrealities and uncertainties, which we are fain to call mysteries in order to persuade ourselves that we have not quite lost all, or at least that we have got something in their place! Invisible personalities lose all reality, and Him who is infinitely personal, the King Eternal, Immortal, and Invisible, we often find the most difficult of all to realise.

Faith thus ceases to be faith, even when retaining the name; for faith is the recognition of truth as certainty, not as probability. It is no longer the substance of things hoped for, or the evidence of things not seen. At the best it is but a struggle to believe, a struggle against some adverse power that is unconsciously drawing us backward. With many it seems rather a desire not to believe, a secret preference for doubt, as nobler and more independent than faith. We grope, and pray, and strive, and weep, but the reality comes not; nay, it seems to recede farther from us every day. The age tosses, like a fevered man upon his sick-bed, seeking rest but finding none. It tries variety, as men in quest of health try change of air. It rejects finality or completeness, as associated with mental weakness, and the advances of which it chiefly boasts are into the region of uncertainty, not of certainty; into the domain of hypothesis, not of induction and demonstration. They vanish successively in vapour, and leave only pestilence behind them. The guesses at truth, numerous as they are, often plausible, sometimes beautiful, are the results more of fermentation than of life or growth.

Along with the believing heart the desire for its return has gone out with many, and the materials for faith are silently disappearing. Faith itself is regarded rather as a prison-house than a palace—a restraint upon thought, not an instrument for its development—linked with bondage, not with liberty. We see, and hear, and touch, and taste, but we do not believe. We deal in make-believes, and fill up the hollowness thus created with pleasant dreams, for thorough believing would be limitation and finality, unworthy of intelligent humanity—subjection to a superhuman will and a mind outside of our own. The recognition of anything as true beyond the circle of our senses would land us in the supernatural; and the supernatural is fast becoming to multitudes but a wondrous day-dream—a fable of the mystic ages, like Homer's Olympus, or Virgil's Elysium, or Odin's Valhalla.

We profess to be possessors of an authentic volume of heavenly truth. It deals throughout with the invisible and supernatural; nor does it make any apologies for so doing. It makes no attempt to conciliate the wise of this world, nor to allow for human prejudices; but calmly and with dignity records its facts and doctrines for the reception or rejection of man. It does not pare down the miraculous, in order to make it less obnoxious to reason, or more accordant with probability and the laws of nature. It does not minimise the infinite and the eternal in order to render them more credible. The writers write with authority, and assume the entire accuracy of the words they use; they certainly seem to know what they are writing about; they affirm that what they say is infallible truth, they present it for faith to rest upon, and the question coming up as we read this Book of Truth is, Are we satisfied that the things to be thus got by believing are worth the having? They are to cost us nothing. What is our estimate of them? The Book makes no secret as to God's estimate of them; is ours the same as his?

The believing faculty of the age seems to be undergoing a change, or, as our modern thinkers would say, "undergoing repairs." Its sphere is considered to have been too wide on some sides, and too narrow on others. Is it safe to credit what lies beyond the sweep of scientific vision? is the question that has broken in upon us with much earnestness. To deliver oppressed humanity from the trammels with which the faith of centuries has fettered it, is reckoned the chief mission of modern culture. This deliverance is to be achieved by first landing us in doubt, that out of that doubt or unbelief a truer, nobler faith may grow. The Christendom of the past has been, it is supposed, the Christendom of credulity. The Christendom of faith is now dawning. The credulity of the middle ages accepted miracles in thousands without evidence. Will the new faith of the nineteenth or twentieth century signalise itself by rejecting miracles, though certified by all the proof that the most trusted history has to rest upon? The founders of the new Christianity, the introducers of the Christ that is to be, think the supernatural a defect or blot upon the Bible. The defenders of the old Christianity, the believers in the Christ that is, cannot conceive of a Bible without the supernatural, and would deem the absence of the supernatural from any professed revelation a sufficient proof that it could not have come from God.

If the Church of God is to do her true work on earth she must often remind herself of the Master's precept, "Have faith in God." For her office is connected with that which faith only can know. It is with these responsibilities burdening us (rather, shall I say, strengthening us?) that we go back to our flocks; and if our fellowship here shall have done nothing more than deepen our sense of ministerial responsibility—quickening our desires to be more devoted, more self-denying, and more thoroughly useful, it will be well. Whilst taking sadly to heart the evils multiplying around us, our gravest question should be, Are we not in large measure partakers of the very evils we deplore? Would it not be well if on entering this the fifth decade of our history we were to inaugurate a higher style of Christian life, and rise to a nobler platform of ministerial labour? That would go a long way towards calming down the waves of past controversies, and preventing the uprise of new contentions. Would not this be the happy reuniting of our broken ranks, the effective removal of stumbling-blocks, the true solution of the many problems springing up on every side, the grand settlement of the great questions of doctrine, or criticism, or worship, or Church order?

I lay blame on none, or, at least, I would begin with myself, acknowledging personal and official deficiency during a ministry of six and forty years. I would not put Peter's question at the first communion table, "Lord, who is he that betrayeth Thee?" till I had put first the deeper and more needful one, "Is it I, Lord, is it I?" While grieving over those whom we call the lapsed masses, and deploring the sins that are leavening the land, let us not acquit ourselves. The whole ministry of Scotland ought to feel the pressure of the burden. At ease in Zion! Asleep in the storm, like Jonah! Prophesying smooth things, and shrinking from telling men of the wrath to come! Untroubled with the peril of immortal souls! With just as much or as little of self-sacrifice as will save our professional reputation or soothe our conscience! Not coveting the best gifts, nor setting an example of Christian chivalry in the great warfare to which we are called, and quite unambitious of a higher place in the kingdom, "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory"! Ought not these things to be matters of severe self-questioning, as connected with the lapsing of the masses? The danger for ourselves in this day of energy and bustle is that of busying ourselves with a multitude of matters, not always in themselves unimportant, but which are after all considerably external, and which vanish into nothing when set side by side with the true ministerial work of seeking the lost and building up the saved.

The power of the pulpit is said to be on the wane. Yet learning and eloquence are admitted to be in full play. All kinds of artificial appliances—music, ornament, humour, style, rhetoric, architecture, have been called in to prop up the pulpit, and neutralise, or, at least, minimise, its supposed failure. But as galvanism is not life, so these artificial stimulants leave the failure just where they found it—or rather somewhat increased by reaction. Such stimulants are a poor substitute for a faded first love, a sad compensation for the Holy Spirit grieved and quenched. They may result in serious evils, greater even than those which they are seeking to cure. At all events, they are not the divine remedies prescribed for Sardis or Laodicea. Yet we are called to war a good warfare, with the seven marvellous promises "to him that overcometh" before our eye, and the voice from the throne ever sounding in our ears, "Behold, I come quickly." We are to be witnesses for the truth in a world of error; examples of faith in an age of unbelief; upholders of the integrity of the one true Book amid the storms of a crude and reckless criticism. We are to be men of progress, but it is to be apostolic progress, increase in the knowledge of Him whom to know is life eternal. We would be advanced thinkers, too, but our thinking would be in deepening sympathy with the mind of God, and fuller understanding of his never-obsolete Word. We would be progressive theologians, only not at the expense of truth and soundness. Just as progressive scientists do not think it needful either to forget or abjure Newton's Principia, so we see no necessity for a surrender of ancient landmarks, or a desertion of long-accepted creeds.

Our progressiveness consists in the fuller discernment of all parts of revelation—historical, prophetical, doctrinal, practical, and the more careful exploration of its inexhaustible pages. We add nothing to, and we subtract nothing from the perfection of that profoundest of all profound volumes, but we make daily discoveries in its depths. We do not pretend to prop it up as if it were on any side giving way; we confide in it as a fortress impregnable against all assaults, and we wonder at it as an anvil on which a thousand hammers have already broken themselves, and which stands in its own divine greatness courting the stroke of a thousand more.

As a Church, it becomes us to examine ourselves, not once, but oftentimes every year increasingly, and so much the more as we see the day approaching; for the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. To put away confession, to prophesy smooth things, to say that we exaggerate the evil, and do not take sufficient credit for the good, is neither wise nor safe. Better to look the danger in the face, even though its extent may have been magnified. The mixture of the sweet and the bitter is one of the very last things that a Church should sanction. Fellowship between faith and unbelief must, sooner or later, be fatal to the former. "I would thou wert either cold or hot," has a deep significance for us. Truth is truth, and error is error. There the case begins and ends. The blending of light and darkness can at the best only produce twilight, not noon. We may tamper with doubt, we may trifle with certainty, and we may succumb to public opinion; but what will the end be? Has the one great Oracle spoken? Has it spoken accurately and intelligibly? If it has, our only honest position is acceptance of its utterances. Every revealed truth has a distinct personal claim to be believed, however offensive to the taste or spirit of the age. Truth never demands a vote. It refuses to go to the poll, or to acknowledge majorities. It presents its evidence, and claims submission. To attempt to gather truth out of a multitude of errors, by setting them to neutralise each other, is to revive the vain alchemy of the Middle Ages to turn iron into gold, or to imitate the folly of an old student of prophecy, who gathered some score of conflicting prophetic dates together, and struck the mean among them in order to reach the true year! We are apt to forget that error is sin; that truth does not reverse itself; that inspiration and non-inspiration are two opposite poles, admitting of no medium; that infidelity ought not to cloak itself under the name of candid inquiry; and that candid inquiry should beware of being landed in unbelief, perhaps before it is aware.

What the Athenians at this day may think of their own old inscription I know not. But the tendency of the human mind to take refuge in ignorance, both in the Apostles' days and our own, is remarkable. To these old Greeks, however, "the unknown God" was a personality which they might worship in some way; to our own later philosophers the unknown God is an abstraction, or rather a nonentity; and should any further question arise as to the worship of this nonentity, it might take this shape: After what pattern shall an altar to the unknown God be reared, and where shall such an altar be most appropriately placed? In one of the great squares of our own cities, or in the quadrangle of one of our universities, or in front of one of our churches? As we read the subtle disquisitions on natural and supernatural religion; as we listen to certain oft-repeated phrases, such as "the silences," "the solemnities," "the infinities," "the eternities;" and as, by the sophistries of modern wisdom, we are tempted away from the adoration of "the King Eternal, Immortal, and Invisible, the only wise God," we ask for one hour of the old Jew of Tarsus to repeat his matchless and magnificent sermon, the echoes of which have not yet died away from earth, and to preach it anew with his own telling voice, not on Mars Hill, not on the citadel of Corinth, not amid the ruins of the great Temple of Diana, not in the Roman Forum, but in some of our own seats of learning or halls of theology—"Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, Him declare I unto you."

There are some who are cowardly enough to trifle with or nibble at truth, but not bold enough to fling it away. It would be well for us to remember that not merely accepted error, but undervalued truth, has often made havoc of a church and shipwreck of a soul. Much of the teaching of the present day is not in the direction of certainty, and yet men feel that to be tossed to and fro with curious speculations will make but a poor life for them. Meanwhile Revelation remains to us, and, when human thinkers have spent themselves, it will reassert its authority and power. Every region of earth has in turn been shaken. Restlessness—religious, social, political—like a universal fever, exhibits itself everywhere, and has become chronic. The most stable Governments and institutions cannot hold their own against the pressure, inward and outward, of some unseen dynamite, which is rending them asunder, and refuses either to be eradicated or controlled. But the Cross still stands, and with it Jehovah's eternal purpose of grace—grace finding its way to the sinner through the righteous channel opened by the death of the Divine Substitute.

That Cross is the true exponent of the supernatural. The only scientific religion that we acknowledge is the religion of the Cross. A religion framed by scientific men upon the principles of pure science, and scientifically eliminating all revealed truth from its articles; a religion that will prove no stumbling-block to men of science, but rather command their admiration and their faith; a religion which can be taught in our universities without coming into collision with Scripture, and which will chiefly get credit to itself among the thinkers of our day by its skilful exclusion of the name of Christ; a religion which will really be the expression of distaste for all the prophets and apostles have taught: such a religion will not be that which Paul preached at Corinth, and of which he said, "The preaching of the Cross is to them that perish foolishness, but unto us who are saved it is the power of God." The idealists of our time ask for a scientific cross; but there shall no such cross be given. Our philosophers call for a philosophic gospel; but there shall no such gospel be sent down from heaven. Our advanced thinkers and men of expansion demand a Christ for the nineteenth century; but no such Christ has arisen or shall arise. It must be either the first century Cross, the first century Gospel, the first century Christ, or no Cross, no Gospel, no Christ at all. A cultured world now calls aloud for a cultured Christ, and refuses its allegiance to any other; but there shall no other Christ be given but the son of the carpenter—"He who was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities; upon whom the chastisement of our peace was laid; and with whose stripes we are healed."

A RESTING-PLACE FOR WEARY WORKERS.

THE annual meeting of Miss Mason's "House of Rest" was held at 7 and 8, Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn-park, N.W. Mr. T. A. Denny took the chair.

Miss Mason stated that the object of the "House of Rest" was what the word implies, a place where weary and worn-out workers might come apart and rest awhile. Many come thoroughly worn out from the strain upon their physical and spiritual system by reason of their contact with the degraded classes, and the anxiety and disappointment so often met with in their work. The seaside branch at Eastbourne has proved a boon to hundreds of tired workers. At Kilburn, 214, and at Eastbourne 330 persons, have been admitted during the past year; this number embraces home and foreign missionaries, bible women, workers engaged in the rescuing of children, among young women, in homes for fallen women, nurses in homes and hospitals, teachers in schools, city missionaries, &c. The funds received during the past year amounted to £1926, out of which sum the workers themselves paid £540. This shows that these Christian workers do not entrench on the resources of the institution unless their position absolutely requires it. Many workers in and around London go and stay two or three nights, and return to their spheres of labour invigorated and refreshed.

In answer to questions put to her at the meeting, Miss Mason said they were often found with an empty exchequer, but no worker was refused admission on that account, as she always found the Lord met their need in a marvellous way. She had observed there were many Homes for the vicious but few for the virtuous, in the sense that this Home was, and she had abundant proof from workers in all parts of England and abroad that bodily and spiritual strength had been given by this agency. There was still a debt on the Eastbourne house of £1200, besides the future support of the work. The property was all in trust and worth £7000.

The Chairman remarked that individual effort in the Lord's work was by far the most successful, and he believed this work was worthy of support. The fact that most of the persons admitted paid from seven to twelve shillings a week spoke well for the economy of the institution. Dr. Monro Gibson and Rev. J. F. Andrews also dwelt on the advantages of such an institution; they were able to state from frequent observation, and conversation with those who visit the House of Rest, that they found it was indeed a "rest" in the truest sense of the word.

Several of the workers bore testimony to the benefits they had received during their stay at the House of Rest; they spoke highly of the spiritual refreshment obtained, and its corresponding results in their work.

We looked over the various departments, and found everything in the best and simplest order. We think churches might well afford to send their overtaxed labourers here without much cost. It would be economy to do so, as strength would be both saved and gained for future work.

THOUGHTS ON HOLINESS.—12.

By Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE.

THE TEMPLE CLEANSED.

"Jesus went up to Jerusalem, and found in the temple them that sold sheep and oxen and doves, and the changers of money sitting; and when He had made a scourge of small cords, He drove them all out of the temple, and the sheep and the oxen; and poured out the changers' money, and overthrew the tables, and said unto them, 'Take these things hence, make not my Father's house an house of merchandise.'"—John ii. 13—16.

THE Lord Jesus had gone up to Jerusalem to keep the Passover. It was the first public declaration of Himself; the sublimity and solemnity of the great work on which He was entering filled his soul. But his was the large and tender heart which was ever quick to receive impressions from that which was about Him. He could not come along his way from the North country to Jerusalem without rejoicing in the beauty and gladness of the world It was the most delicious season of the year. The hills were bright with a hundred hues of flowers, and in the valleys the corn was swayed by the breeze. Our own familiar birds—the thrush, the lark, the blackbird, gladdened all his way.

It is pleasant to think of Jesus going thus to the Temple. To the Son of God surely this earth was "the Father's house." The great sun lit it up with splendour, and the deep blue of heaven bent in blessing over it. Then, as He came on, slowly the fair country was lost in clouds of dust and din of crowds, until, as He passed through the gate of the city, all the beauty, the stillness, the simplicity, the purity of "the Father's house," were left behind. The frightened cattle were being driven along the narrow ways amidst the frightened people. Sellers of all sorts of wares pressed their goods upon the passers-by, for the feast had come to be a great annual fair.*

Nearer the Temple the ways were more thronged, and the confusion was worse. But worst of all was within the courts of the Temple itself. The part intended for strangers was let to the cattle-dealers, and the poor proselyte had just to worship God where best he could. All the holy place was filled with din and disturbance—lowing cattle, bleating sheep, the shouts of those that sold, and the chaffering of the buyers. Potters praised their clay dishes and their ovens for the evening sacrifice. Dealers in wine, in salt, in everything that the service required, cried up their wares. The cages of the doves were piled within the house of prayer. More quietly, but with a greedier craft, the money-changers sat at their tables, exchanging the heathen money for the Temple coin. Noise and filth and stench and greed were everywhere. Little wonder that as Jesus looked about Him He was filled with indignation. Snatching up a rope He knotted it, and with an authority that awed them all, He cried, Take these things hence! And forth He drove the sheep and oxen, and bade the dove-sellers begone, and upset the table of the money-changers, sending the money rolling under the feet of the crowd.

The story is full of teaching for us in our pursuit of holiness. Here are what may be called three parables—the Parable of the Temple, the Parable of the Confusion, the Parable of the Cleansing.

I.—THE PARABLE OF THE TEMPLE.

We are accustomed to think of the Temple itself as filled with types and parables. The ark of the Covenant, within and without; the Priest, the Altar, the Sacrifices—all were full of teaching. But what was the meaning of the Temple itself?

It is curious that this should have been so often overlooked. The plan of its structure was remarkable enough to have courted inquiry. It was altogether unlike anything else that was ever devoted to purposes of worship. Neither Egypt nor Syria suggested its architecture; neither Grecian Temple nor Roman Pantheon nor Christian Cathedral have ever in any way reproduced any faint resemblance to it.

It was not one building, but three courts standing one within another. The first and outermost was the court of the worshippers. The second court, higher than the first, so that all could look up into it, was the court of the sacrifices. There the priests moved, busied at the altars. Beyond this there rose another structure, higher still, and so placed that each worshipper kneeled toward it. It shone with dazzling brilliance, the front being covered with plates of gold, except over the great doors where a golden vine trailed its branches, and there hung golden clusters of grapes. Within the open doors the worshippers could look as far as the immense veil of thick tapestry—blue, scarlet, and purple, woven into a fabric of matchless beauty and of enormous value. This shut in the Holy of Holies, the dread Presence Chamber of the Great Jehovah.

The threefold arrangement was of God's direct commandment, after the pattern shown to Moses on the mount. It was the plan alike of the Tabernacle and of the first Temple, and again of the second Temple. Here, as Luther suggests, is a striking resemblance to our human nature, if not a type of it. Man, in his threefold nature: body, soul, and spirit. "Destroy this temple," said Jesus, "and in three days I will raise it up"—this spake He of the temple of his body.

Let it be noticed, too, that God did not command the building of the Temple—He only permitted it. The Divine direction was the Tabernacle—the shifting Tabernacle, that could be taken down in an hour. His glorious Presence needed not the solid marble and the plates of gold. He dwelt within the frail and unsubstantial covering of skins. In this was the truer picture of man, who never continueth at one stay—who hath here no continuing city. The very grandeur of the Temple blinded men to its first meaning.

Further, the Temple is a picture, if not a type, of man in his threefold relationship as well as of his threefold nature—man in relation to the material world, in relation to his neighbour, in relation to God; when God is in the Holy of Holies, when man worships Him in the innermost chamber of the spirit, then is he right towards God. And drawing near to God in the appointed way, he is right towards his neighbour; he bows with his nation, knit and bound with one brotherhood, by a common dependence on the one Great Father, by a common consciousness of sin, by one great sacrifice, and by one hope, and one joy of acceptance and blessing. And then, right with God, and right with his brother-man, the worshipper comes to be right with the material world about him. He gratefully dedicates to God his genius and gifts, his substance and his wealth. Up into God's house he brings of his cattle and sheep, of his oil and wine, of his gold and cedar wood, of his art and splendour; and thus he learns to hold them from God, and to use them for God. This is the idea and parable of the Temple-man in his threefold nature serving God, man finding the threefold relationship secured and consecrated in the Temple.

"PROGRESS IN THEOLOGY."

IN The Christian Church for the current month there is an article on the papers which have been appearing of late in The Catholic Presbyterian on "Progress in Theology." The writer's words are a good comment on the modern theories advocated in other quarters, and by other theological leaders of the age, as well as those he speaks of:—

These papers on "The Progress of Theology" are bringing out the fact that there are much more serious differences than appear on the surface; that there is a new school, represented by Principal Tulloch, Professor Bruce, and others, which aims at nothing less than changing the whole basis of the accepted theology. This is the idea of "progress," but it is a kind of progress that has taken place in many past ages of the Church, and the tendency of which has always been in the end, not the exaltation of Christ, but the explaining away of his true divinity. We imagine we see the seeds of this already in the present movement, in the utter disregard of our Lord's testimony to the facts of the Old Testament, and in the general questioning of the method which He Himself and his Apostles pursued in the establishment of his Church, as treating every part of the old Testament with reverence as the inspired Word of God. The tendency may be unconscious, but it is none the less real.

There is a great rage now-a-days for new things, new doctrines, fresh modes of religious thought not excepted. Many theories propounded for acceptance are received by not a few simply because of their supposed novelty and assumed freshness and originality. A little careful analysis and examination would show that in this, as in other matters, there is nothing new under the sun. So-called new doctrines are for the most part old errors arrayed in modern garb, old weapons of the enemy refurbished, and sharpened for use in modern conflict. The great thinkers of the age are not so much in advance of the ancients as they are supposed to be. Indeed, for depth of thought and originality of design, as well as boldness of conception, much of the boasted progress of the age is progress backward rather than forward.

It is only of Christ's words that perpetual freshness can be predicated. Of Him as a Teacher, and of his teaching alone, can it be said as the ages roll on, "Thou hast the dew of thy youth." Old as the everlasting hills, his doctrine is yet ever new, affording to the eye and heart of faith fresh prospects and developments of the truth which is as eternal and unchanging as God Himself.

After that wonderful series of parables contained in Matthew xiii., our Lord said to his disciples, "Have ye understood all these things? They say unto him, Yea, Lord. Then said He unto them, Therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man which is an householder, who bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old." The treasure, according to St. Paul's teaching in 2 Cor. iv. 7, is the glorious Gospel of Christ, and it does truly afford to those who possess it and explore its depths an unfailing supply of truth, as replete with vernal freshness as it is conservative of unchanging principles.

To the spiritual believer in the revelation of God, this fact as to its infinite wealth of thought and boundless prospect of development is a matter of experience. Not from narrowness of mind or bigotry of spirit does he refuse to be led away from the old paths, but because of the deep satisfaction and blessed effects he finds resulting from walking in them. It is with him as the Saviour said, "No man having drunk old wine, straightway desireth new, for he saith, The old is better."

FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND. GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

THE annual meetings of this body have now concluded. Of the numerous important subjects that occupied the attention of the assembly, we can only further refer to two or three of the most prominent and generally interesting. Among these we may certainly place the report of the Committee on

THE WELFARE OF YOUTH.

Rev. Dr. White, of Edinburgh, thus described the work carried on by this agency, a work which other churches would do well to emulate and prosecute with equal ardour. It touches a point in our Christian organisation which pre-eminently calls for earnest attention:—

The committee was instructed to take into consideration how best to deal with the youth of the Church—those especially above Sabbath-school age and upwards—till they became members of the Church, and were settled and established as Christian men and women. It was complained and lamented, and not too deeply or too soon, that many of our youth had little or no attention paid to them, and no proper work laid out for them, that no little difficulty was found in interesting them and keeping them attached to the Church, even when all was done that pastors and parents could do. And it was laid on us to inquire and say whether, in the most favourable circumstances, and when parental and pastoral care had been most successful, there was not both room and call for some more careful and helpful supervision of our young people on the part of the Church in her Church capacity.

As the result of the action taken in accordance with these instructions, the system at present adopted was inaugurated. That system includes the following arrangements:—

There is annually announced in name of the General Assembly a syllabus of subjects of study that could be pursued in town and country alike; and which, while taken up by ministers and other teachers in their classes, might also be studied by solitary students at home. One charm and good fruit of this system has been that the minister who took it up felt himself to be working alongside of hundreds of his fellow-labourers throughout the Church, while single and lonely students who had no minister to assist or advise them, and no fellow-student to stimulate and encourage them, yet felt all through the winter that they were members of a vast Free Church Bible-class; scholars in a great national seminary composed of thousands of the intelligent and studious youth of his land. These feelings of fraternity, co-operation, and competition were created and secured by the yearly issue of a syllabus comprising a wide range of subjects of study, under such heads as biblical, doctrinal, historical, ecclesiastical, and experimental. The best handbooks were recommended for study; the books, as a rule, were first-class in quality, cheap, and easily accessible; and examinations were held simultaneously all over the Church, and the results laid year by year on the tables of the House. The success of this system, so far as it has been taken up throughout the Church, has been a surprise and a pleasure of no ordinary kind to those who have been called to work it.

Professor Blaikie commented with fair congratulation on the results of this scheme. He said:—

He thought it a very interesting thing that they should have such a multitude of young persons coming forward to present themselves for the examination of this committee. The number this year was close upon 2000, and, although their merits were, of course, very varied, and although the examiners, in some little instances, had had to note defects in the work done, yet no one could read the accounts of the examiners on the papers submitted to them without being struck with the great ability and great care which these papers on the whole presented. There was very special reason for paying great attention to the religious instruction of the young, on account of the spread of infidel literature, and the presence of infidelity in many places and forms. The Assembly knew well that infidelity was putting on a bolder front. Within a few yards of where they were now assembled they had a display of infidel publications, and they had things done in that direction which a few years ago were unknown. In these days they were so constantly hearing objections to Scripture wherever people met—in offices, warehouses, factories and shops—that they would need to be fortified with some of the best answers that might be used, so as to be able to give, in the words of the apostle, "An answer to everyone that asketh of them, and a reason for the hope that is in them."

THE ORGAN QUESTION.

The discussions on this matter were marked by an intensity of interest and concern which some of us on this side the Tweed can scarcely understand, accustomed as we are to instrumental aid in the praise part of our services. The strong feeling involved on both sides, and the excitement felt in relation to the results of the debate, make it highly creditable to the spirit of the assembly, that it could so deliberately, and with such an absence of all bitterness and strife, conduct its proceedings on the matter. Dr. Bonar's own calm and Christian influence as Moderator told well upon the whole assembly, and contributed much to the harmony in diversity which prevailed. Principal Rainy's motion was to the following effect:—

That there was nothing in the Word of God, or in the constitution and laws of this Church, to preclude the use of instrumental music in public worship as an aid to vocal praise; that the Assembly declare accordingly, at the same time stating that congregations must have due regard to the preservation of peace in adopting the use of such aid to praise.

This was opposed by a counter-proposition moved by Sir Henry Moncrieff:—

That, having in view the difference of feeling in the Church, and the committee's own statement that it might have been well, if possible, to proceed more deliberately, they publish the report for the general information of the Church, and in the meantime take no further action.

The issue was that 390 voted for the former, 259 for the latter, Principal Rainy's "local option" principle being carried by a majority of 131.

This would seem to be a proper conclusion at which to arrive, liberty to act in accordance with conscientious conviction on either side being thus secured. But it is not to be wondered at that with such a feeling to fall back upon as that which has prevailed for centuries in the Scotch Church on the subject, many of the minority should view this result with deep regret and grave anxiety. The point among ourselves is not unattended with difficulty; in not a few directions it must be admitted that the organ and its management require careful supervision (such as cannot always be exercised) in order to prevent its secularising and lowering the tone of Christian worship. It is a good servant, but a bad master.

The impossibility of successfully resisting modern innovations upon the customs and traditions of the churches was also shown by the reports and discussions upon "The Hymnal," and "The Subscription of Deacons." In the former case it appeared that great progress was being made in the adoption of The Hymnal, which threatened to interfere not a little with the psalm book so long in use. Dr. Begg, of course, made a vigorous protest against this.

On the Subscription of Deacons to the Confession of Faith, it was urged that its requirement prevented men from coming forward to assume the duties of the office, and that a simpler formula, binding them to the spirit of the "Catechism" rather than to the "Confession," would be equally serviceable. A resolution, approving of this course, was carried by a large majority.

We are glad to see that the exhaustive programme of the Assembly's business procedure included consideration of the Opium Traffic and the Contagious Diseases Acts, against which strong protests were made, and resolute action taken.

For the Young.

LORD SHAFTESBURY AND HIS YOUNG FRIENDS IN PYE STREET.

As all our youthful readers could not be present at the very interesting gathering in Pye-street, Westminster, last week (a report of which we are obliged to defer, through pressure on our space), we thought they would like to read the letter presented to the Earl of Shaftesbury by the children. His lordship kindly allowed us to copy it for this purpose:—

"MOST KIND AND HONOURED LORD SHAFTESBURY,—We are so glad to see you again. We think it is so kind of you to come to our school in Pye-street, when you have been to so many great meetings, in such grand halls. Some of us went to your house on the 28th of April; that was your birthday, and you were very kind to them and gave them some nice books, which they liked very much. They saw the kind young lady, your daughter, and a pretty little Chinese dog, which allowed them to stroke him and did not bite. Some of us went in May to a meeting in Exeter Hall for prizes, and because they wore their caps and aprons the gentleman who taught them the singing called them 'the cooks and housemaids.' We hope, when we are old enough, to be cooks and housemaids too, and that we shall have good characters and come up to you for prizes.

"We hope you will be so kind as to accept a silk patchwork table cover, also some paper flowers, a stove ornament, and a pair of slippers. We always pray that God will bless you and take care of you, so that we may see you again another year, for our Lord Jesus Christ's sake.

"We are, your humble and dutiful school children,

"Signed, for all the girls, by
"MARY ANN BOWSKILL.

"Signed, for all the boys, by
"HENRY COLEMAN."

A SECOND FATHER MATHEW is prosecuting a crusade at the Cape of Good Hope against strong drink. His name is Father Haneberry. On the last Sunday evening of April, in St. Augustine's Roman Catholic Church at Port Elizabeth, he spoke with such marvellous effect that a thousand people sprang to their feet at the close of his discourse to take the pledge. He gives it as the result of his experience in North America, Australia, and New Zealand, that very few pledges taken at these Missions are broken.

A PERTINENT QUESTION.—A poor child, straying into a Sunday-school one day, asked simply: "Is this the way to heaven?" The superintendent was for a moment startled. Was the school, indeed, the way to heaven? Was he trying to make it so? Were his teachers intent on the same object? The artless question struck home. From desk to class the question went round with a thrill. What were they all doing? Whither were they all tending? The question was like an angel suddenly come into their midst to make a record of all that transpired in that school. Oh, superintendents, teachers, make sure of this one thing: with all your efforts to impart knowledge, make the salvation of the soul of paramount interest; whether your school be a model or struggling up to perfection, be sure that every scholar shall feel that it is the road to heaven.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

THERE is much in the work over which Dr. Barnardo presides that cannot fail to appeal to the popular imagination and sympathy. His annual gatherings at Exeter Hall are, therefore, invariably large and enthusiastic. Notwithstanding the fact that admission this year (except to the gallery) was by ticket, to be paid for, the great area was crammed to the doors. The orchestra, as usual, was almost completely taken up with the 700 boys and girls from the Stepney and Ilford Homes. A prettier sight, or one more eloquent of the greatness and goodness of the Mission, could scarcely be imagined. A novel feature of the gathering was the presence, in the two front reserved seats, of a number of young men and women who had been trained in the Homes, and are now filling situations provided for them. These young people played an interesting part in the proceedings of the evening, as will be seen.

The meeting was presided over, as it has been for years past, by the Earl Cairns, who was surrounded on the platform by a large array of friends and well-wishers. The chief honours of the evening were divided between the singing and the prize giving. This latter element was introduced on this occasion for the first time, but it is likely, we imagine, to become a permanent institution. Nothing, it seems to us, can have a more beneficial or stimulative effect on the younger inmates of the Homes than to see some of those who have left their sheltering precincts and gone out to fight the stern battle of life, periodically reporting themselves, and showing that they have profited by the care and training bestowed upon them. The numerous prizes given to the young men and women who had formerly been inmates, "for length of service and good conduct," were the gift of that generous friend of the work, Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, Chairman of the Committee. They included musical instruments, silver watches, work-boxes, writing-desks, &c., and their presentation by the Chairman excited much interest. An extra cheer was given to one who wore the policeman's blue, to another who now holds a responsible position in the Homes where he was trained, and to a third who is Master of an Industrial School at Manchester. As to the singing, what can be said that is new, in praise of Mr. Proudman and his youthful choir? Such a wonderful response to the beat of the conductor, such an intelligent and expressive rendering of the sentiment of the songs, not to speak of the pretty and unexpected "effects" produced—all spoke volumes for the skill of the conductor, and the plasticity of the pupils. These things we have said before, but each successive anniversary seems to demand a repetition of them.

The speaking was not above the average of Exeter Hall oratory; but, indeed, speeches on such occasions are almost superfluous. Adopting his customary rôle of Chairman-Secretary, Lord Cairns reported that during the bygone year a grand total of 4102 boys and girls had been dealt with by the various ramifications of the work. Of these 1422 had actually been cared for inside the Homes, while the rest had attended night-schools, industrial clubs, &c. His lordship proceeded to expound the principles on which the institutions are conducted. The children are taken right away from their evil surroundings, and placed in real "Homes," not in barracks. No absolutely destitute child is ever refused admission, and no system of voting bars the way. Then the children are not only cared for and educated in a bodily sense, but they are regarded as possessing immortal souls, and due provision is made for their spiritual health and growth. As illustrations of the action of the Homes, the Chairman cited several instances of rescue from the most degraded and deplorable surroundings. Among the additions to the work during the year was "The Leopold Home," in the Burdett-road, capable of receiving 110 little boys, the Jersey Home having proved too small for the requirements of the work. A servants' registry had also been added, being fitted up at the expense of one friend, and superintended by one of a committee of ladies. The emigration department had been largely developed during the year. A Home in Ontario, Canada, has been secured, and will be the centre of the work of placing out the children sent to the Dominion. If funds are forthcoming a hundred boys and girls can be sent out within the next month. A friend of the work has not only given a large donation in furtherance of the emigration scheme, but he has taken a thousand acres of land in the Midland Counties, where he offers to provide accommodation for a hundred boys, who can be trained in agricultural pursuits with a view to their following that sphere of life either at home or abroad. The statement of the noble Chairman was concluded with an urgent appeal for increased support to this large and constantly-growing institution. Every day nearly £100 are needed. It is desired to raise a special fund of £5000 for a contemplated extension at Ilford and the other developments in progress.

Canon Barker knew not whether to admire most the success or the extraordinary width of the work. He believed much of the secret of that success was due to the personal sympathy and oversight of Dr. Barnardo himself. He thought the emigration scheme was a most practical one, and suggested that some generous friend of the work should buy a large tract of land in the Far West, dividing it up into small farms on which the young emigrants could make a new start in the new world. The Canon, speaking of the terrible overcrowding in London, said he had become cognisant of facts which, if he were to repeat them, would bring a blush to the cheeks of every man, and make every woman weep. Such an institution as this, that redeems the young from their fearful surroundings, ought to have the warmest support of all who care for their kind. The speaker closed with an eloquent and powerful plea for the orphaned, or worse than orphaned, waifs and strays in our great city. Dr. Donald Fraser was happy in his reference to the brilliant sunshine we have lately had, as a symbol of the gladness and comfort that these Homes have carried into many of the dark, lurking-places of Merrie England. What, he asked, amid the assenting cheers of the vast audience, has atheism ever done to rescue the degraded children of our land? What but the love that is the outcome of the great love of Christ could accomplish such results? Rev. Thomas Champness could not tell how much he had enjoyed himself, but he would have a wonderful story to tell his wife and children when he returned to the North, where Dr. Barnardo and his work were held in high esteem. Referring to the neat and comfortable dresses of the children, he told an amusing incident about a Yorkshire tradesman, who said "religion was a rare thing for the tailors—it gave them plenty of work." Dr. Sinclair Paterson added his note to the chorus of praise and thanksgiving.

Dr. Barnardo himself did little in the way of speechifying, mercifully declining to inflict on the audience the reading of a report that extends to eighty octavo pages! This report we may say, by the way, is an intensely interesting and thrilling record, not at all of the conventional sort; we hope it will be widely read. As for the rest of the Director's labours throughout the evening, they were mainly confined to a prompting the audience to help in providing the special fund of £5000, and to announcing the various sums subscribed. More than £2000 were promised at the meeting, and we hope the whole will soon find its way into the coffers of the Homes.

SIGNOR ROSSETTI, of the Reformed Italian Church, recently died of apoplexy, while conducting divine service in Florence. His sacred hymns and other writings have won for him popular favour throughout the country.

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

RUSSIA.

FROM the German Witness we learn that Mr. George Müller laboured with great blessing eleven weeks in St. Petersburg. In Warsaw no open door was found, but he gladly accepted a hearty invitation to Lodz. The pastor and brethren there were much astonished to see the chapel full, and more than full, day after day. The great things which God has done for us were set forth by Mr. Müller with his usual clearness, and the people listened with eager attention and with great longing for salvation.

SWITZERLAND.

The Bishop of Coire, Grisons, calls upon all thoughtful men to occupy themselves diligently in spreading abroad good books, as an antidote to the colporteurs, who distribute in all directions "their miserable, bad books," "their translations from the Bible, elegantly bound, but often falsified, and always without ecclesiastical authority." The bishop notwithstanding, we trust that Switzerland will be flooded by these Bible portions, and that Christian tourists will not fail to do their part in scattering the seed of the Kingdom.

ITALY.

The Vaudois Church aspires to be the true national Church of Italy, not because it is united to the State, but because it is of Italian origin. It is, par excellence, the missionary church in Italy. According to the Annuare Evangelique, the communicants of the Vaudois Church number 3421. They have also Churches at Nice, Cannes, &c. The large works undertaken at Cannes have attracted a crowd of Italian workmen, as many as 7000 it is said. Here in a large hall belonging to the McAll Mission, M. Muston, the Italian pastor of Nice, conducts a meeting every Tuesday evening, when more than 200 hearers assemble.

In 1862 a Christian lady took especial interest in three Italian workmen at Clarens; to each she gave a Bible. In the winter these three men returned to San Fedele, talked of and lent their Bibles to their friends and acquaintances. Then they began little meetings, where they read the Word, and explained it as well as they were able. This work has grown, under God's blessing, and in 1881 they opened a place of worship and a school. This is encouraging to those who sow beside all waters.

GERMANY.

The German Union for the Distribution of Christian Periodicals is doing good work. Infirmaries and hospitals are supplied, and many proofs are given of the eagerness with which the poor invalids look out for the papers. Reading-rooms have been established, and papers are regularly left at the best known restaurants, wineshops, &c., of Berlin.

At the beginning of May the Home and Town Mission held several meetings in Berlin, chiefly with a view to stir up Christians to take a more brotherly interest in the welfare of the poor, and especially those just released from prison. We are glad to see that definite results seem likely to follow.

In Hamburg, Stuttgart, and some other places our Baptist brethren have seen many signs following the preaching of the Word, and have been greatly encouraged and cheered. The awakening and revival have in many cases been attributable, under God, to the visits of Evangelists. This has not been done without great opposition in some cases. Two young ladies, sisters, were severely beaten by their father, and treated with scorn by the whole family.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for week ending June 17:—June 17, Jer. xxxi. 27-37; June 18, Jer. xxxiii. 1-9; June 19, Jer. xxxiii. 10-16; June 20, Jer. xxxvi. 1-10; June 21, Jer. xxxvi. 16-28; June 22, Jer. xxxviii. 1-13; June 23, Jer. xxxviii. 14-24.

THE WALDENSIAN VALLEYS.

I HAVE been asked to give a short account of a visit to these famous valleys. The history of the Waldensian Church is well known, so I will confine my remarks to what I saw and heard during my two-days' visit to this interesting land, that has been consecrated by the blood of martyrs, and has brought forth so much fruit to the praise and glory of God.

We (for I was one of a party of four) were most hospitably entertained by Madame Beckwith, widow of the great benefactor of the Vaudois. What struck me very much was the beautiful simplicity manifested in the self-denying lives of the pastors and professors. It is evident that to them "to live is Christ." Their work, whether in preaching the Gospel, teaching the young, or training the youths for the ministry, is the great object of their lives.

The Orphanage is a model of what such an institution should be. The perfect order and cleanliness of the large airy rooms, and the happy looks of the children, who sang two or three hymns very sweetly to us, testified that the Father of the fatherless had sealed with his blessing this refuge and provision for the orphans of the valleys. Of the hospital we saw sufficient to convince us that the sick and suffering were tenderly cared for.

Perhaps nothing interested us more than our visit to the training college. Here the young men, some almost boys, are well instructed in general knowledge and the necessary branches of a good sound education, including the Scriptures in the original. Above all, they are rooted and grounded in their most holy faith; taught the truths and doctrines of the Bible, so that they may be able to impart them to others, and also that it is a privilege to be set apart by God Himself for the ministry of the Word.

This institution is, obviously, second to none in importance, for were the supply of pastors to fail, who would feed the flock in the valleys? There is a burden now resting upon this ancient church, in the shape of a heavy debt upon the training college. Little or nothing can be given by the people themselves. A subscription list has been opened, to which it was our privilege to add our names.

Limited space forbids my dwelling upon our visit to one of the romantic little parishes upon the mountain side, or to the delightful meeting convened by our kind hostess the evening before we left, when between thirty and forty, including pastors, professors, students, and girls from the Superior School, were invited to meet us. We sang the praises of Him who had made us one by the blood of the Cross, and we knelt at his footstool as one family, redeemed from among men, and fellow-heirs of the Kingdom, where we shall be "glorified together."—Yours in Christ Jesus, ANNA D. ATKINSON.

Blackheath, May.

THEATRICAL TEA MEETING.—Although Mr. Forbes is now almost entirely engaged in Gospel Temperance work, the gatherings of theatrical employés have been carried on regularly for five years. A meeting of ballet girls and others was held a few days ago, when, after tea, Gospel addresses were given.

THE PROTECTION OF YOUNG GIRLS.—A correspondent of The Daily News writes: There are many unprotected young women constantly passing through London en route to their homes or situations in various parts of the country, while many more arrive at our docks and wharves from Germany and other European countries, whose difficulties are intensified by a want of knowledge of our language and customs. I need not expatiate upon the temptations to which they are exposed morally, nor to the risks they run of being victimised by insinuating strangers either upon landing on our shores or when in transit. I wish to make it known that the Committee of the Princess Louise Home and National Society for the Protection of Young Girls are always prepared to send a chaperon to protect young women whose friends will apply to them for such aid. All applications should be made to Mr. A. M. Gillham, Secretary to the Princess Louise Home, 54, New Broad-street, London, E.C., with full particulars.

A SWEET SINGER GONE.

MANY of our readers will be interested in knowing that Mr. Lilas J. Vail, of New York, died a most peaceful death at his home in Brooklyn, on Sunday, May 20, aged sixty-three years. Mr. Vail's memory is and will be enshrined in the hearts and voices of thousands in many parts of the globe, therefore he has made himself a living blessing to the Christian world. He composed the music of many of the most popular Gospel hymns of the day, such as "Scatter seeds of kindness," "Nothing but leaves," "We shall sleep, but not for ever," "The gate ajar for me," "The better land," &c. &c.

At the request of Mr. Vail's friends, Philip Phillips, "the Singing Pilgrim," was called to sing alone some of these beautiful songs at his funeral, prefacing the same with some few instances which have come under his observation, when and where they have proved a true blessing. It was a solemn and impressive scene to see the singer, who had sung these songs all round the world, now standing by the side of the dead composer, singing with tearful voice—

"We shall sleep, but not for ever,
There will be a glorious dawn.
We shall meet to part, no never,
On the resurrection morn."

AFRICAN SETTLEMENT SOCIETY.

THE annual meeting of this Society was held at Exeter Hall, on Thursday, May 31.

Alderman R. N. FOWLER, M.P., who presided, said the objects the Society had in view would no doubt eventually be the means of conferring incalculable blessings upon hundreds of hungry and destitute children in our midst. He had visited Natal, and found it had a splendid and genial climate. He believed that under God's blessing the work of the Society would gradually expand, and fulfil the expectations of its workers; he therefore had no hesitation in appealing to their sympathies and liberality.

Mr. W. PEACE, Natal Government Agent, stated that the Immigration Board had granted to the Society some 3400 acres of the best land in Natal to carry out its operations. The Umzemkulu River (which runs by the Society's land) would in a few years be one of the chief ports for the Orange Free States and the Diamond Fields (this Port being the nearest), when the bar of the rock at the mouth of the river was completely removed, and larger steamers could enter it. Being himself a colonist, he would say that the colonists would give the Society every assistance in their power.

Rev. W. FLEMING said he well remembered when he was Adjutant over that part of the country in which the Society's land was situated. He compared the district to Chatsworth for its beauty, and at the time marked it so on his map.

Rev. BURMAN CASSIN, as the rector of a parish where there was a very large amount of misery, asked, What is to become of the poor children if they were not sent to our Colonies? A door is now open in our South African Colonies; let us take courage, and forward the efforts that are made by this Society.

Dr. Gilbart-Smith and Rev. J. B. Heard also addressed the meeting.

OPEN-AIR PREACHING ON MIDSUMMER-DAY.—The committee of the Open-air Mission suggest that Midsummer-day (June 24), which falls on Sunday this year, should be used by ministers, missionaries, and others, in the proclamation of the Gospel throughout London and the provinces more fully than has ever before been attempted. Why should not the Master's call be heeded: "Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city," and a Gospel message delivered in every one of its ten thousand streets on this one day? There is Christian energy enough if there be first a willing mind. The committee further suggest that those who take part in this movement should communicate with the Secretary, Mr. Gawin Kirkham, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C.

ASSURANCE.

"He hath given assurance . . . in that He hath raised Him from the dead."—ACTS xvii. 31.

NOT in the gloomy caverns
Of thy most treacherous heart:
Not where conflicting "feelings"
Their varied hues impart:
For in the flesh there dwelleth
Nought that is good or fair:
In vain, with anxious yearning,
We seek assurance there.

Not in the deep contrition
Of thy repentant soul:
Not in thy tearful pleading—
"Lord Jesus make me whole."
Not where the Spirit's graces
The Spirit's work reveal;
Rest not for thy salvation
E'en on the Spirit's seal.

Uplift thine eyes to Jesus,
When weary in the quest:
Uplift thine eyes to Jesus,
And faith shall be at rest.
High in the heavens exalted,
With nail-prints in his hands,
As thy divine assurance
Eternally HE stands!

The very crown of glory
Which wreathes his kindly brow,
Declares thy guilt atoned for,
And peace thy portion now.
Thy sins are gone for ever,
"He liveth who was dead,"
That Blessed One our Surety,
Who suffered in our stead.

Peace to each troubled conscience!
Redemption's work is done!
Jehovah gave "assurance"
By raising up his Son!
Now, free from condemnation,
Free from the law's great claim,
Give glory everlasting
To his beloved Name!

LUCY A. BENNETT.

MARYLEBONE MEDICAL MISSION.

THE annual meeting of this Mission was held on the 5th instant, at Stafford Rooms, Titchborn-street, Edgware-road, when Lord SHAFTESBURY took the chair.

Dr. ROBERT CHAMBERS gave an interesting account of the work done in the past and former years, citing several cases illustrative of the great benefit of the practice of medicine along with preaching the Gospel. The great aim of the Mission is to preach the Gospel and heal the sick in one of the poorest and most populous parts of London, a district choked with miserable tenement houses, grimy, neglected, and evil-smelling. During 1882, 4647 cases were admitted, 13,806 attendances at the dispensary, 3356 home-visits made by the medical superintendent, 3264 visits by nurse, and 25,968 bibles, scripture-portions, &c., distributed. The Gospel is preached daily by Dr. Chambers to those who attend. The need of £1000 for a house and hall was mentioned by Dr. Chambers, and urged by the Chairman, who, in a few kindly words, heartily commended the Mission, as well as Medical Missions generally. Revs. H. W. Webb-Peploe, E. A. Midwinter, and Dr. Monro Gibson endorsed what had been said, and further urged the support of the Mission. By means of such agencies a great many hear the Gospel who would not otherwise do so, and their bodily ailments are, as a rule, the door to their souls.

"A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM."—A correspondent informs us that a London teacher who stands high in his profession, on finding that 240 of the 300 boys in his school had become abstainers, thought it was his duty to look fairly and fully into the temperance question. He did this, and it resulted that he and all his family have become pledged abstainers.

Notes and Comments.

THE Princess of Wales has just sent a donation of twenty-five guineas to the Royal National Lifeboat Institution, intimating her wish to be identified with its cause.

We trust our readers will not overlook the statement and appeal of Mr. George Hatton in a paper that is given as a supplement to our present issue. The work of which it speaks is noble in conception, and one that every earnest follower of Jesus Christ ought to have a hand in.

A Rural Christian Mission, to be conducted by the native Christians of India, has been inaugurated by Rev. — Golokuath, of Jalandhar. He has purchased with his own money a few hundred begás of land, in six different villages. Houses for teachers and preachers have been built, and they are expected to live on the produce of the land. The converts from heathenism are to be helped according to their necessities.

Mr. Gladstone, speaking the other day at the unveiling of a tablet in memory of Garibaldi, presented by Italians to the Duke of Sutherland, told the following story of that illustrious General. It serves to illustrate how truly the child is father to the man, as well as to show what a wonderful union of tender humanity with bold and unflinching courage there was in the nature of the great patriot. Referring to an interview he had had with Garibaldi, the Premier said :—

I remember he told me a story in these words:—"When I was a boy, I was at school in Genoa. It was towards the close of the great war of the French Revolution. Genoa was a great military post; a large garrison always in the town; constant parades and military displays, with bands and flags, that were beyond anything attractive to the schoolboys. All my schoolfellows used to run here and there all over the town to see if they could get sight of one of those military parades and exhibitions. I never went to one. It struck me then as a matter of pain and horror that it should be necessary that one portion of mankind should be set aside to have for their profession the business of destroying others." When one considers what Garibaldi was, what he was in the field of battle, how fear never for a moment, any more than cruelty, found a lodgment in that heroic breast, is it not a wonderful tale, and is it not truly interesting to trace up the man to the boy, and to find that even in the thoughtless hours of childhood that sympathy with mankind which governed his whole existence found such a peculiar and interesting form of expression?

While Protestants contemplate the celebration of the 400th anniversary of the birth of Luther with rejoicing, and thanksgiving to God, the Romish Church is making use of the same fact, and that with the utmost boldness, in Germany, to defame and injure the memory of the great Reformer. No language of vituperation, no process of falsifying history, is too strong or too glaring for some of his enemies to employ in seeking to dishonour his name, and lessen the influence of the principles associated with it. We trust the occasion will serve to call out vigorous and powerful declaration of the truths for the promulgation of which Luther was raised up of God. Romanism is unchanged, intolerant, and indwelt by the spirit of Antichrist as much as ever, and requires to be met everywhere with firm and dogmatic testimony as to its true character and design. "The golden cup in her hand is full of abominations," as Scripture so emphatically declares.

Dr. Horatius Bonar is preparing a memoir of the late Rev. G. T. Dodds, of Paris, his son-in-law.

Some friends of Indian Missions are endeavouring to make provision for the family of the late Rev. Dr. J. Morrison, for 43 years a missionary in North India, and the originator of the annual "Week of Prayer." Major-General Anderson, 2, Eliot-hill, Blackheath, S.E., will furnish fuller particulars.

An ardent worker in the Temperance cause suggests that twenty thousand Christian women throughout the land should send individual protests to the Prime Minister against the continued licensing of grocers and confectioners. As Mr. Gladstone was instrumental in passing the statute under which these licences are granted, it would be fitting that he should procure the abolition of a system that has caused untold personal and domestic misery.

A German correspondent of the New York Christian Intelligencer says :—

The school of Ritschl annuls the expiatory death of Christ, and lays much stress upon the ethical life of our Lord and his followers. A pupil of this school, Professor Kaftan, of Basel, has been appointed to the professorship left vacant by Dorner. The outlook in our German universities is sad indeed. The students are busy with Wellhausen's Kritik and Ritschl's Theology, and our theological youth is returning to the old rationalism. All must be interpreted from an historical and human standpoint, and belief in God and in his wonders and mysteries disappears.

Here are a few Spurgeonic items from the current number of The Sword and Trowel :—

Monday, June 18, is to be observed as a day of united prayer on behalf of the Pastor's College.

The following day, Tuesday, June 19, is the forty-ninth anniversary of the Metropolitan Pastors' birthday; it will be signalised by the usual all-day festival at the Stockwell Orphanages.

There are chapels or bazaars to be opened, anniversaries to be celebrated, debts to be removed, tea-meetings to be held, schools to be built, or Blue Ribbon Missions to be inaugurated; and the question is put, 'Shall we ask Mr. Spurgeon to come?' we beg beforehand to furnish the answer—'Don't!' Most gladly would we serve all our brethren to the utmost if health permitted, but repeated warnings convince us that the wisest course for us is to use the strength given to us for the work which rightly claims our first attention, and leave all other efforts to those who have been entrusted by God with greater physical force. It is a great sorrow to be shut up to this, but what else can we do?

There are still rigid Sabbatarians in Scotland, determined to withstand modern innovations on what they have been taught is due to the sacredness of the Day of Rest. A large quantity of fish was brought on the Saturday night to the Western terminus of the Highland Railway, to be conveyed to the London markets by a Sunday train. A report says :—

About one o'clock on Sunday morning, however, the residents of Strome assembled in large numbers, and protested against the sanctity of the Sabbath being thus invaded. They took possession of the pier and railway property, resisted the efforts of the police to dislodge them, and refused to permit the removal of the fish during canonical hours.

The fishermen remained in possession of the railway and pier until midnight, religious services being held throughout the day. It would be well if equal determination to maintain the observance of the Lord's day animated the friends of the Sabbath everywhere, though certainly not by the same methods of operation.

The Society of Friends, ever distinguished by philanthropy and benevolence of the highest order, have just given fresh evidence of their regard to humanity, and desire to promote the interests of those in distress. We copy the following from The Times of last week :—

The Society of Friends in Ireland have lately distributed 270 tons of potatoes to be used for seed among the distressed peasantry of County Donegal, at an expenditure of nearly £1,800. The distribution has been made principally by their own members, who have travelled through the distressed portions of the country for the purpose. Material assistance was received from the Lord Lieutenant, who readily placed several gunboats at their disposal when other means of transit could not be obtained. About 3,000 families have been enabled to plant their potato patches with a quality of seed superior to that which is ordinarily used. The committee have no doubt that the seed has been used for the purpose.

The speech of the Bishop of Peterborough in the House of Lords, the other night, on the Cathedral Statutes Bill, was remarkable for its outspokenness on the relations of the Church to the State. The following extracts contain principles well worthy of consideration by all the churches, indicating as they do the vast importance of the spiritual, beyond the political, in connection with Church life and work :—

The Church of England in Parliament, and especially in the House of Commons, is politically weak for a reason which is highly creditable to her—namely, because she is politically neutral. She takes no part in party politics. She tries to do good to the whole nation, and not to a portion of it only, and consequently in her assemblies she is not given to pass resolutions in favour of the proceedings of this or that Ministry. If the Church of England continues to neglect party politics for spiritual objects she will be the gainer, not only spiritually but politically. The political power of the future in this country will lie with the masses, and the Church of England, which devotes herself to labouring among the masses without intriguing with political parties, will in the end prove the most powerful. The force that moves nations in the end and in the long run is the spiritual force, and in the end and in the long run the spiritual society will prevail over any number of political clubs; and if political Dissenters in the House of Commons choose to transform themselves into political clubs, the result will be that they will lose that which the Church of England is rapidly gaining—the affection of the masses by whom the fate of the Church and of the political institutions will before long have to be decided.

Dr. Grindrod, of Malvern, referring to a statement made by Dr. H. Branthwaite in his recent speech at Exeter Hall, that "the early Temperance reformers knew nothing at all of the action of alcohol upon the human system," says :—

Exactly half a century ago I for one was engaged in almost daily expositions, by lectures and in other ways, of the action of alcohol on the human system. Nearly forty years ago I engaged in a Medical Mission, which lasted over six years, and illustrated my views by a collection of medical drawings, which covered the four walls of a large hall, and which were prepared at considerable cost, in addition to a variety of morbid preparations and anatomical models. These lectures were attended by hundreds of thousands, and tens of thousands signed the pledge.

A correspondent writes thanking us for some recent articles on Congregationalism and Freethought, urging that "the great want is that of outspokenness on the part of men who hold the truth, but who think they must allow those who are in church-fellowship with them to hold error and to proclaim it. There is a fear of being thought 'narrow' in not allowing that these may be right as well as themselves. Such articles as that on 'Latitudinarianism' may tend to open the eyes of these good men."

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland has just held its annual meeting in Belfast. The outgoing Moderator, Dr. Killen, opened the proceedings by an admirable sermon on the words, "Who is sufficient for these things?" The duties and responsibilities of the ministry were shown to be so manifold and solemn that none but those who live in close abiding communion with God can possibly discharge them with any hope of success, or real consciousness of power. The sermon was most timely, and animated throughout by a tone of deep spirituality and richest Gospel truth.

In his address, before retiring from office, Dr. Killen uttered words full of wisdom and discernment, concerning the present state of Ireland, words which were as thoroughly patriotic as they were loyal. Our space only allows us to make one extract, which seems to us specially worthy of note:—

The penal and land laws bore as hardly on Presbyterians as on Roman Catholics, yet our people are law-abiding and peaceful, and comparatively free from crime. The four provinces have been under the same laws, yet one is prosperous and peaceful, while three are stained with blood. Surely this points to the conclusion that the religion of the people has much to do with their freedom from or complicity with crime. And we all know that Romanism, with its doctrine of mortal and venial sin, its purgatory, its confessional, and absolution, has a demoralising influence on its votaries. The only effectual remedy, therefore, for Ireland's ills is the Gospel of the grace of God. The Irish people have no natural propensity to crime and blood. They are a noble race—vivacious, quick-witted, intelligent, warm-hearted, pure in their morals, faithful to their friends. Only bring them under the influence of the Gospel, lead them to the feet of Jesus, imbue their hearts with love to Him, give them the light and liberty his truth alone can give, and they will be among the noblest specimens of humanity, and our beloved Emerald Isle will once more become an island of saints.

Rev. H. B. Wilson, of Cookstown, was elected Moderator for the ensuing year, an appointment which seems to be regarded by the whole Church with great satisfaction. His opening address to the Assembly augurs well as to the influence he is likely to exert during his term of office. Admirably does he sum up in the following words the duties of Christians in Ireland at the present time:—

Meantime, our special duties are to follow our own people to their scattered homes throughout the land, and provide opportunities for them to hear the Gospel; to speak the truth as it is in Jesus, with loving heart and persuasive tongue, to all who will hear the message; to allay the bitterness of sectarian strife; to act in concert with the sister churches of the land in every good work; to shed around us the light of holy lives; to put ourselves into line with every movement fitted to promote industry, frugality, obedience to the laws of the realm and loyalty to the throne; and to pray earnestly and perseveringly to Him who is Ruler of the nations, that He would turn the hearts of all men to Himself, and make our island home the abode of a loyal, contented, peaceable, prosperous, and godly people. This is what Ireland needs, and this, I believe, is substantially the work in her interest which Christ assigns to us as a Church.

The Presbyterian ministers of Chicago have given up the habit of preaching in connection with their Communion services, and devote the time to prayer, praise, remarks on the ordinance, silent meditation, and thanksgiving. Dr. Dykes, of Regent-square Church, London, has adopted a somewhat similar course, an address from the pulpit, prior to the Communion, taking the place of the ordinary sermon. This is undoubtedly far more contributive to the due observance of the Lord's command than the custom of making it a mere adjunct to another formal service. To the devout mind there is ample scope for continued meditation, and full enjoyment of the Master's presence in the Communion service itself, apart from other engagements.

The annual meetings of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland have been held in the Hall, Castle-hill, Edinburgh. The Lord High Commissioner was the Earl of Aberdeen, the newly-elected Moderator being the Rev. Dr. John Rankine. In addition to the transaction of business relating to home work, the Assembly was occupied with reports on Colonial and Foreign Missions. A public meeting was held on behalf of Home and Foreign Missions, presided over by Mr. G. A. Campbell, of Stracathro. It appeared from statements made that there is a revival of interest in this work on the part of the Church, Dr. Elder Cumming, of Glasgow, moving a resolution to the effect, "That this meeting rejoices to hear of improved organisation for increasing the contributions of the Church in support of all her missionary enterprises, and earnestly trusts that such organisation will be generally adopted." It was said that some of the Glasgow Sunday-schools were contributing more than the congregations, an indication of what results from careful organisation.

A deputation from the Scotch Church in England was received during the session. Dr. Macleod, the minister of Crown-court Chapel, London, was the leading speaker, and was enthusiastically received, his report on the progress of the old and historical cause with which he is identified giving the greatest gratification to his audience. Mr. Anderson, another representative of the same Church, also spoke, and urged the importance of a strong Presbyterian Church being maintained in England.

The report of the committee on the Conversion of the Jews was very satisfactory, and showed that there are eleven schools, with 2233 pupils; of these 1106 were Jews. The Stations are at Constantinople, Smyrna, Salonica, Alexandria, and Beyrout. There are six missionaries, and thirteen assistants and teachers. The income last year was £5392—£899 more than the previous year.

An article in The Daily Telegraph of Friday last complains in a tone of great bitterness of the favour that legislation on behalf of Temperance Reform and Social Purity appears to receive at the hands of the Government. The Sunday Closing Acts for Cornwall and Durham are spoken of as "beneficent despotism;" recent parliamentary action in similar directions, and on behalf of the repeal of the Acts in connection with our garrison towns, is called "grandmotherly legislation." Our contemporary asserts that "a stand should be made by the representatives of all the interests menaced by these efforts, a stand which should be joined in, heart and hand, by that great section of the public who object to being treated as though they were the children of the old woman who lived in a shoe."

Surely the writer is reading backwards, or else with green glasses on his eyes. In any case, it is a sad thing to find an editor of so widely circulated a journal lending his aid to hinder efforts for promoting the cause of Temperance and purity, which have ever proved themselves to be identical with the cause of national thrift and well-being.

The bitterness of Russian feeling in reference to Jews may be imagined from the fact that Hebrews there who keep Christians as domestic servants, even without trying to proselytise them, are fined five roubles daily.

Few are aware of the fearful extent to which drunkenness affects infant mortality. Some striking statements on the subject are quoted in a recent letter to The Echo. Sir W. Gull has said that alcohol is the most destructive agent of which he is aware, and we have only to study the records of infanticide, and to trace the causes of death in relation to children upon whom inquests are held, to see how chargeable alcohol is with the great proportion of them all. What week passes by without its record of some horrid act of child murder committed by those who, when sober, may be as affectionate and careful as any? But recently we have read of a mother, when drunk, thrice throwing her infant on the fire; of a father seizing his child by the legs and braining it against the wall; of a grandmother taking a babe of four months old from one public-house to another, until it died by a fall from her drink-palsied arms.

Take, on the same subject, the following testimonies from eminent physiologists as to the hereditary effects of strong drink. This is the testimony of Professor Darwin: "All the diseases arising from spirituous liquors, or fermented liquors, are liable to become hereditary, even to a third generation; increasing if the cause be continued till the family becomes extinct." Dr. Edis exposes "the delusion that ale or stout is necessary as an article of diet for nursing mothers." Dr. Richardson bears the following witness: "Not one of the transmitted wrongs, physical or mental, is more certainly passed on to those yet unborn than the wrongs which are inflicted by alcohol."

The testimony of our judges is frequently given with equally startling plainness, on another aspect of this question. During the recent session of the Central Criminal Court at the Old Bailey, Mr. Justice Hawkins twice in one day alluded to the crime producing effects of intoxicating drinks. He asserted from observation that 75 per cent. of the crime of the country was directly due to this cause. These things being so, surely it is high time that something decided should be attempted in the way of removing the temptations to indulgence that exist on every hand.

STRANGERS' REST, WORKERS' MEETING.

A VERY interesting and profitable time was spent here last Thursday; many friends gathered, and the Lord's presence was realised. Rev. J. WILKINSON spoke of the return of our Lord. The nearness of his approach, and the practical bearing it should have upon our everyday life, were dwelt upon very impressively.

Dr. ZIEMANN was present, and, with a full heart, told of the Lord's wonderful doings recently in Germany. He told an affecting incident of an aged mother, so anxious about the conversion of her three sons, living in three different towns. At each of these places this mother was seated in the audience, and God honoured her faith in the salvation of each one!

A request was made that Christian friends might be led to help in painting and repairing the "Rest," so as to make it look cleaner and brighter.

Grants of English, Swedish, and Italian tracts and magazines, &c., are much needed, and will be gratefully received by the Hon. Sec., Mr. J. T. Isaacs, 163, St. George-street, E.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MISSION IN EXETER HALL.

SATURDAY EVENING, JUNE 2.

Strong Drink a Robber of the Churches.

THE meeting this evening, which was largely attended, under the presidency of Mr. Arthur Pease, M.P., was opened with the singing of the hymn—

"The light of the world is Jesus."

Mr. F. Murphy then read part of Romans xv., and prayer was offered by Rev. J. McCarthy.

ADDRESS BY THE CHAIRMAN.

The subject which has been put down for our consideration this evening is the connection between strong drink and the Church; it is described as "a robber of the Churches." When I observed what the special subject was, my first thought was of those with whom I myself had been familiar, who had held the position of pastors or ministers in connection with churches of various communions, and who had fallen under the influence of strong drink. I thought, however, it would not be profitable to our meeting this evening that anecdotes of this character should be told. We grieve over such cases. We regret that the conduct of any Christian man should bring reproach. At the same time, while we look upon them with grief, we are not inclined to talk, or we should not be inclined to talk much about them, but rather to learn from them those lessons which these events are calculated to teach. Perhaps the most prominent amongst these is, "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." I have seen those who have been blessed of God as instruments in his hand for the conversion of souls, who, through not abstaining from intoxicating liquor, have come under thraldom to it, and have become degraded in the sight of the community, and have lost their positions in the Church. It seems to me that these cases are eminently calculated to warn every member of the Christian Church.

But what I thought of speaking about to-night was this, that strong drink interferes with the liberty and the power of the Church. It robs it of both. Some may wonder how it robs the Church of its liberty, but those who are connected with the innermost workings of a great number of congregations know that this drink traffic has its influence upon the Ministry and the Church. A gentleman told me a while ago that at some great church gatherings in Scotland it was said there were 2000 people assembled, and while they were in the place they drank a large number of bottles of whiskey. Somebody said to the minister, "Why did you not speak strongly against it?" He said, "The leading members of my church are in the trade." Well, we see how he was bound. He was unable to speak plainly. There was not the liberty in the pulpit that he ought to have had to declaim against a vice which was ruining the bodies and souls of those who were under his spiritual oversight.

We may turn to many other cases—the country clergyman for instance. He knows that the one place in his village where the young men are degraded is the public-house. He knows that all the evil associations of the place gather there, that those whose example is bad are to be found there, and he would warn his people plainly against frequenting the public-house. But how is he situated? It may be that that very public-house belongs to the patron of the living—the squire of the parish. It may be that the leading man in his congregation, who is supplying him largely with the funds for his philanthropic and religious efforts, is himself the brewer who supplies the house. Therefore he feels himself in a very difficult position lest any remark he may make may seem to be personally directed, and lest, whilst speaking against the influence of drink, and advising young men not to go to those places, he will be thought to be speaking at the gentleman who is sitting in the pew just below the pulpit. So we find it interferes with his liberty, and dependent as the congregations often are upon the contributions of some of their wealthier members, he feels that to give offence in that quarter would be largely to limit his powers of usefulness.

There is a more direct point that comes home to the members of congregations on which I would like to say a few words. I have no doubt many of you who are gathered here are Sabbath-school teachers. You know in London—as in the country—that if the boys who are under your care are to be brought up as industrious, God-fearing young men, you would desire, above all things, that they should be kept away from the public-house. If you say to them, "Keep away from the public-house," while you yourselves are in your own private houses taking intoxicating liquors, what influence can you have over them? We frequently find in every-day life that individuals come to those who are abstainers and say to them, "Such a young man is going the wrong way; I wish you would speak a word to him." If we were to say to them, "Why don't you do it yourselves?" most probably the reply would be given, "I can hardly invite him to be an abstainer when I am not an abstainer myself." So the Sunday-school teacher, when he is endeavouring in his class to put before his scholars those truths of our religion which he desires to impress upon them, and is pointing out that those principles will lead them in the path of self-denial and abstinence from anything that tends to evil, will find that he is encouraging them to do things which he himself is not doing, that he is asking them to take a step that he has not himself taken; therefore he is dumb upon these subjects. If that be so, do we not find that strong drink is a robber of the liberty and power of the Church? If it prevents ministers of religion and those who exercise spiritual gifts from speaking all that is in their hearts to declare unto the people; if we find in the Sabbath-school the same influence working, although it may be of a somewhat different kind, we say that strong drink is robbing the Church of its liberty and of its power.

On the other hand, those of us who are abstaining from strong drink feel that we are exercising a power greater than any mere words of advice would have. When I have known men of eminent piety, exercising large and great influence in their congregations, who have had but little sympathy with us in our operations, I have thought "they know not what they do." Young men who, perhaps, hold themselves in high esteem, will say, "Surely we may copy their example and do as they do." But the young man who thus speaks has perhaps a different temperament and in his daily surroundings has greater temptations than the minister of whom he is speaking. He may fall, while the other one maintains his steadfastness in sobriety; and so I want to ask you this evening to say that you will have no part in limiting the liberty and power of the Christian Church; that you will each one individually place yourselves in that position in which you have the greatest capacity for strengthening the weak, and helping those who otherwise might fall. Strong drink has not only been a robber of the churches, taking some of their brightest ornaments, both among ministers and laymen, but it has largely crippled the usefulness of the Church, and has most materially interfered with both its liberty and its power.

ADDRESS BY REV. J. HUDSON TAYLOR.

I have not worn the Blue Ribbon very long; I only put it on last night. It is, however, not the first time I have been on a temperance platform. The very year that I was born, in 1832, my father became a teetotaler. It was not very easy work being a teetotaler then. There were no audiences in Exeter Hall, like this great audience, to encourage those who were abstainers. I believe that at the first temperance meeting I went to I was carried in my father's arms, so that it is not a new subject to me. I have a very distinct recollection when I wore petticoats of standing upon a chair and imitating my father in attempting to give to my companions a little temperance lecture.

Our subject to-night is a very sad one: "Strong Drink a Robber of the Churches." As I was thinking of it I recalled the few friends and companions I had in my childhood's days, when we played at teetotal meetings and Temperance lectures. And where is one of them? He is either in a madhouse to-night or he has died in a madhouse during the last four years that I have been in China. Would to God he had become a total abstainer when he was a child, and continued one. I think of another of them, one of my most intimate companions. His father died in delirium tremens, and the whole of the family were wrecked and ruined through strong drink. I think of a third companion. He was once a Christian, entered the Church, gave great promise of usefulness, and began to seek to rescue the perishing around him; he is wrecked now and lost. There are some others, total abstainers, who are Christian men, and who are doing a useful work for God. Well, what a safeguard and what a blessing it would have been if all my early companions had become total abstainers; if when the Blue Ribbon was brought they had put it on, and boldly shown their colours.

I have been a missionary for thirty years. As our Chairman has reminded us, it is not always a pleasant thing to look back upon the career of those with whom we have stood shoulder to shoulder as the witnesses for the Lord Jesus Christ; but when I think of some of those I have met and known during these thirty years, what has strong drink done for them? I think of two families into which misery came, ending in divorce. I think of a number of Episcopalian, Presbyterian, Congregational, Baptist, and Methodist brethren who were once preaching the Gospel, but who were all ruined, and some died dishonoured. One of them, the last time I heard of him, was a porter in a workhouse. Drink is indeed a robber of the churches. When I was in London last I was invited to preach to a London congregation, and when I went into the vestry the sacramental wine was brought out, and I was requested to take some before I went into the pulpit: "You will preach all the better for it," said the deacon. My friends, what would have been the inspiration? This good old Book that we so much love tells us the same story, "Be not drunk with wine wherein is excess but be filled with the Spirit." This is the message which our Master has given us.

Drink is a robber of the churches, not merely by taking many out of them who have been in, but by keeping many out who should be in, and would be in but for this sore temptation. Man is very weak, and some men are especially weak. We heard last night a terrible story of the way in which strong drink injures the children, and of the predisposition that some have for it. There are those who feel weak in themselves, lacking self-confidence and self-respect: they would be glad to wear the Blue Ribbon, and to join the Temperance cause, but are afraid lest in doing so they may bring disgrace upon it, and be unable to stand, and be unable to resist the power of temptation. But we are met to-night not merely on the Temperance platform, but on the Gospel Temperance platform. I read in this good old Book that the Gospel means the "power of God unto salvation"—unto deliverance—"to everyone that believeth," be he Jew or be he Greek; if any of you who feel, "Oh! that I were free from this thraldom," receive the Lord Jesus Christ, and receiving Him, you will receive a power to help and to succour you against the mighty foe.

In China I have been brought in contact with the heathen, and there we have to contend with one very great difficulty, the utter want of faith in all religions. China is a country in which there is a great deal of philosophical scepticism. I was talking once to one of the literary men there, and he said, We don't believe any religion at all. We have seen all forms of religion ried, and all forms of religion fail. Good men re good men, whether they are Confucionists, r Buddhists, or the professors of any other form f religion that we have had brought before us. Bad men are bad men, and continue bad men whatever form of religion they accept." Now in ur work amongst them we do rejoice in one glorious truth, that the Lord God Omnipotent eigneth. When I am before a Chinese audience t is my joy to know that there is not one f them that the Lord Omnipotent is not able to deliver. I knew a Christian Chinaman, nd I have heard him preach with mighty power. And why? Because he had found what the power of God was in his own soul and in transorming his own life. That was a literary man, a Chinese B.A. He went out into the streets of his own native city one day, not fearing the scorn and contempt which he knew would be bitterly poured upon him, especially by the upper classes and the literary class there, and he preached Jesus mighty to save. He said: "I have to tell you not merely about a salvation to come, not merely that if you will accept this religion and follow his Teacher you will, in a future state, obtain some future blessing. I have to tell you of the Lord Jesus Christ as a Saviour of your lives, and that if there is a poor opium smoker here who can't give up his pipe, Jesus Christ can save him. Jesus Christ can save the sensualist, and Jesus Christ can save the gambler. He is an Almighty Saviour, and if you ask when and how? I say, receive Him, and He will save you now." If there be here one who does not know how to escape the power of strong drink, and if there be one who does not know how to escape the power of the tobacco-pipe, an enemy, I fear, almost as much as the drink, the Lord Jesus Christ, my Saviour, can save him to-night, and now if he will take Him as his strength and his shield. What was the result of that Chinamen's sermon? There was a poor wretched man in that crowd who was the terror of the neighbourhood, and the dread of the mandarin. He had a gambling hell some ten miles outside the city, and was surrounded by a band of desperadoes, so that the magistrates dare not touch him. Men went out of that city, and spent their time and money in this man's house gambling with bad women, and the other concomitants of a gambling hell. The poor man heard a message that day that went to his heart. In that poor, wretched man there was a chord that the Spirit of God caused to vibrate. He heard the sweet words "deliverance" and "Saviour," and said "If that Jesus Christ can save me He shall save me now." He went home with the preacher and had a talk and prayer with him. It was early in the afternoon. He turned the bad people out of his house that afternoon, and shut and locked the door. A party of gamblers came there that night, out of whom he would have made fifty dollars. "No," he said, "this house is closed for such purposes. It will never be opened again until it is opened to preach the Gospel of Christ in it." That man is alive to-day. I have been in that house and preached the Gospel. He is a changed character. The members of his family have been saved, and they will shine bright as the stars in glory when this world has passed away.

Dear friends, the Lord Jesus Christ is mighty to save. This is what Gospel Temperance means: the power to bring with it blessings for the present life and the dim reflection of the eternal glory that shall follow. There was an opium smoker in another part of China, 500 miles away from this last place. He had been the victim of this habit for thirty years and wanted to give it up, but he could not. It was affecting his purse and destroying his health, and he knew that as things were going on the end could not be far off. He tried to give it up gradually, but it was too much for him. He felt his doom was sealed. I have been engaged as a medical missionary in the cure of opium smokers. I have seen them writhing in agony as the craving has been on them, tears running down their eyes, foam issuing from their mouths, and their bodies trembling in every nerve. They have not known how to bear it. We have said to those men, "Pray to God to help you." They have prayed and have been helped. The medicines we have given have been of some assistance to them; but those who receive the Lord Jesus Christ do not fall back, as a rule, though the others who do not receive Him only get a temporary deliverance. This man knew nothing of Jesus Christ. What was he to do? He did not know. God had his eye upon that man and sent a Christian Chinaman to find him out, and a number of others, and put Christ before him, and this man received Jesus Christ as his Saviour. He received a new heart and a new power —not only desires to be a different man, but power to carry out those desires. He never thought of giving up the opium, but one day a Christian soldier came in to read the Scriptures with him, and found him laid on his side with his head on a pillow, and with the opium pipe in his mouth. He said, "Don't you know you cannot be a Christian, and smoke opium?" "Why not?" he asked. "It is a sin against God." "Does the Bible say anything against opium?" "No, but it speaks about drink, and I believe that drink and opium stand very much on the same basis." His friend advised him to give it up gradually, but the man said, "Is it a sin in the sight of God to smoke three drachms?" "Yes, certainly." "Then I can't think it is right in the sight of God to smoke two drachms and nine-tenths, and give it up gradually. If the thing is sin, it must be given up at once." The Christian Chinaman was frightened; he was afraid the man would die if he gave it up suddenly. They prayed together about the matter; and, as faith strengthened the heart of the opium-smoker, he took his pen, and wrote on a piece of paper, "In accordance with the will of the Heavenly Father, from this moment I vow never again to touch opium, secretly or openly." He posted it up in the front of his shop there and then, and never touched it again. If there is an intemperate man here or a smoker of tobacco, let him write down, like this poor opium-smoker, "In accordance with the will of the Heavenly Father, from this moment I vow never to touch, secretly or openly, strong drink or tobacco again." As he trusts in the living God, he will not be put to shame. The Lord Omnipotent reigneth.

ADDRESS BY MR. HENRY VARLEY.

Sacrilege has been regarded as a crime of the highest magnitude. The reason of this is obvious. The Church, properly understood, represents the possession and property of God. By common consent the term "sacrilege" has come to mean the robbery either of property or money, devoted to sacred purposes. I use the term in a higher sense, and charge strong drink with robbing the Church of God of living men and women. These are God's inheritance, properly purchased by the sacrifice of the Son of God, redemed unto God by his own blood out of every nation, kindred, tongue, and people. The testimony of the Gospel is that "Christ died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him who died for them and rose again." To rob the Church of money is iniquity of no ordinary magnitude; to rob the Church of those for whom Christ died is a crime more terrible than may be described.

Not only has strong drink been guilty of this crime, but it has marred and defaced the image of God in the experience of multitudes both of men and women; nay more, it has stamped with the counterfeit die of the sensual and devilish, millions, who, at least by profession, once bade fair to become pillars in the Temple of God. No one intelligently acquainted with Church history can deny this. Thousands of ministers have been deceived, have fallen, and have been disgraced by wine and strong drink; those whose feet were once beautiful as the messengers of peace bringing the glad tidings of good things, have, through intoxication, fallen into shame, silence, dishonour, and death. Once beloved they are now only mentioned in sorrow. Once in honour which an angel might envy, they have sunk into dishonour and eternal loss. Brighter than the sons of the morning, they sacrificed the glory of their shining to the subtle fascination and sting of the wine cup.

How many ministers during my experience of a quarter of a century have I known to fall! I remember when in Canada about eight years ago, one who had been a prominent minister sending in his card to me, at the house of the friend with whom I was staying in Toronto. He was now dishonoured and disgraced by the use of intoxicating drinks. He had been seen in certain public-houses, drinking his soda and brandy in the morning. When I went to see him in the dining-room, and saw him bearing on his face all the marks of a man disgraced and dishonoured by drink, his breath foul with the smell of brandy, though it was but ten o'clock in the morning, I felt how possible it was and is for a man to sacrifice the highest prospects to the intoxicating cup. Poor fellow! how the evil habit has followed and cursed him! I fear, from most recent information, that he is still in this gall of bitterness and in this bond of iniquity.

I might speak of one other case in New South Wales. I was asked to preach on one occasion the anniversary sermons at a certain chapel there. On the Monday morning I was asked by the minister to go with him and visit some of his people. Seven houses were visited that Monday morning. In six out of the seven the whiskey bottle was placed upon the table. I do very earnestly desire that one result of the Temperance Missions throughout our land will be to sweep this dishonourable social custom away. My friend took spirits in five places that morning. I need scarcely say that I had no fellowship with that; but as soon as our visitation was over I asked him to come with me into the quiet cemetery in that prettily-situated town. Sitting upon one of the grave-stones, I said to him, "I observe a marked difference in your church compared with three years ago; what is the cause?" He said, "I don't know; but there is a difference." I said, "My dear friend, let me be very faithful with you. Don't you think I have seen the illustration and proof of that cause to-day?" "What do you mean?" "Are you aware that five times you have taken spirits this morning? Now, I am as sure as I live and am sitting on this tombstone, that the spirit of prayer and the appetite for drink cannot dwell together."

Oh! I hear just now the stalwart words of the Apostle Paul, "I keep my body in subjection, lest after having preached to others, I myself should be rejected of my Lord." And I am here to-night to ask those who are found in this meeting (I am thankful to see such a large preponderance of men present) to see to it that intemperance has no power over you. Let this be your aim, that you should be able honestly to say, not as mere maudlin sentiment, not as some namby-pambyism of which we have had already far too much, but in bold honesty, "God knows that in my heart and life there is no form of sin that has mastery over me."

I believe that what we need in our day is to have a view of the saving power of the Lord Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the body. These cases that I have cited are but samples of the wreckage caused by feeding the appetite for drink. Experience everywhere shows that the gratification of appetite recoils upon the subject, and more and more involves him in its horrible bondage. I have been nearly thirty-three years an abstainer, and, despite prophecies to the contrary, have never felt so strong as I feel to-day. I believe that I owe a good deal of that, under God, to this, that when I was a boy of fourteen I signed the Temperance pledge, and never knew the effect of drink upon me in my life.

I quite agree with Mr. Hudson Taylor about smoking. I would that you would all here give up the pipe. To-morrow morning you may find in London thousands of young men who are smoking before they rise from their beds. As soon as breakfast is over, they are off into the parks to smoke again. The effect of this narcotic is to quiet them down into a sort of happy go-easy condition, when they will not take the trouble to think, to read or to listen. Go to-night to your billiard saloons, and see clouds of smoke rising there and the sort of ennui that is over all in these places. Would to God that they had an object in life. Would to God that so many of them were not cursed by these appetites of the body. We were not made for gourmands or educated pigs; we were made for men. Oh! that there may be, as one result of this work in this Hall, such a manifestation of the government of the body amongst men that we shall look back with gratitude to these meetings as having helped in no uncertain way to this great result.

Further, I charge upon the drinking customs of society that they have been mainly the cause of vast numbers of the members of the churches dishonouring their profession. Whenever the facts are known it will be seen that intemperance heads the list in the causes of failure in the Church, and the necessity for discipline by the Church. I am not unmindful of the solemn fact that, in nearly all cases where the discipline of the Church has been exercised, the subjects of such action have, as a rule, become prayerless and unwatchful. Departure in heart from God precedes, in nearly every case, a fall in the life; but intemperance would appear to be the devil's masterpiece in securing that fall.

Finally, let us not forget in the Temperance movement that we are dealing mainly with a negative principle after all. It is not enough that we teach the people to abstain from drink. Turkey is, religiously, a sober country, but let us not forget that that country is, perhaps, nationally considered, the most licentious country in the world. I would rather see England drunken than I would see England licentious. I know how these evils are identified with one another, how they work and co-work, but what I say is this: let us see to it that when we get people to abstain from drink, when the house is emptied, when the habit is broken, let us see that we put a positive furnishing in the house, or our work is in vain. "When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places seeking rest; and finding none, he saith: 'I will return into my house from whence I came out,' and when he is come he finds it empty, and swept, and garnished." We have no objection to the house being swept and garnished, but we demur to its being kept empty. It is the possession by the Lord Jesus Christ of every one who signs the pledge and dons the Blue Ribbon that we are labouring for. I beseech you, in Christ's name, receive the Son of God. Receive Him, and you shall know the deep meaning of the words: "If the Son shall make you free, you shall be free indeed"—free for the City of London, free for the government of that body, free to take your place of service amongst your fellow-men, free for the future, free for the eternal realities that are to come. May the living God greatly bless this enterprise in our city full of need—the biggest in the world, the wickedest, and yet I sometimes think the best. You think you have not taken so many pledges as you ought to have done, but let me tell you that London is honeycombed with an amount of temperance and Christian effort and such a number of Christian men and women, as shall yet make London's power felt for God, and truth, and righteousness, to the ends of the earth.

ADDRESS BY MR. T. E. MURPHY.

I thank God for the success of this Mission! Perhaps some may be disappointed that the numbers who have signed are not larger, but as I stand here I realise that there are more sober men in London than there were before this Mission was inaugurated. Consequently, less drink has been sold in the public-houses, and Temperance principles are more popular, and there are more men who will stand up and petition Parliament to pass a Sunday Closing Bill.

The subject is, "Strong Drink a Robber of the Churches." That is an admitted fact. I stand here with the cure—total abstinence, by the grace of God. I am a believer also in the little badge of blue. There are some who laugh at and ridicule us, but though

> "Scoffers die, and are forgot,
> Work done for God—it dieth not."

This little badge of blue has been the instrument of bringing Gospel Temperance before the minds of people who but for it would never have given it a thought. I was riding from London to Lancaster, and there were three gentlemen in the carriage. Shortly after we left Euston they engaged in conversation, and pretty soon one pulled a flask out of his pocket and passed it to his friends, and they indulged. I had the badge of blue on my overcoat; and the gentleman, looking over at me, said, "I see you belong to the Blue Ribbon Army?" I said, "Yes, I do." He said, "It is a good cause, and I believe in it." Said I, "If it is a good cause, and you believe in it, why don't you do something for it?" "Well," he said, "I don't mind telling you that we are to have a Mission in our town, and I have been thinking about joining." I said, "The sooner you do it the better." "Who are you?" he said. "I am proud to say I am the son of Francis Murphy, the founder of the Blue Ribbon movement." "Then," said he, "if you are the son of Francis Murphy I will take it from you." If I had not had the badge of blue on my coat that man would not have spoken to me, and perhaps I would not have had the courage to approach him. So I say to the teetotalers, sign the pledge, wear the blue, and do not be ashamed of your colours. People wear the colours of the Tory or the Liberal party as emblematic of their views, and are willing to work for their man. If you believe in the pledge of total abstinence, do not be ashamed to wear the colour that is emblematic of your opinion. It is a protest against "the robber of the churches," so put it on. We will never know its strength and value.

There is a young solicitor here from St. Helen's, one of the most popular young men in the town. I went to the town last October, to engage in a Gospel Temperance campaign. This young man was a moderate drinker and was known as a jolly good fellow. He had influence; whatever Harry did the boys said was right. I got near Harry and said to him, "You should sign the pledge. This is the commencement of this work, and if you will give us your influence you can get the young men who follow you to do likewise." I had quite a time with him, but I did not succeed. Pretty soon I saw his wife coming over to him, and she slipped her arm into Harry's and said, "You had better come up and sign." "Well," said he, "I will do it;" and when Harry Riley signed the pledge there were no fewer than half a dozen young men who did the same. He was laughed at because he wore the blue ribbon. He said he had occasion to visit Liverpool and thought at times he would take it off, but he said, "I knew I must be true and I wore it that day. When I had finished business I went to lunch with two of my friends. They saw me with the badge of blue, and they said, 'All right, we won't ask him to take any wine.'" This is the power of this little badge of blue in this Gospel Temperance work.

A girl who lived in the provinces was to visit some friends in London, and she wore the little badge of blue. Her parents thought that if they placed her in a railway carriage she would reach London in safety, and her friends would be there to meet her. On arriving at Euston, through a mistake, her friends were not there. She walked about until at last a cabman came up and said, "Who are you looking for, my girl?" Said she, "I expected to find some friends here, but they haven't come." She had the directions. He read them and said, "I will drive you there." "But I don't know you," said the little girl. The cabman took up the lappet of his coat, and the blue ribbon was there. "Then," said the little girl, "I will go along with you." This is the power of the blue ribbon.

Some people say there is no need to sign the pledge. I met a man in the town of Haslingden which has 12,000 people, and where in two weeks 7500 signed the pledge, and where the publicans had to go out to work at the mill like other people. This man would not sign the pledge, and said, "I don't need it." When visiting the town two months afterwards, I met that man and said to him, "Will you sign the pledge?" He said, "Since I last saw you, when I said I would not take any pledge, I have pledged my coat, my watch, and all the furniture I have; but now I am ready to sign your pledge, so that I may get them all back." We believe in a pledge that puts a coat on a man's back, boots on his feet, and a dress on his wife. I believe that every man should think more of his own home and family than of the public-house. I ask you to-night to write your protest against this traffic, and go on with us until this blessed crusade shall be crowned with ultimate victory. In the meantime, there is an opportunity for each one of us to become missionaries. If all those who have signed the pledge would resolve each to get somebody else to do so, it would not be long before we should have a goodly army of abstainers. It is possible to reach the drinking man through kindness. The human family is susceptible to kind influences, and in this blessed work we believe in the spirit of kindness.

In 1877 my father visited the city of Troy, New York, to conduct a Gospel Temperance campaign. It is the great stronghold of the liquor interest in that State. The Mayor of the city was a namesake of my father's, and the largest brewer in that part of the country. The Temperance people wanted to get my father, and they also wanted the use of the City Hall. The Mayor, on application, said, "If there is a man by the name of Murphy coming here to preach total abstinence he may have the hall, for it's very seldom you meet a man by that name who doesn't take just a little." The campaign was inaugurated, and in six weeks, out of a population of 50,000, 27,000 signed the pledge for the first time. Murphy, the Mayor, used to brew twice a week, but at the close of the campaign he had hard work to brew once a week. At one of the meetings I noticed a man under the gallery, to whom I felt attracted. I left the platform, and passed down. I noticed my father was coming up, and we both came upon this man at the same time. It was in January, and it was bitterly cold. There were three feet of ice on the Hudson River. This man was in a most dilapidated condition, and his clothes were in a dreadful state, but I noticed he had a broad, open forehead, and a pair of eyes that flashed like stars. I said to myself, "Strip that man of his drink and get into his heart, and you will find 'manhood' written in characters of living light;" but it had been debased and degraded through the drink. My father said, "You had better sign the pledge." He looked at him and said, "I think I had better do something." My father said, "Sign the pledge." "I don't think I could keep it." My father said, "If you will only make an effort to help yourself we will help you and God will help you." The man shuffled forward to the pledge-table and wrote his name. He put the little card in his pocket and started out of the hall, but I knew he needed practical help. I knew further, that sometimes the nearest way to a man's heart is through his stomach. I believe in a Gospel that feeds the man when he is hungry. I had a little money in my hand, and I said to him, "Take this, it will help you." He turned to me with a look that if I live a thousand years I shall never forget, and said, "I did not sign the pledge for money." I slipped the money into his hand, and said, "Will you come to the prayer-meeting to-morrow?" He said, "I will."

Next day, at the prayer-meeting, I saw him. His face had come in contact with cold water, and that makes a wonderful improvement. My father conducted the prayer-meeting, and said, "Is there anyone here who would like to ask for the prayers of God's people?" This man rose up and said: "Most of you know me. I was respected, and had a business, but it has all gone through the drink, and I want you to pray for me." The people prayed for the man, and at the close of the meeting we talked with him, and my father asked him to come to the hotel and see him. He said, "I can't go there, I have been kicked out of that place more than a dozen times in the last month." "Never mind, come and see me, and let me do something for you." "What is that?" "I want you to let me give you a suit of clothes." He said, "Mr. Murphy, I didn't sign the pledge for clothes; and he commenced to cry like a child. My father said, "I want you to let me do for you what God's people did for me when I first started out." My father had to put himself into the position that that man was in before he could help him. I would to God that the Christian people would come down to the wants of poor fallen humanity. They would soon put an end to this "robber of the churches."

My father asked him to come to the meeting, and as they went together the people cried, 'There goes Murphy with the biggest drunkard in Troy." The police magistrate was waiting for him, and he said, "Mr. Murphy, I desire to see you for a moment. I am deeply interested in the success of this work, and so far nothing has occurred to disturb its harmony, but that man is the biggest drunkard in this city, and I, in my official capacity, have sent him to the prison every month for the past three years. In fact, we have a room there known as 'Henry Ellis's room.' If you take him on the platform you will insult the intelligence of Troy, and spoil the movement," My father replied, "If this movement cannot stand the salvation of Henry Ellis, in God's name let it die, for it has outlived its usefulness." The audience cheered the man, as he rose at my father's request, to speak. He said: "You know me, and you know how I have fallen through the drink; but, God helping me, I am going to get up again. I heard what you (turning to the Judge) said to Mr. Murphy, and it hurt me; but I want to tell you, in the presence of this great audience, that the room you keep in yonder prison for me you can let to some other man; I will never occupy it again." That man is fully saved. He has now a large business in the City of Troy, and I had the pleasure of being entertained by him, and seeing his wife. It seemed to me she had grown ten years younger since her husband signed the pledge, and there was a blue ribbon on every chair in the house! This, then, is Gospel Temperance, and I ask you to assist us in carrying on such a glorious work.

[We are obliged to postpone the insertion of the addresses on the closing evening to our next issue.]

MESSRS. WHITTLE AND M'GRANAHAN IN OHIO.

FOR two months past the city of Dayton has been greatly blessed by the evangelistic services conducted by Major D. W. Whittle. The meetings, held two and three times each day, were at first conducted in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, which comfortably accommodates about five hundred persons. These limits becoming too narrow the larger meetings were removed first to the Music Hall, thence to the rink, the attendance ranging from one to two thousand. As a speaker Major Whittle is simple, direct, earnest, full of Gospel truth, kind, tender, avoids all excesses of manner or illustration, and with no aim at oratory in the popular sense, holds his great audiences with the power of a master in the arts of speech. His afternoon Bible-readings, attended constantly by large numbers of interested Bible students, have been especially instructive. Mr. James McGranahan and his wife led the singing, a service in which their work has been greatly appreciated. At the present writing, the larger public meetings have been closed, and Mr. Whittle is conducting evening services in the Summit-street United Brethren Church, with afternoon Bible-readings at Association Hall.

The thirteenth anniversary of the Young Men's Christian Association of this city, was held recently. The address for the occasion, a production of great power, was delivered by Major Whittle.—Our Bible Teacher.

SOUTHWARK.—A useful open-air service is conducted every Sunday evening at 8.15, by Rev. G. W. McCree and friends in London-street, London-road; Christian helpers will be welcomed.

AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND WOMEN.

THE third annual meeting of the friends and supporters of the Home in Junction-road, Holloway, was held on Thursday last, in the Friends' Meeting House, Mercer's-road, Upper Holloway. Mr. T. A. Denny presided.

The report, which was of an encouraging nature, was read by Rev. J. F. Osborne, hon. sec.; its adoption was moved by Rev. E. Brewer, and supported by Rev. Thornley Smith. Having previously visited the Home, Mr. Smith expressed his regret that the institution was not more widely known; he felt sure a little knowledge of its working would ensure its greater support. Addresses were also given by Mr. H. Bright and Rev. A. J. Ard. Like a former speaker, Mr. Ard said he knew nothing of the existence of the Home until recently; he expressed the deepest interest in the work, and promised his hearty support.

A special feature of the proceedings was the Purchase Fund, which the Chairman explained to the meeting was a great undertaking: about £1,700 would be necessary to complete the purchase, and make the necessary alterations. Of this sum, about £220 had been previously subscribed, or promised.

ANGLO-INDIAN EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

REV. H. G. E. DE ST. DALMAS has been itinerating among English-speaking people on the Great Indian Peninsular Railway, and Captain H. Pelham Burn, of the Rifle Brigade, Poona, devoted two months' leave to Evangelistic work, with his magic lantern, and a large assortment of choice slides illustrative of "The Pilgrim's Progress" and Scripture subjects. By this additional attraction the Gospel was presented to much larger numbers than usual, both of European and of English-speaking natives. The meetings were held in school and reading-rooms, railway goods sheds and running-rooms, and in soldiers' barracks, also in a museum, theatre, pavilion, and Government kacheri; and sometimes the largest places proved too small for the numbers that came together.

Rev. H. Rylands Brown has been itinerating in Assam, under the auspices of this Society. "During the year," he writes, "a very large number of Babus had written to me, asking for copies of the Scriptures, and these had been forwarded. Out of this grew the subject of a lecture which they asked me to deliver. The interest was very great. At the request of some Hindus and members of the Brahmo Somaj I gave a second lecture on 'The proof of the necessity of a mediator for the salvation of mankind.' The lecture was given in a building lent and prepared for the occasion by a Mahommedan. A number of Moslems were present. The subject of the lecture had been chosen by the native gentlemen themselves. It struck me as very remarkable that I, a Christian teacher, was giving a lecture on such a subject, by request, to a mixed audience of Englishmen, Brahmos, Hindus, and Moslems. I left the place with a very thankful heart. With devout gratitude I close this three months' work for the Master. About 2500 miles have been covered. Many scores of Europeans were met with, many of whom are seldom or never visited by any Christian man."

TRACTS FOR DISTRIBUTION.—The Weekly Tract Society is just now making special grants of its tracts at one-third of the published price; thus: a parcel of tracts, containing 1000, which is usually issued at 15s., can be bought for 5s., and half the quantity for 2s. 6d. As all the tracts issued by the Society are short, pithy, four-page narratives, specially addressed to working people in simple language, tract distributors should avail themselves of the opportunity of securing early parcels while they can be obtained under this arrangement, as the number to be distributed at this rate is very limited. Application should be made to the Manager of the Weekly Tract Society, 62, Paternoster-row, London.

PIONEERING IN BOLIVIA.

WE fear that to many, if not most English readers, Bolivia is a terra incognita. Probably not a few intelligent Christians of middle or even mature age could not tell in which of the four quarters of the globe it is situated; others might vaguely guess that it is somewhere in South America. The whole of that vast continent has received comparatively scant attention and thought from the Christian world at large. One of the workers sent to Pernambuco by Rev. Wm. Taylor, writing to a contemporary, published in the United States, says, "It is characteristic of missionary writings, sermons, and addresses, to make mention of India, China, Japan, Mexico, Africa, and the islands of the sea, without any allusion to South America." This may be a somewhat exaggerated statement, but there is much that goes to substantiate it.

We are desirous of awakening the prayerful sympathy of our readers on behalf of a courageous effort that is now being made to carry the Gospel into the large Republic of Bolivia, in western central South America. From time to time we have recorded in these pages the faithful labours of Mr. Andrew M. Milne, an ardent Scotchman, who for a number of years has successfully represented the American Bible Society in the Argentine Republic. He has long looked forward with earnest desire and longing to making an evangelistic expedition to Bolivia, which may be said to be almost virgin soil, as far as the proclamation of the Gospel is concerned. This desire we learn is now to be fulfilled. Mr. Milne expected to leave Monte Video about the middle or end of May, accompanied by two colporteurs and a friend, Signor Pensoti, who is also thoroughly devoted to the work of Bible distribution in these lands. The little church at Montevideo were to have a week of special prayer for this important missionary journey, and also to ask counsel of God as to how they could best improve the opportunities there are for the spread of the Gospel there and on the River Plate. There seem to be many open doors which they are unable to enter.

A paper that recently appeared in the Chicago Christian Advocate, written by Rev. T. B. Wood, embodies an earnest call to prayer for South America—her ten nations, her nine republics, and the great empire of Brazil. In this article Mr. Wood, speaking of the past labours of Mr. Andrew Milne, says he has been "anointed of God to be the leader of the far extended pioneering that is opening all the South Eastern part of the continent for the preaching of the Gospel. In this fresh expedition to the west, we earnestly trust that Mr. Milne and his companions may be as manifestly anointed and equipped. There will be many difficulties of various kinds, but God is able to make the way plain and smooth, and we doubt not He will do so, in the way that shall be most conducive to the good of the Bolivian people. The wife and family of Mr. Milne are now in Scotland; we commend them to the prayerful remembrance of fellow Christians, during this time of anxiety and separation from a devoted husband and father, who is in the high places of the field.

BUCKHURST HILL.—The open-air services at this pleasant spot in Epping Forest have been resumed for the summer. For several years past a good work has been done through these weekly gatherings for the preaching and singing of the Gospel.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH have concluded a fortnight's Mission at Maidenhead, Berks. The brethren came at the invitation of the Baptist Church, but it was soon found desirable to adjourn from the chapel to the Town Hall, where the congregations continued to increase, until at last the building was so thronged that late comers could not find admission. All the addresses were rich in Gospel truth, delivered with a power of argument, aptness of illustration, and tenderness of appeal, well calculated to take the heart by storm. The visit of these brethren to Maidenhead will not soon be forgotten. The time of the year was not favourable for large gatherings, but good was done; souls professed conversion, and Christian people felt it to be a time of refreshing indeed.

THE DARK CONTINENT.

A STEAMER FOR THE UPPER CONGO.

THE area of Eccleston Hall was well filled with the friends who responded to Mr. and Mrs. Guinness' invitation for Tuesday week. Some time having been pleasantly spent in social converse over a cup of tea, Mr. S. A. Blackwood assumed the chair, and briefly introduced the business of the evening. The two most appropriate mottoes, he thought, for such an occasion, were "Ebenezer" and "Jehovah-jireh."

Mr. Grattan Guinness presented an exhaustive running outline of the history of the Livingstone Inland Mission, during the five and a half years of its course. The real work of the Mission, he said, was now only beginning. He told how the work originated and grew, how one worker after another was stricken down, but other volunteers filled up the gaps; and how a chain of stations had been planted, until at length Stanley Pool was reached. The first fruits of the work appeared in the two Congo lads, who were brought to England, and materially assisted Mr. Guinness in the work of preparing a grammar and dictionary of the Congo language. After a time they were formally admitted to membership in the Christian Church on profession of their faith, and have since returned to Congo-land with Mr. Craven, who was the first missionary sent out, and who had been home for the recruiting of his health. Three other Congo lads lately came to this country with Mr. Richards, who has also returned to recruit. These lads were on the platform, and greatly interested the meeting by their lively representations of native speech and customs. One of them repeated in the Congo language several Scripture narratives, which were afterwards given by another of the dusky youths in very fair and intelligible English. They seem to be lads of much promise. It was gratifying to hear from Mr. Guinness that there are 50 or 60 such youths now under the tuition of the missionaries out on the banks of the Congo.

One of the most interesting portions of Mr. Guinness' statement was that in which he gave details of his recent interviews with the King of the Belgians. There seems no doubt that the generous intentions and desires of that philanthropic potentate are of the most disinterested kind. During the last three years the king has spent £240,000 on the expedition which is headed by Mr. Stanley. He intends, says Mr. Guinness, to continue the work until the whole of the Congo region—as large as the United States—is opened up as far as possible to the civilising influences of commerce. Though himself a Roman Catholic, he is friendly to Protestant Missions, and highly venerates the memory of Livingstone. The future of the enterprise will of course depend greatly on the agents employed, and it was mentioned as a subject for earnest prayer to God that men of good character and wisdom might be deputed by the king to engage in a work that must largely affect the future history of the African continent. We sincerely trust that no international jealousies or commercial avarice may be allowed to mar the fair prospect.

In the course of his address Mr. Guinness told of the gift of the Henry Reed steamer by Mrs. Reed, as a memorial of her late revered husband. This craft will be sent out very shortly in charge of Mr. Billington and others, and is destined for the broad waters of the Upper Congo, above Stanley Pool. It is expected that considerable difficulty will be experienced in the transport of the vessel inland to her destination, but every possible precaution will be made, and the result left in the hands of God, with the confident hope that ere long the Henry Reed will be plowing her way through these Central African waters, bearing with her the messengers and the messages of the Cross.

After an account from Mr. Richards of some of his missionary experiences on the Congo and of native superstitions, the meeting was addressed by Rev. A. McAulay. In very suitable and touching terms he expressed the gratitude felt by all friends of African Missions, and especially of the Livingstone Inland Mission, for the generous gift of Mrs. Reed. As one who knew well the late Mr. Reed, he showed how such a gift was in deepest consonance with the life and character of that sainted man of God.

NOTES FROM BROOKLYN.

A HEARTY reception was given to Messrs. J. Hind Smith and M. H. Hodder at the hall of the Brooklyn Association, on May 28. The former reported that the Milwaukee Convention was a conspicuous illustration of consecration, concentration, and courage of conviction. He would ever put the spiritual interests above the social and secular, and make Y.M.C.A. to mean "Your Master Christ Alone." Mr. Hodder spoke in a similar strain on the blessedness of working for God.

Dr. Cuyler told of his acquaintance with Mrs. Smith in her girlhood, and of her fruitful life for Christ. He alluded to the new "Exeter Hall" of Brooklyn, to be built, as a nobler bridge than that superb, aerial avenue just finished; for it will, with God's blessing, be a pathway from this city to the New Jerusalem above for multitudes of young men. It is believed that no American city, even New York, has so many young men as Brooklyn. Its population is near 700,000, and a great many thousands who do business in the metropolis reside here.

The tent-work of the Association, beginning with June, is carried on vigorously through the summer. The new Y.M.C.A. building will be an elegant and substantial edifice.

Mr. Hind Smith expects to return home by the close of June, and Mr. Hodder a month later.

E. P. Thwing.

MR. AITKEN AT PENGE.

A MISSION extending from May 20 to June 1 was held in the parish of St. John the Evangelist, under the auspices of Rev. W. Hay Aitken, assisted by Rev. James Stephens and Mrs. Crouch. It is not too much to say that the services held by these devoted servants of God have been "times of refreshing" to a large number of God's people in the parish. Many and many a Christian has experienced the "more abundant life" which has been fully and clearly pointed out to them as their heritage and birthright.

It is true that the Gospel of God's grace has been set forth here for upwards of a quarter of a century by the present vicar, Rev. D. McAnally, and that many under his ministry have received large blessing in connection with it; but the new voices, and the new setting of the same precious jewels, have been, according to his own testimony, greatly owned and blessed to God's people. The awakening appeals also of the Mission preacher, who has so faithfully and forcibly declared the whole counsel of God, have deeply stirred the hearts of the unconverted, and it is hoped that many will be added to the Lord. It is impossible, indeed, to conceive any more faithful preaching than that of Mr. Aitken, who, while he fully declares the exceeding great love of God in Jesus Christ, does not hesitate to point out, in the awful language of Holy Scripture, the terrible doom of the wicked.

Mr. Stephens's services also have been much appreciated by the young and their teachers, as well as by French domestic servants; and Mrs. Crouch's addresses to "Women of all Classes" have been greatly owned of God. The testimony, indeed, of all who have attended any of the services is, that God has been with them of a truth.

MONMOUTHSHIRE.—W. J. Catlin, who has just returned from South Wales, tells us of a young workman, Thomas M. Wintle, a devoted worker for Christ, carrying on a good and successful Mission at Pontymoile near Pontypool.

NINE ELMS PRISON MISSION.

THE annual meeting of the Prison Mission was lately held in Nine-elms Hall—Sir John Kennaway, M.P., presiding. Mr. Ellerton, Jun., read the report, which stated that at the prison gate every morning there was a gathering averaging twenty. In the Nine-elms Laundry there were usually forty-six women at work. The Laundry had given the means of earning bread honestly on 12,924 days to 572 women. These women are not residing in any institution, but lodge in the neighbourhood, and are as much as possible prevented from associating with each other. Every woman in the laundry is helped by prayer and the reading of the Holy Scripture. She is given two meals and one shilling in cash for her day's work.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said that when the prisoner had suffered his punishment it was a great thing to find how such societies as this could work with such happy results. Sir Edmund Du Cane could state that there was a great difference in the extent and nature of the criminal classes. This was partly owing to the improved management of prisons, for which he might take much credit, but it was greatly the result of the labour of love amongst criminals carried on by the Prison Mission and kindred societies.

The meeting was subsequently addressed by Mr. R. Cust, J.P., Mr. J. C. Sherrard, Revs. W. H. Duke, A. Styleman Herring, and J. G. Tipper.

MISS HERDMAN.—An eight days' Mission has been held in Gosport and the surrounding Forts by Miss Herdman. The services have been marvellously owned of God to the conversion of souls, and many have reason to praise the Lord for turning them from darkness to light. Miss Herdman has also received great encouragement at Aldershot, where some striking conversions took place.

BLOOMSBURY.—During the past week a series of interesting Gospel Temperance Meetings have been held in Bloomsbury Chapel, their interest and importance increasing as the time went on. The meetings throughout were characterised by great spiritual power, and many were the new resolves and renewals of consecration entered upon at every meeting; 428 pledges were taken, and a much larger number of blue ribbons donned.

CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE SOCIETY.—The Examiners have just reported the results of the recent examinations. Besides the prizes, thirty-six first and thirty-second-class certificates were given. The number of candidates in the elementary grade was fewer than usual, but the average attainments in all classes were higher. Information respecting examinations may be obtained at the Society's Office, 13, Buckingham-street, Strand, London, W.C.

THE BOYS' HOME, SOUTHWARK.—A friend ("Cantab"), who has long been interested in the work, offers £10 to Mr. Fegan's Homes if four similar amounts are contributed by the end of June, and a second donation of £10 if four further contributions of like amount are given within the time named. Gifts to meet these kind offers should be specified "In response to Cantab," and may be sent to Mr. Fegan, 95, Southwark-street, S.E.

A MISSIONARY KETCH.—Mr. Cook, of Gosport, writes: "Our missionary crew has been at work among the English and French at Havre. The French people have gladly hailed our visit again to that country. Will the readers of The Christian pray for much blessing on the preaching of the Gospel and distribution of Bibles and tracts. Any true, earnest brother speaking the French language fluently would find work with us during July and August. Address until June 30, H. Cook, English Mission Ketch, Commercial Dock, Havre."

MISS MACPHERSON'S FORTIETH BAND.—Mr. W. J. Orsman, of the Golden-lane Mission, writes: "On the 6th inst. I saw our beloved sister, Miss Macpherson, and her party of fifty little waifs and strays, start on their journey to Canada. The arrangements were admirable, and by the kindness of the Euston station-master, the farewell gathering for prayer was held in a large saloon carriage. The children were in high glee, and exceedingly well-behaved. This is, I believe, the fortieth band Miss Macpherson has been the means of reclaiming from the East-end wastes, and placing in the homes of kind Canadian friends. She ought to be well sustained in her grand work for the Lord."

YOUNG WOMEN IN THE WEST-END.

THE annual meeting of the Central Branch of the Young Women's Christian Association was held on the 6th inst., at 17, Old Cavendish-street, W. A goodly number of Christian ladies and a few gentlemen attended. Rev. SHOLTO DOUGLAS presided, and spoke of the need of such institutions as the Y.W.C.A., and of the practical results attained by the self-denying efforts of those ladies who had given themselves to the work.

Mr. CUST read the report, from which we extract the following:—

"We have now over 600 names enrolled on the books. Many hundreds also pass through, without joining the Association. The Bible-classes are always the largest, the average attendance on week nights being from 120 to 130, and on Sundays from 80 to 90. But on special occasions, when a special Gospel address is given, the room is full to overflowing, and many have to sit outside, as our class-room will not hold more than 200."

"One writes, 'Many of my happiest hours while in London have been spent at Old Cavendish-street. Many a time have I been strengthened and refreshed by the loving message spoken at the Bible-class, when cast down and worried by the trials of business, and my own repeated failures, and have afterwards gone home rejoicing. I always looked forward to Thursday evenings as one bright spot in a weary week.' Another sent 10s. as a thank-offering for the benefits received. These, with many other incidents that we could give, prove more than anything that our work is not in vain. We know that hundreds have received blessing, and that many careless ones who have been brought to Christ might, but for the influence used with God's blessing at the Institute, still be indifferent to that which concerns their eternal welfare."

In connection with the Institute there are a "working-party" on behalf of destitute children, a "penny bank" to encourage thrift, a "benefit society" in case of sickness, and a "flower mission." The young women are thus helped to help themselves.

Rev. J. A. JACOB, as one who had considerable knowledge of the class which such institutions befriended, spoke of the great need of ladies doing everything in their power to get young women to attend. Here was a home for them where they could meet and find every encouragement for good, and where they were led to a definite faith in Christ. He exhorted ladies to decide also upon some definite way of helping the Institution.

Dr. GILBART-SMITH said that many ladies might open their drawing-rooms and invite a party of twenty or thirty to spend the evening in the winter at a trifling expense, and accompanied by an immense deal of pleasure to the young women. They might also have garden-parties during the summer, and thus show their love to Christ and their appreciation of the services these girls rendered in supplying them over the counter. Miss Ely would be glad to make all the arrangements required, and the opportunity of leading them to Christ might be considerably increased.

RESCUE WORK.—All who are interested in this sorrowful but sorely needed work should read the touching narrative and statement about "Little Florence and her Mother," in this month's issue of Woman's Work (4d. S. W. Partridge & Co).

WEXFORD.—A Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance Union has been formed in this place, the chief town of the Irish county that gave birth to Mr. F. Murphy, the founder of the movement. A friend writes that the Union has already enrolled many members, and is doing good work.

LAUNDRY WORK.—A conference was held lately held in St. Stephen's Hall to discuss Temperance work in laundries. Mr. Helby stated that the Women's Union had produced a good effect, not only in dispensing with the usual beer, but in the establishment of a bible-class and a clothing club. Mr. T. A. Denny and others spoke in favour of something being done, not only to diminish the evils by which laundry-women are surrounded, but, if possible, to place coffee taverns in the laundry districts.

PLYMOUTH "BLISSFUL BROTHERS."

TO the doubter who always brings spiritual work to the touchstone of "results" before he will accept it as at all genuine, we would point to two "outward and visible signs" of the durability and usefulness of the labours in this country of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. These are two large and flourishing clubs or associations, formed at the time of our friends' visit, the one at Glasgow and the other at Plymouth. The Mizpah Band, of the former city, is already well known to most of our readers. It is an organisation, for mutual encouragement and support as well as for Christian aggression, of several hundred reclaimed inebriates.

But with the society known as the "Blissful Brothers" of Plymouth, the Christian public is not so familiar. A few words, therefore, regarding its origin and history may not be unacceptable. Following the Mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in Plymouth, Mr. E. W. Bliss continued the work they had begun. One of the steps he took to consolidate and perpetuate that work was to hold a meeting of the men favourably impressed at the evangelistic meetings; some sixty or seventy were gathered together, for the most part men who in times past had been leading very evil lives. Many of them had been great drunkards, swearers, and sceptics; but their steps having been once guided into the new and better way, they were anxious to continue walking in it, and to wholly renounce the errors and wickednesses of the past.

In order to band these men together it was arranged that there should be weekly meetings; and the "young converts"—most of whom were "young" only as regards the new life—out of grateful appreciation and regard towards Mr. Bliss, named the association after him. Hence a title that otherwise might possibly seem to smack of affectation and insincerity. Since then the Society has gone on increasing, till there are now 215 members; and as one of them said the other day, "God only knows where it will end."

A subscription of a penny per week is paid (this amount, small as it is, is remitted in case the poverty of the member makes him ill able to afford it); and there is a weekly gathering. Should a "brother" miss two of such meetings, it is the duty of the Visiting Committee, consisting of six members, to depute one of the number to go and see him, with the object of administering spiritual consolation in case of sickness, or in order to try and win him back should the brother have unfortunately fallen.

But the efforts of the society do not end here. The "Blissful Brothers" are doing yeoman service in the cause of the Master. Now and again certain of them visit the villages and country towns of the neighbourhood, and there hold Gospel Temperance meetings. As may be supposed, the Brothers are not educated men. One of them said last week that he had never had a day's schooling. But life-stories told with the earnestness of truth and soul-conviction have the best influence on hearers, perhaps as uncouth and uncultivated as the speakers themselves. Moreover, the altered appearance and reformed mode of life of the Brothers cannot but have the best effect on persons who mayhap at one time have been their companions in sin and degradation. One of the Brothers is a "navvy," who has been on the verge of suicide through his drinking habits; another has attended various fairs in the locality in the capacity of "clown," and who, even now, such is the force of habit, dates his conversion as having taken place about the time of Tavistock Fair.

This brief narrative calls for but two remarks. It shows the value of what Mr. Moody so often insisted upon, viz., the gathering in and garnering of the grain after he and Mr. Sankey had moved elsewhere. Secondly, the work now being done by the Blissful Brothers is a proof of the importance of personal testimony. Many of the men forming this society might, but for the trouble taken to associate them together and encourage and help them, have fallen back into former evil ways, hardening others by their bad example and sad downfall. Instead of that, however, they are helping to spread the light and the blessings they themselves enjoy, helping on in their humble way the coming of that glorious kingdom so devoutly wished and so long prayed for by all true Christian men and women.

THE "GOSPEL COMPASS."

THIS ingenious and deservedly popular Gospel broadsheet (Partridge & Co.), designed by Mr. W. C. Miles, and commended by us when it was published two years ago, continues to be a medium of great blessing amongst the sailors. We understand the sixth edition (32nd thousand) is now in course of publication. The Thames Church Mission, by whom it has been most beneficially distributed on the river and amongst the North Sea fishermen, speak of it as having "been used to the conversion of many seamen." The following, taken from the report of the Thames Church Mission, strikingly illustrates the usefulness of the "Gospel Compass" in saving life as well as precious souls:—

"The captain of the —— some time since bought a 'Gospel Compass.' He said that the 'Compass' had been blessed to him; it was fit to steer by for both worlds. 'I carried several of them to Guernsey for my friends,' he said. 'I gave one to a very wicked man who had worked on the quay for years. On my last voyage to Guernsey I was delighted to find this bad man quite altered. He told me that it was the reading of the 'Gospel Compass' that did it. 'No more swearing now, captain; my life is an altered one.' The captain also told how the 'Compass' helped him in a gale the other day. 'I was in a heavy gale,' he said, 'and could scarcely tell what to do, when I saw the lightship hoist signals of distress, but I could not tell their meaning. I ran below, looked at the 'Gospel Compass,' which told me at once. I ran my vessel, and made it known, so that the crew was saved.'"

WOMAN'S PRAYER UNION FOR CHINA.

A MEETING in connection with this Union was held in the ladies' waiting-room of the Conference Hall, Mildmay on Thursday, May 24, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor taking the chair.

The Secretary reported that the Union now numbered 316 members, banded together to pray daily for their poor sisters in China, and to seek personal guidance as to how they may help them. Fifty-six new members have joined during the year. Twelve members of the Union have been led to devote their lives to missionary work, and were now in China. Reference was made to the appeal for 1500 more missionaries for China, so that the Gospel may be preached to this generation, and prayer urged that God-called men and women might respond to it. Prayer was also asked for the health of missionaries during the trying summer months.

Mr. HUDSON TAYLOR dwelt on the wide openings and the need of woman's work in China, and mentioned instances of its usefulness and success.

The objects of the Union may be stated. They are—(1) To remember the women of China, and those working among them, in prayer every day; (2) to seek to interest others in the spiritual condition of the women of China; (3) to seek special guidance as to the way each may personally help as well as pray for the women of China. Cards of membership of the Union can be had on application to Miss E. Boyd, 5, Aldridge-road-villas, London, W. We hope many of our lady readers will join it, and thus be led to take a deeper personal interest in China and its teeming millions.

CHOWBENT, NEAR MANCHESTER.—Our unwearied friends, Mr. and Mrs. Rawlinson, have been carrying on for years, almost single-handed, a very useful and self-denying work among the poor. The expense as well as the labour has fallen largely upon themselves. We hope this mention will secure co-operation now when it is specially needed.

Letters to the Editor.

LETTER TO SCHOOL BOYS.

My dear Sir,—Your very kind reference to my Annual Letter to Boys has brought me so many letters from parents and others throughout the kingdom, and also from the Continent, that I am obliged to ask you to allow me to inform them that I will gladly send a copy to any young gentleman whose name and address they may send to me, but I cannot forward to adults copies for their own use. May I further add that I do not sell them, and that all are sent (prepaid) direct to the boys by myself.

It is very satisfactory to me, a regular reader of The Christian for many years, to find that it is so largely circulated. I think you, my dear Sir, should feel greatly encouraged.—Yours sincerely,

John Shrimpton.

SYRIAN COLONISATION FUND.

Sir,—We learn that it is reported that the object of this society has been changed. This is not the case. Our object is that for which the society was first founded: "Relief to persecuted and distressed Jews, mainly by colonisation in Syria, in token of Christian sympathy."

The field of proposed operations is, as it ever was, the province of "Syria," which is almost co-terminous with the Land of Promise, and includes North Syria, Lebanon, Galilee, Samaria, Judea, Gilead, &c. While acceding to the request made by those Jews who are prevented by Turkish officials from now entering Syria to settle them in Cyprus, we intend to go on as quickly as possible with our original and main work.

We guarantee £52 for support this year of each family in Cyprus, and the British Government take them under their protection, and will allot to them suitable land. We ask immediate help in providing this sum for their settlement in the island.

That primary duty fulfilled, we intend to continue the work in the Land of Promise, at Jerusalem, and elsewhere, of helping suffering Jews to settle in honest industry. Violent persecution of Jews by Christians has begun again in Russia. We must earnestly appeal for help in giving prompt relief. We are supporting nearly two hundred souls in Syria and in Cyprus.

(Signed) Shaftesbury, President.
E. A. Finn, Secretary.

Notices of Books, &c.

Stories for our Girls, and their Parents. By the Hon. Lady Grey. Hatchards. Suitable for reading at sewing classes, mothers' meetings, &c., as well as for general circulation. The lessons inculcated are by no means commonplace or tame, nor is the method and style of the stories by which they are illustrated, heavy or monotonous. The book affords interest and instruction for all who may read its attractive pages.

From Cana to Bethany; or, Gleanings from our Lord's Life on Earth. By Rev. Frederic Whitfield, of Hastings. Nisbet & Co. These are selections from former works now out of print, and we feel sure their reproduction will be a gratification to many. The chapters are on varied themes, but all are full of rich Gospel truth, and redolent with the fragrance of the name of Jesus. Searching and pointed in its style, spiritual and evangelical in its tone, the book is sure of being useful to both saint and sinner.

The Postman, edited by our Evangelist brother Mr. W. Y. Fullerton (1d. Passmore & Alabaster), is a capital pennyworth of "clear, crisp, and concise" writing; the contents are fresh and varied, and admirably arranged. We are almost inclined to say amen to the Editor's boast that there is something in it for everybody; if, as he further says, "it is sold everywhere," our commendation is scarcely needed. But is this not a patent exaggeration? If so, are exaggerations permissible in the conduct of religious journals?

Does Science Aid Faith in Regard to Creation? By Bishop Cotterill. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. The first of a series of volumes on the chief doctrines of Christianity, to be published at intervals by this enterprising firm, and to be called "The Theological Library." The public are promised that the volumes issued shall be "condensed in expression, biblical in doctrine, Catholic in spirit, and by competent writers." All these conditions are admirably fulfilled in the volume before us. It is divided into two parts, the first treating of the Christian Faith on the subject of Creation, the second on Its Scientific Aspects. The book is of a class much needed, and the publishers have been fortunate in securing for their first essay the services of so valiant a defender of the faith as Bishop Cotterill proves himself to be. We accept this really superior treatise with much grateful appreciation of its merit, and shall look forward with eagerness and expectation to the volumes, from other pens, on other themes, by which it is to be followed.

Principles of Health in Childhood, Manhood, and Old Age. By Louis King. Hamilton, Adams & Co. Full of practical suggestions, as well as physiological facts, such as all wise men and women will be glad to be made acquainted with and to act upon. Those who are about to build, and those who have the care of households, should possess themselves of this very valuable guide at once. It may save them much future anxiety, trouble, and expense. Attention to its rules will go far to make its readers independent of doctors, and to make them free from the ravages of disease.

Forthcoming Meetings.

The Evangelisation Society will send Evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, and Wales on due notice. Apply, Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

"THEY BECKONED TO THEIR PARTNERS."

Let me recall the incident, and suggest an application:—

On the Lake of Gennesaret were two ships, but the fishermen were ashore "mending their nets."

Jesus entered Simon's boat, and, launching out into the deep, He said—

"Let down your nets for a draught."

When they had done this, they enclosed a great multitude of fishes;

And their net brake.

Then it was they "beckoned to their partners" for aid, by whose means the mighty catch Divinely given was brought to shore.

In the deep sea of this awful City-Life, we, too, hearing His voice,

Have let down the nets of our Homes.

A great multitude (Twelve Hundred and Eighty and Three) have been enclosed.

The nets show present signs of a heavy strain, unaided they may break.

I beckon herewith to you, my "partners" of many years' standing, co-workers, supporters, and helpers all, "Come to our aid. The Master is with us, in the very ship. By His help the great multitude has been caught. But your help is required to bring them all to shore."

Can any work be more needful or more blessed than that of rescuing Orphan or Destitute Children from the perils that await them if neglected by the Church?

Certainly no undertaking has produced more permanent and blessed results.

Again, therefore, I earnestly invite your aid in His name, who said—

"Launch out and let down your nets for a draught."

Yours by His continued grace, a fisher among The Children,

T. J. BARNARDO.

NOTE.—In response to the urgent need now so sorely felt, Mr. BARLOW KENNETT offers £500 if other £4,500 can be obtained. At our recent Annual Meeting, gifts towards this sum were promised or given by the EARL CAIRNS, the EARL OF ABERDEEN, LORD POLWARTH, Messrs. S. MORLEY, M.P., R. CORY, WM. PALMER, S. G. SHEPPARD, WM. FOWLER, M.P., S. BRINTON, M.P., LIVINGSTONE LEARMOUTH, QUINTIN HOGG, R. C. MORGAN, R. PHIPPS, and many others, amounting in the aggregate to £2,100, but most of these are conditional upon receiving the whole sum. This leaves still £2,400 to be collected, so that a very urgent necessity now exists for loving, generous aid from all, in order to secure for the "Homes" the benefactions offered.

The smallest offering to the Lord in His service among these Little Ones, will be gratefully acknowledged by WM. FOWLER, Esq., M.P., or the above signed.

THE NUMBER "SEVEN" IN SCRIPTURE.

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, C.B.,
Author of "Shadow and Substance," "Forgiveness, Life, and Glory."

"I do not presume to offer an opinion as to the purpose with which the number seven has been so prominently interwoven with the Scriptures. That there is some purpose, however, I can hardly doubt; for the use of the number is far more than merely mechanical or artificial. It runs through the whole of the Bible, commencing with the institution of the seventh day—or Sabbath—in Eden, and concluding with the various series of "sevens" in the Apocalypse."—Extract from Introduction.

The Things that God Uses.

AN ADDRESS TO CHRISTIANS.
By D. L. MOODY.

"People say they have no strength; but the trouble is that they have too much. It is when we become as nothing, and are emptied of our own strength, that God can take us up and make use of us. He will do the work, and He shall have the glory."—Extract.

HYMNS AND SONGS

SPECIALLY SUITABLE FOR

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MEETINGS.

A Series of 4 two-page Leaflets, each containing a collection of stirring Pieces, admirably adapted for use at "Gospel Temperance" and other Meetings. Price 9d. per 100, or 7s. 6d. per 1000.

CONTENTS OF NO. 1.

Where is my wandering boy to-night?
One there is who loves thee
The mistakes of my life have been many
Long in darkness we have waited
Are you coming home, ye wanderers?
A ruler once came to Jesus by night
Fierce and wild the storm is raging
Why do you wait, dear brother?
Say, where is thy refuge, my brother?
Why perish with cold and with hunger?
From the riven Rock there floweth

CONTENTS OF No. 2.

What can wash away my stain?
Come, thou weary! Jesus calls thee
Should the death-angel knock at your chamber
The Gospel bells are ringing
Have you any room for Jesus?
Oh come, sinner, come! 'tis mercy's call
Make room for Jesus! room, sad heart!
Oh, do not let the Word depart
Brightly beams our Father's mercy
O Christ, in Thee my soul hath found
Light in the darkness, sailor!

CONTENTS OF No. 3.

When my final farewell to the world I have said
Standing by a purpose true
When the storms of life are raging
I have read of a beautiful city
Ring the bells of heaven! there is joy to day
I have heard of a land far away
"Land ahead!" its fruits are waving
Oh, tender and sweet was the Master' voice
'Tis the promise of God full salvation to give
When storms around are sweeping

CONTENTS OF No. 4.

Of course you know that to and fro, throughout our glorious land
She only touched the hem of His garment
Our Master has taken His journey
Tempted and tried
Father, don't you hear the angels
The prize is set before us
There is a Fountain filled with blood
Would you lose your load of sin?
Yield not to temptation, for yielding is sin

"Choice Sayings."

BEING NOTES OF EXPOSITION OF THE SCRIPTURES.
REVISED BY ROBERT C. CHAPMAN.

Happiness, Joy, Comfort & Peace.

Begin every day with the Word of God and prayer, if you would enjoy settled blessedness. It is in the Word of God that the fulness of Christ is revealed, as the rich portion of every one who trusts in the Blood of Christ. (Page 157).

Salvation, Justification, Pardon.

"How can I be pardoned?" says the poor self-condemned sinner. "How can I not pardon?" says God. The sinner looks at his sins; but God looks at his Son's atoning blood. Sinner, do thou likewise. (Page 136.)

Portsmouth and Gosport Seamen's Mission.

The "Sailors' Resort" at Gosport, held under a lease for ten years, has now been recently purchased at a low sum of £200 only (This has been paid.) It stands on ground, depth 150 feet by 26 feet wide. Owing to its being very old, it has had to be pulled down, and is now being rebuilt under my own architecture, and will prove a very neat building, and further prove a boon indeed to our Mission in general. It is close to the sea, near our boats, vessels, &c. The whole cost is not to exceed £500. £160 has already come in. We only proceed as the money is given. We hope to have it finished by September next, when (God willing) we shall re-open for the benefit of our Seamen, Fishermen, and Watermen.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Rescue Work among Discharged Prisoners.

21,669 Discharged Prisoners have accepted our invitation to Breakfast at the Prison Gates at Coldbath Fields and Holloway since we first commenced this Rescue Work four years and a half ago, and we have now in contemplation the erection of another Iron Room on ground kindly granted by the Home Office Authorities, just outside Wandsworth Gaol, in which we purpose carrying on a Rescue Work among these fallen men of a precisely similar kind.

The extra outlay for the erection of the building, with the working expenses, will be very considerable. Who among the Readers of "The Christian" will help us in this Mission of Mercy?

Established 1822, for the purpose of employing humble Christian men, well versed in the Scriptures, to visit from house to house throughout the country, and visit all denominations. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required. The work is carried on in a spirit of love.

Subscriptions or Donations will be thankfully received by the Secretary, Capt. KEARNEY WHITE, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin; or at 9, Paternoster-row, London.

The Earl of Shaftesbury says in his last letter to the Secretary:—Many thanks for your kind letter, and many thanks to Almighty God for the good intelligence you give me about your Scripture Readers in Ireland. I wish I could more effectively assist you. Your letter is the best thing that I have seen or heard from Ireland.

I enclose my donation, and only wish it was more.—Yours, SHAFTESBURY.

N.B.—Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

URGENT APPEAL.—The Committee of the Ladies' Samaritan Society of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic 25, Queen's-square, Bloomsbury, earnestly appeal for contributions in aid of the poorer patients and their families. The work of the Society is not in any way curtailed by the rebuilding of the Hospital, but is still carried on in the new wing, and the Committee will most thankfully acknowledge the smallest gifts in money or clothing. Old coats and trousers are much needed.

For Delicate or Backward Youths

must always be far preferable to ordinary school life, where such boys are usually left to the care and tuition of inexperienced and often uninterested Assistant Masters, and to the rough treatment of harder Schoolmates.

MR. WILLIAM PENN

devotes his personal attention, care, and tuition to such Pupils, of whom he takes only a few, as he desires to preserve the strictly family tone of his home, wherein his Pupils are received as members of, and sharers in, the family life. In the fear and love of God it is sought to train this family, developing all kindly and gentle feeling, encouraging observation and a love of Nature. It is Mr. Penn's conviction that is of more value than an extensively stored memory, and the mere acquisition of knowledge apart from some perception of its significance as a factor in human life and interests is not encouraged. The House is admirably situated on the eastern brow of the northern heights of London, open on all sides and commanding an extensive and delightful view of over twenty miles of River, Lake, Hamlet, and the Forest of Epping, into which it is easy to penetrate for pleasant rambles, &c. Abundant opportunity for close by. A Carpenter's Shop is fitted up on the Premises, and Pupils are taught Carpentry and Joinery by a competent Tutor. Drawing, Painting, and Shorthand are included in the curriculum. Full particulars on application with References to parents of Pupils.

GARRATTONIAN PHILOSOPHY: WHAT IS IT?

"He is not the discoverer who first utters a truth, but he who says it again and again until he compels mankind to hear him!" So said Sydney Smith.

We emphatically deny, what is occasionally so lightly stated, that it is possible to gather authentic and genuine testimony to any and every invention. If a patient makes a plain statement, attests it with a respectable and honoured name, and quotes the corroboration of similar benefit derived by several of his nearest friends, it affords an argument on the side of truth which no amount of sophistry can deprive of genuineness; and since we have received, and continue to receive, innumerable testimonies of this character, we feel no anxiety about the result of a communication with any of those whose statements we publish, as our correspondents will, we are assured, as gladly reply as they have spontaneously communicated their experience to us. In almost every instance a direct communication from the writers themselves would reveal not only a certainty of speedy and beneficial results being derived from Odo-Magnetic influence, but that the permanent character of the change experienced adds to the confidence of such patients in the power of Magnetism to produce such radical, constitutional, and permanent results.

It is impossible for us to put the experience of our patients more clearly than they themselves have done from time to time. What could be plainer than the statement of the Rev. R. Burrell, concerning his friend, in "Uniform Efficacy," "Apparently paralysed for life," "Now perfectly cured, away in a tropical climate, enduring the heat better than his brother officers;" or of Rev. Henry Watts, Titchborne Parsonage, also in "Uniform Efficacy," "The lady who was apparently doomed to be bedridden through paralysis, being sentenced to that fate for the rest of her life by the prophecies of Allopathists, was enabled after a reasonable trial of your Magnetic treatment to get down-stairs again and go out in a Bath chair."—See also other cases of paralysis.

If the power of the remedy is such as to bring health and activity to lifeless limbs, what may we not hope from its use in cases where no part of the nervous or muscular tissue is diseased, but, while perfect in all its parts, lacks only such a stimulus to nervous energy as Odo-Magnetic influence has proved itself to be?

This unquestionable testimony in favour of Magnetic treatment has two special and significant features worthy of notice which are not perhaps to be found in connection with any other remedy. First, that we are permitted to give the full names and addresses of our patients. Second, that they not only give their own experience, but are able to state that friends (in some instances numerous) have realised the benefit they themselves sought from Curative Magnetism.

In closing these brief papers, we trust that the reader will have arrived at the only logical conclusions possible, viz.:—

That disease is an unit, or element of disturbance, an irregularity or defect in the system, in whatever form it may manifest itself, or by whatever name it may be called.

That in most instances its approach is very insidious and imperceptible, only revealing its presence when it has a fixed hold on the system or some part of it.

That an unbalanced or abnormal condition of the organism precedes all chronic affections, as well as those of a temporary and acute character.

That the pathological classification of disease is often perplexing to the medical practitioner, consequently a difficulty of treatment arises in each case. And, finally,

That, except by such means as effectually correct the disturbance, by affecting the whole organism simultaneously, thus restoring the equilibrium or true balance of the vital forces, we are only dealing with the symptoms of disease and not the cause.

Mr. Garratt will always be happy to confer with any scientific or medical gentlemen, either personally or by letter, upon any phase of the subject, or any case for treatment, and will send a private list of names as referees to any address.—Mr. B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

HOMES OF HOPE,

4, 5, & 6, Regent Square, Gray's Inn Road, London, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of Mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to associate with a lower class.

The applications for admission are painfully urgent.

THE STUDY OF PROPHECY.

THE contents of the Bible may be ranged under three leading divisions: doctrine, history, prophecy. In order of importance they may, perhaps, be fairly so placed, the positive teaching of the Word, the ipse dixit of the Holy Spirit, as to revealed truth, being in the forefront, the historical facts, upon which so many doctrines are based, coming next, and the great prophecies, fulfilled and unfulfilled, bringing up the rear. The three, combined, form a mighty force of truth against which the hosts of error vainly strive. They are a threefold cord, which cannot be broken. They are so related, one to the other, that neither can be overlooked without the other suffering from the neglect, each one contributing to the other a quota of sacred evidence and inspired support.

Of the three, prophecy occupies by far the largest place. In the Old Testament, sixteen books are devoted to prophetical truth, while the remaining books are largely occupied with prophetic statement; specially in the Pentateuch and the Psalms. In the New Testament, very much of our Lord's teaching, and not a little of that found in the Epistles, abounds with predictions concerning the future, while the sacred canon closes with that wonderful prophecy known as "The Revelation of Jesus Christ," in which all that has gone before is so gathered up and interwoven as to show that the Divine Spirit intended it to refer us back to that "sure word of prophecy" which pervades the Scriptures throughout.

It is impossible to study the Bible with any degree of fairness and breadth of thought without studying prophecy; yet we venture to say, among Bible readers, no subject is so generally neglected; in many cases it is even on principle avoided. The consequence is, that a large portion of the inspired volume to many minds becomes barren and unfruitful, not because the soil is not equally as rich and fertile as other parts may be, but because it is unworked and passed by. Or if ever visited, then it is only to pluck at random some stray flower of sacred truth which grows upon the surface, rather than to search and delve for the precious ore with which its depths abound.

Yet the study of prophecy is not only commended but commanded by the inspired writers. Special promises are attached to its careful consideration, while its bearing upon the life and character of the true believer is of the highest practical importance. It tends to arm his faith with weapons of keenest edge in the midst of assaults to which that faith is exposed; and by forewarning him of coming events, to preserve him from the evil and to prepare him for the return of his Lord. The enemy of souls labours hard to deter Christians from studying prophecy, or, if they enter upon it, to mislead them, for well does he know that in proportion as they are scripturally versed in its themes will they be awake to the claims of Christ, and on their guard against his own devices.

Why, then, do so many neglect it? Various answers to this question are sometimes given. Among them are these: The faults and follies into which many of its students have fallen; the difficulties which the study involves; lack of time and opportunity to enter upon it; and last, but not least in its bearing upon the matter, lack of interest and concern as to what the future may have in store, further than the one essential point of eternal life beyond the grave. As to the first of these, it must be confessed that some of the advocates of prophetic truth have been its worst enemies; by their attempts to be wise above what is written, and by the wild and absurd hypotheses they have first raised, and then exaggerated into assumed facts, they have made sober, thoughtful readers of the Word jealous of the subject altogether. Attempting to fix dates, solve mysteries, and arrange details, they have exposed themselves, and what is of far more consequence, the prophetic Word itself, to contempt and neglect. In this, as in many other directions, Christ has been "wounded in the house of his friends."

And yet here, as in other spheres, human mistake and error of judgment should surely be regarded as beacons of warning, adding to the safety of the way, rather than as barriers to entering the path in which they may be found. The same objection might be urged against the study of doctrine, systems of theology abounding in traces of human error, and being often overlaid with the mere traditions of men. Keeping to the plain letter of the Word, and depending solely on the guidance of the Holy Spirit, will save us from mistaking these will-o'-the-wisps for the prophetic light, and from falling into the mistakes all wise men would alike deprecate.

As to the difficulties which attend the study, they are only such as yield to prayerful inquiry and thought. They are more fancied than real, and arise from want of acquaintance with the wider range of inspired truth, which due regard to prophecy as well as its other themes would afford. The difficulties attach to secret things which belong not unto us, but unto God, rather than to what is revealed in the Word that we are called upon to investigate.

Lack of time and opportunity is doubtless an obstacle to exhaustive study of revelation on the part of many. However much they may desire to be so, all readers cannot be students. But the most busy man, if a child of God, will feel it his duty to give some time to acquaintance with his heavenly Father's will, even though it be a sacrifice in other respects to do so. If such a one, however brief and few his opportunities may be, in the spirit of a true disciple, impartially and with childlike simplicity, seeks to be led into all truth, he shal find that the bright gleams of joy and hope which prophetic light throws across our pilgrim path, illumine his sky and cheer his onward way. Let him therefore use aright his one talent of time, assured that to him who is faithful in that which is least, more shall be given. Where lack of interest and concern accounts for the neglect, surely we are right in urging that to be uninterested in anything God has spoken, or unconcerned about any subject He has unfolded for our benefit, is to dishonour Him, and slight his gracious message: "Every scripture inspired of God is profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness," and seeing that the prophetic Scriptures are undoubtedly inspired of Him, they certainly demand our reverent regard. To neglect them is therefore culpable and inexcusable in his sight.

The very fact that He has occupied so much space with them proves their importance and indicates their value. Only let us apply the same principle of interpretation to unfulfilled prophecy as we necessarily must to that which is plainly fulfilled, and we shall find that while the latter serves to confirm our confidence in the Divine origin of Holy Writ, the study of the former tends to sanctify the heart and consecrate the life, by giving to the present, as read in the light of the future, a solemnity and responsibility, the force of which we cannot resist. Undismayed by the signs of the times, however dark they may become; undaunted by the powers of darkness, however fiercely they may rage; unmoved by the trials of life, however severe they may prove; taught by the prophetic page, we shall look for the appearing of the Lord we love, and waiting for the Son of God from heaven, shall "gird up the loins of our mind, and hope to the end for the grace to be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ." Meanwhile we shall be found actively engaged in his service, we shall "occupy till He come," and all the more diligently and faithfully because through the vigils of the night we hear his voice sounding through the word of truth, and saying, "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give everyone according as his work shall be."

KESWICK CONVENTION.—The usual circular of invitation, issued by Canon Battersby and Mr. R. Wilson, states: We purpose, if the Lord will, to hold another Convention at Keswick, for the promotion of personal and practical holiness, from Monday to Saturday, July 23—28. We cordially invite all who love the Lord Jesus Christ, and desire the fulness of his blessing and the coming of his kingdom, to meet with us at that time, that we may together wait upon God in prayer, learn at his feet the secrets of his grace, and drink more deeply into that Spirit which He has given to those who believe. Our arrangements will be similar to those of past years, only that with a view to the greater comfort of those who come together, and the accommodation of a larger number, we have arranged for the purchase of a new, larger, and better constructed tent. Those who desire accommodation for themselves or friends during the time of the Convention, are invited to communicate with Mr. John Postlethwaite, Eskin-place, Keswick, who has again kindly consented to give his valuable services as Hon. Secretary to the Convention. It is expected that the attendance will be yet larger than in former years. Visitors are requested to be careful in stating the exact amount and kind of accommodation which they will require.

TRAINING THE BLIND AT NORWOOD.

WE lately paid a visit to the Royal Normal College for the Blind at Norwood, which is under the able management of Dr. J. F. Campbell. We only wish we could convey to our readers an adequate impression of the importance and value of what we saw. Its operations are unique, and in order to be duly appreciated and properly understood require to be seen. Starting with the accommodation afforded by one or two small houses, it has grown to be an extensive suite of buildings beautifully situated in grounds covering six acres, laid out and designed with special reference to the comforts and requirements of the scholars and students.

Strange as it may seem to some of us, the beauties of nature, and the external arrangements made for the enjoyment of those who are fortunate enough to be passing through the course of study pursued at this institution, are by no means lost upon them. Though blind, they enter into the surroundings of the place with zest and delight. Some of them cultivate flowers with their own hands, though deprived of power to behold their beauties of form and colour.

Dr. Campbell, himself blind, called our attention to a grove of trees standing at the foot of the lawn, and exclaimed, "I am a great lover of trees, and could not think of having them cut down." The pupils run and jump upon the lawns, or exercise in the gymnasia with a freedom and agility wonderful to see; they wind around the paths, and among the trees and shrubs, with an air of satisfaction which tells how fully they appreciate the privilege. Great attention is paid in this institution to physical development as a means of inspiring confidence and inducing self-reliance.

Dr. Campbell is enthusiastic in his work, and, with a fervid sympathy which his own blindness serves to deepen and maintain at white heat, devotes himself unremittingly to his charge, anticipating every need, and arranging every detail with marvellous tact and skill. His theory is that the blind are as capable of being fitted for usefulness and independence in life as are the seeing. Their perceptive faculties only need to be trained and informed to make them useful and happy members of society, rather than burdensome, and mere objects of pity. The practical truth of his theory, to the development of which he has devoted years of labour, is already fully proved by the fact that 80 or 90 per cent. of those who have gone out from this college are now occupying positions of honourable independence; and, in some cases, they are also providing homes for friends depending upon them.

The pupils are 146 in number, ranging from seven to twelve years of age in the primary, and from nine to twenty-one in the technical schools. As we passed through the rooms in which the scholars and students were busily engaged, we were struck with the brightness and intelligence everywhere displayed. Here was a class battling with the problems of Euclid in a way which would put to shame many a youth whose outer sight is clear and strong. There another class answering questions on the map of England and Wales, an embossed copy of which was in every hand, with a readiness and accuracy which showed how thoroughly they had mastered their task. In another room some twelve or more were busy with lessons in botany, two or three little maidens describing the special qualities and formation of a mulberry leaf with an evident relish of the study, which by the sense of touch they appeared to comprehend as well as though they could see. A set of boys whose faces would have been strangely vacant and sad, but for the sharpening of intellect they were receiving, recited for our benefit "The Miller of the Dee," with an emphasis and sparkling force, such as lighted up their countenances with expression and vivacity. In the Technical Schools we found some learning to manufacture pianofortes, and other instruments, while some were tuning, and others practising music and singing under efficient and careful superintendence.

On every side neatness, order, cleanliness, and cheerfulness prevailed, to a degree which made it a gratification of no ordinary kind to witness the scene. Marks of Dr. Campbell's love for his work, and tender concern for those committed to his care, abound on all hands. He has arranged a playroom for the very small inmates of the College, and hails with delight, only equalled by that of the little ones concerned, any contribution of dolls and toys that kind friends may make to its furniture. Nor are the moral and spiritual wants of the students overlooked. The spirit of religion, faith, and prayer are not lacking in this estimable institution. On Sunday evenings special Mission services, mainly choral, and led by the scholars themselves, are held. The working classes resident in the district are invited to attend, and various evangelical ministers of the neighbourhood give Gospel addresses. Large numbers attend these meetings, and some have thereby been led to frequent places of worship, who before had not done so.

Altogether the work commends itself to us as one pre-eminently worthy of Christian sympathy, and practical support far beyond what it obtains. Cannot our readers help an institution which so thoroughly claims commendation and assistance? A mortgage of £12,000 exists upon the premises and grounds. £2700 is promised towards the extinction of this debt if the remainder is forthcoming this season. Great efforts are being made to accomplish this, and if it is done, £600 per annum will be at once set free for use in the charitable expenditure of the college. Numbers of applications for admission come continually, and have to be denied. Many of those now being housed and trained there, are entirely dependent upon the income derived from subscriptions and donations, Dr. Campbell and his committee being sometimes hard pressed for means to maintain their operations.

While there is ample provision for the comfort and complete education of the pupils, there is no extravagance. There is no endowment on which to rely for aid, and at present but a small subscription list on which to depend. Dr. Campbell's system, and its success, need only be known in order to secure far wider support.

To all our readers we commend this work, bot has to its special appeal and its regular necessities, assured that their gifts and offerings on its behalf will be turned into a channel alike pleasing to God and highly beneficial to man. Any contributions may be sent to the Principal, or we shall be happy to receive and transmit them to the College.

SURREY.—At the first annual meeting of the Dorking Gospel Temperance Union, held lately, it was stated that 1000 pledges had been taken during the year, and several branches formed in the surrounding villages.

A SHEAF FULLY RIPE.—On Wednesday, June 6, at the advanced age of eighty-seven years, Miss Jellard, of Torquay, fell asleep in Jesus. She exercised no small influence for good in Torquay during a residence extending over a period of more than forty years. Numerous Mission and other benevolent agencies will miss an able and active helper.

"MESSRS. CASSELL & CO. (LIMITED)."

IN the history of modern book-making and book-selling no name occupies a more honoured place to-day than that of "Cassell." The bearer of that name, it is true, has for nearly twenty years been gathered to his fathers, but his mantle descended on a couple of gentlemen—Mr. Petter and Mr. Galpin—who have worn it worthily. They have lived to see the goodly plant that took root under the fostering care of their predecessor and partner, develop into a mighty and far-spreading tree. Such works as "Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress," and Dr. Wylie's "History of Protestantism," with their profuse illustrations, would alone give them a title to the gratitude of the Christian public.

The lapse of time has brought with it other changes, and the firm of "Cassell, Petter, Galpin & Co.," has just been merged into that of "Cassell & Co., Limited." Mr. Petter has withdrawn from active service, while Mr. Galpin, for a time at least, assumes the chief direction of the new and largely-extended partnership. That partnership now embraces some 300 of the employés of the late firm, making the establishment, in its reconstructed form, one of the most remarkable and creditable examples of "co-operative production."

This interesting event was celebrated a fortnight ago by a social gathering in Exeter Hall, under the presidency of Mr. W. E. Forster, M.P. Noteworthy speeches were delivered by the Chairman, who, it appears, is also a shareholder, by both Mr. Petter and Mr. Galpin, and by several of their late employés—and now co-partners. The liberal arrangements that have been made for enabling the rank and file of the workers to acquire a share in the concern, do ample credit to the members of the late firm, and is a very welcome illustration of the mutual consideration and good feeling that tend so largely to the well-being of society, and frustrate the growth of class antagonisms.

The publications that issue from the teeming press in Belle Sauvage-yard, especially in the shape of cheap and excellent serials, form a whole library in themselves, until, as some one remarked at a recent meeting, the house has become "a quasi-national institution." All those who desire to see the evil literature of the day displaced by good healthy reading, will bid an earnest God-speed to the operations of the new Company.

BERMONDSEY.—A few young Christians desire help in conducting services in a hall in Bermondsey, on Sunday evenings. Address, Mr. F. A. Lang, 119, Great Dover-street, Southwark, S.E.

LIVERPOOL EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.—This Society continues to make aggressive effort in evangelising the masses of Liverpool and neighbourhood. From a short report, just issued, we read that "tent work claims a prominent place." Many churches and Missions have been helped by the Society, with encouraging results. The Hon. Secretary is Mr. T. A. Leigh, 3, Hackin's Hey, Liverpool.

GLASGOW LITTLE EMIGRANTS.—Mr. and Mrs. Quarrier have left Glasgow with a party of children for Canada. At a meeting held on the 6th instant, Mr. Quarrier stated that all the wants of the children had, by the goodness of the Lord, been met. One gentleman has promised to contribute £1500 for building another home for training children for Canada to take the place of the Homes in the Govan-road. Two more Homes are required. Since sending out 98 children in March, nearly as many had been rescued to fill their places. Mr. Kelly and Miss Bilborough gave some account of those already placed in Canadian homes. There was a great demand for boys, and good prospects before them. Such a work as this done for Christ's sake, the children's sake, and our own country's sake, deserves support. During Mr. Quarrier's absence, Mr. R. H. Huntor carries on the work.

By Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE.

THE TEMPLE CLEANSED.

II.—THE PARABLE OF THE CONFUSION.

THESE money-changers and dove-sellers, these cattle, and sheep, and oxen here, in the wrong place—all these were only the outermost symptom of a mischief that lay much further in. They had thrust out the Gentile proselyte to make room for all these. So this outside confusion with the lower creation grew up from the fact that the man had got wrong with his brother. It always does. Let a man love his neighbour as himself, and all the money that was ever minted will not hurt him. The cattle on a thousand hills may be his, and he may go through as much work and worry as mind or body will bear, but the world will be kept in its right place when he is right with his brother. Avarice, self-indulgence, covetousness, all these are impossible to the man who keeps right with his neighbour.

But this being wrong with his brother, came from another wrong that lay still farther back. It always does. The Jew was wrong with God—then he was wrong with everything, out of joint with the universe—that is the history of all confusions.

Religion had become very much a thing of tradition, an inherited custom. God was not to them the living God, after whom the soul thirsted, and in whom it delighted. They kneeled with lowly tones and confessed their sins, but without any deep contrition. They came with a sacrifice, but without desire or thought of anything further. They heard the benediction spoken, but without any sense of blessing; only a sigh of relief that it was done. That was the source of the confusion. Every age illustrates it. Then is everything wrong when religion comes to be a round of pious phrases without any grip of faith; pious tones without any heart-cleaving to the Lord; prating about sin, but going on with a self-satisfied goodness; saying, Lord, Lord,—but without hallowed communion with Him; without any earnest effort to know his will, without any denying ourselves to please Him.

Religion without a living God—then all this mischief assuredly creeps in. The service may be very grand, very stirring, very emotional, very solemn, all that will help men to cheat themselves more perfectly. Many a man likes to be made to feel that life is a sacred and lofty thing—for an hour; he can the better afford to balance such solemnities by frittering life away in a thousand vanities. A man likes to wipe his eyes at the touching story of somebody else's generosity, his emotion makes him a sharer in the good deed; but that will not stop him from taking his poor neighbour by the throat and demanding his own with usury. Many a worshipper likes to worship awed and entranced amidst solemn appeals or melting music; and yet he can go straight home to be selfish, snappish, mean, to feel that life is a dull, colourless, dispiriting thing, when the music is hushed.

Ah, we all of us know too much about this story of the confusion. It is a good deal easier to grow indignant at it in other people than to remedy it in ourselves. Come, let us ask, How can I find the religion that serves God in everything right through the seven days of the week? How can I go home from God's house to be always true, patient, brave, earnestly serving God in all my dealings and doings? Where is the power to be right, to keep right? the power that turns the prayers into life, and brings us always nearer to the level of our best moments?

Thank God, there is an answer. We will hear it presently.

Then came easily the next step in the story of the confusion. They got wrong with the neighbour.

The living God was gone; then the splendours of the Temple and the costly sacrifices were not consecrated offerings to the Most High. All these sank down into a flattering of Jewish pride, the pompous exhibition of his own importance. As the Jew moved in these courts, and looked at the marble columns and gilded roof and sumptuous walls, there rose up in his soul a swelling sense of his own superiority, and a scorn of outside humanity. When the living God was gone, the Temple and its services became at once the mother and nurse of pharisaism. "Is not this our great Temple that we have builded by the might of our power and for the glory of an Israel." All that should have smitten at self, fed and fattened it. Charity, fair charity herself, is turned into a leper by such conceit, and defiles the gold she gives. Their prayers were not dead prayers only, they bred corruption, and ministered to the man's vanity. And so, of course, came the ever-growing contempt for his Gentile brother. He who was not born a Jew was an offence to their eyes, a vulgar nonconformist to their Jewish faith,—why should they heed him! In people of such course clay, what place could they find in this great Temple. Call these brothers! the Pharisee flung his head in contempt, and lifted the jewelled hand to heaven in pious sorrow. What has he to do with them!

Ah, this confusion, too, at least in its beginnings, we want cured. We can be earnest in prayer, we can read the chapter, we can listen to the word—but always and everywhere to be right to those about us! Always to be brotherly; to have love always throned in the heart; always to have the mastery of the temper; always to be ready to forgive, to help; always to be unselfish; to know when indignation becomes sin, and when the fire that kindles us is a spark of hell. Ah, thank God, we can find this too. Come, my brother, for this a power is provided. Hope, bravely and earnestly, for we shall reach it presently.

Then the parable of the confusion shows how they had got wrong with the worldly substance. Cattle and sheep and tables of the money-changers had got into the wrong places. They were all right in themselves, and needful. Do not find fault with them. God had made them all, and sent them for blessed uses, but they had got across the border line, and now, here they were bleating and bellowing in the Temple of God.

Here, too, is our confusion. These things have got into the heart, and fill it with din and greed and filth. A pitiable thing, surely, for God and his holy angels to look down on—the man whom God made for Himself, as one having dominion, a slave to his cattle and gold! The heart wherein He Himself would come and have his abode, overrun with oxen and sheep! The eternal music of God's love, and the songs of the man's own soul, drowned in the bleating of lambs and the bellowing of calves! He who was made a little lower than the angels, crowned with glory and honour, become a grocery store, a drapery warehouse, a cattle market, a money office! The heart that was to have held God, and whence help and brotherliness were to come forth for all, dried and shrivelled into a mere Judas' leather purse!

For the Young.

NO DRUNKARDS IN HEAVEN.

THOUSANDS of children have attended the Ragged Schools whose parents could well have afforded to pay for the education of their children. But they spent their wages in public-houses and gin-palaces and, alas! very many died the drunkard's death, to face a drunkard's eternity. On one occasion I noticed four little ragged scholars, half starved children, in a Bermondsey ragged school. Feeling very much for their miserable, pale faces, I was about to give them some pence to buy food, but the teacher told me that their father was a very clever tanner, and earned weekly more than £3. When he received his wages on Saturday he and his wife went straight to a public-house and got drunk. They drank gin all day on Sunday and Monday; then he went to the tannery penniless on Tuesday.

For the children of parents like these, Bands of Hope have been established in most ragged schools, and so popular have they been that nearly 8000 belong to these anti-drink societies.

I am glad to say that very many drunken fathers and mothers—the last always the worst of the two—have been led to sign the Temperance pledge by the example and prattle of their children. And, what is still better, they have left the Temple of Bacchus—the drink god—for the house of prayer.

Among these preachers was little Edie. She was an amiable child. Always first to enter the class in her Sunday-school, she was like a ray of sunshine to her little school fellows. Nothing pleased her more than to hear of and talk about that best friend of little children, Jesus.

Little Edie became sick unto death. Her father too often came home reeling from the pothouse, where, like King Ben-Hadad (1 Kings xx. 16), he "drank himself drunk," with his evil friends. Now, God had got a work for Edie to do before she died, as He has for all of us; and, though probably she had never heard of the prophet Joel, she delivered a similar message from God, but in her own words (Joel i. 6): "Awake ye drunkards and weep." When her father came to her bedside to receive her last kiss, she told him that she was very happy, because she was going to be with Jesus in heaven. She then fixed her gaze tenderly on her father, and added, with the faint voice of the dying, "But, father, there are no drunkards in heaven!" Soon after she was called home to that bright world where there is no sorrow. And why? Because there is no sin.

Little Edie's father never forgot the dying sermon of his beloved daughter, "There are no drunkards in heaven." He took his sins to Jesus and found pardon in his blood. He fled from the drink which had stung him like an adder, and united himself to God's children. He never spoke of his darling without tears, and his one hope was that before long he would rejoin her who was used by God to save his soul. Edie was only one out of many children who confirm the words of our Lord (Matt. xxi. 16), "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise!"

EVANGELICAL MISSION TO THE JEWS.—The Messiah's Witness (1d. 394, Hackney-road, E.), for this month, contains a report of the annual meeting of this Mission, conducted by Mr. D. C. Joseph, who aims at bringing his Jewish brethren to a knowledge of Jesus, the true Messiah.

WEIGHED IN THE BALANCES.

By Mr. D. L. MOODY.

"Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting."—Dan. v. 27.

SUPPOSING there should come from the throne of God an edict that this night, at twelve o'clock, every one of us should be weighed, not in balances of our own making, but in the balances of the sanctuary—the law of God. Suppose the scales should come down from yonder world, and we had to step into them and be weighed, do you tell me you would not tremble as did the King of Babylon in that night when the mysterious handwriting appeared on the palace wall? Would there not be a great wail of terror going up from this congregation? And yet the time is coming when we shall all be weighed in these balances. Let us use our imagination a little, and suppose that these balances are here to-night, and we have each one to step into them and be weighed. God has created this world, and He had a right to give a law by which it should be governed. Of all the sceptics I ever met, not one has had a word to say against the Decalogue. We find that those who are making laws in our own day are imitating the Moral Law in the statutes they are framing.

Here is the first weight: "Thou shalt have no other gods before Me." If God has created us He certainly has a right to our affection; He has a right to say that we shall worship no other god. Let us drop this weight into the scale. Are you ready to step into the other scale and be weighed? I believe we have as many gods in England as there are in China, or India, or Africa. You do not need to go to any of these heathen countries to find men bowing down to false gods. The thing that you think most of is your god, whatever it may be. How many in this land are worhipping gold to-day. They will sacrifice honour and truth if they can only make money. Is not that making a god of money? Do not let us flatter ourselves that all the idolaters are in heathen countries. If God should ask you to step into the balance how would it be with you? Would not the word ring forth as it did in the banqueting hall at Babylon: "Tekel—thou art weighed and found wanting"?

Take another weight: "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image; thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them." Then we are not even to worship the cross. There are a good many who worship the cross instead of the crucified One. The Apostles were hardly cold in their graves before the professing Christians began to worship them. God is to have the first place in our hearts, and we are to bow down to Him alone.

Here is a third weight: "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain." I am amazed to find people making light of this sin. They will say: "Yes, I know I swear, but then I don't mean it." God says He will not hold you guiltless, and He means what He says. How can you expect to get into the kingdom of heaven if you blaspheme the name of God? I would like to have you step into this scale to-night; you would find yourself lighter than a feather's weight. Do you tell me that a man who curses and blasphemes his God is fit for the kingdom of heaven?

I met a man a number of years ago who told me he was without sin. I thought, "Here is a most extraordinary man." He was the first man I had ever met who was without sin—as pure as the angels. I began to question him. I said, "Do you never swear?" "Well," he said, "sometimes I do; but I have a right to do it; it is righteous indignation. You know I don't mean anything by it!" Ah, my friend, you cannot trifle with God in that way. I have been in the army, and have heard men cursing and swearing. Some godly woman would pass along, and not an oath would be heard. They would not swear before their mother, or their wife, or their sister; they had more respect for their mothers than they had for God. When a man blasphemes he shows an utter contempt for God. Suppose the word should go forth to-night that you, profane man, were to be weighed in God's balance, would you be ready to step in? Would you not be found wanting?

Let us come to the fourth weight: "Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy." Sabbath breaker! are you ready to step into the scales? Where were you last Sabbath? Where did you spend the fifty-two Sabbaths of last year? I believe it will be a dark day for England if she gives up her Sabbath. Go across the Channel and look at France, if you would see what a nation is without a Sabbath. Working men, give up your life, rather than give up your Sabbath. I do not know how quickly we should get back into slavery if it were not for the Day of Rest. Let us stand up for it; God knows how much we all need it.

There may be some who are inclined to use the Sabbath in helping them to make money faster. In the United States, the Germans are clamouring to make it a day of recreation. Some of our capitalists are going in for running excursion trains. It is one of the darkest things in our country to-day, and I do not know what will become of the Republic if we lose our Christian Sabbath. It is proved that a man can do more in six days than if he has to work all the seven. Let me say to business men, that if you teach your servants to have no regard for the Sabbath, it will not be very hard for them to take your money.

Another weight: "Honour thy father and thy mother." Young man, how do you treat your parents? If you tell me that, I will tell you how you are going to get on through life. I have travelled considerably, but I have never yet found a person who dishonoured his parents and who prospered. I believe that anyone who goes against the counsel of a godly father or mother will have his way hedged up by God, so that he shall not succeed in life. Is there anyone who loves you like your parents? If they cannot have your regard through life, what reward are they to have for all their care and anxiety on your account? When I hear a young man speaking contemptuously of his grey-haired father, I say he has sunk very low indeed. I remember a young man who used to belong to the Sunday-school I was connected with in America. There were four in the family, two girls and two boys. The father was a confirmed drunkard; the mother took in washing, and worked hard to keep her children. She had her eldest boy sent to the High School. I heard one thing about him that sent him down in my estimation. I have kept my eye on him since; he has not prospered. The mother worked so hard that she had to go into the hospital, where she died of hard work. One day this young fellow stood in front of the little cottage where his mother lived, when a young man who belonged to the High School came along. The son saw him coming, left his mother, and went to meet him. He was ashamed to own his mother. His friend asked, "Who is that woman?" when he replied, "Oh, that is my washerwoman!" You smile, but it is not a thing to smile about. I cannot tell you the contempt I have for him.

Young man, how long is it since you wrote to your mother? Perhaps there are some here who have not written home for months, or it may be years. How often I get letters from mothers urging me to try and influence their sons. I remember some years ago hearing of a man who was planning to send his gray-haired father to the poorhouse. His little boy heard him, and said: "Father, when you get to be old will I have to send you to the poorhouse?" If a young man sends his father to the workhouse, it won't be long before he gets there himself. It would be a good deal better for you to divide your last penny with your old parents. You remember how that mother watched over you when you were sick. Night after night she would watch over you and care for you. Now she is getting old; her natural force is becoming abated, and her step begins to falter. You are in full manhood, and you let that poor mother go to the poorhouse. Shame on the man who would do it; may God give him repentance and forgiveness of that sin.

Here is another weight: "Thou shalt not kill." Some of you may be saying you could stand to be weighed in that scale. But we have not got to kill a man to be a murderer. If I get so angry in my heart with any one that I wish him harm, I am a murderer. I may be speaking to a good many who are cultivating an unforgiving spirit. That is the spirit of the murderer, and needs to be rooted out of your heart.

Another weight: "Thou shalt not commit adultery." I wish I could pass over this; I hate to touch upon it; but I feel as if I should be untrue to God if I passed it by. This sin is coming in upon us like a flood at the present day. Young men in our streets are being borne down by this accursed sin. I believe young men by hundreds are being utterly ruined by it. We hear a good deal about intemperance now-a-days; it advertises itself, but this sin hides itself away under the shadow of the night. A man who tampers with this evil goes on step by step until his character is blasted, his reputation ruined, his health gone, and his life made as dark as hell. May God wake up the nation to see how this awful sin is spreading. Young man, are you leading an impure life? Suppose God's scales should drop down before you, what would you do? Are you fit for the kingdom of heaven? You know very well that you are not. You loathe yourself. When you look upon that pure wife, or that sainted mother, you say "What a vile wretch I am! The harlot is bringing me down to an untimely and dishonoured grave." May God show us what a fearful sin it is. The idea of making light of it! I do not know of any sin that will take a man down to ruin more quickly. (Having read a portion of Proverbs vii. Mr. Moody proceeded): Is there anyone here who will get up and deny that the house of the strange woman is "the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death"? Are there not men here whose characters have been utterly ruined for this life through this accursed sin? Are there not wives here who would rather sink into their graves than live? You went with that wife to the altar a few years ago, and promised to love and cherish her. Now you have given your affections to some vile harlot, and brought ruin on your wife and children! Oh, Spirit of God, come upon us that we may see the sinfulness of this awful sin!

Young man, hear God's voice, and turn from that awful iniquity. What wilt thou say when God shall question thee? "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." It is a fearful thing to hear any man talking in a flippant way about that sin, and yet hold up his head in society. You may walk down the aisles of the church and take your seat there, thinking that no one knows anything about it. But there is a God sitting on the throne; He knows all about it, and He shall bring you to judgment. When you step into the scales you shall hear the dread word, "Tekel; thou art weighed and found wanting."

I have not time to take up these other weights, "Thou shalt not steal." If there is a person here who has got a penny that belongs to someone else, I beg of you give it up. You need not expect God to bless you till you have made restitution. Then, as to bearing false witness. Be careful how you speak about people you know nothing about. There is hardly a public man who has not things told about him that would sink him into the lowest hell if they were true.

Now, you moralists, I would like to have you step into the scales. Do you think you would stand the test? What does God say? "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Have you turned from every sin?

But there is a man down there who says: "I'd like to see Mr. Moody step into the scales." I tell you, without any boasting, I am ready to step into them and be weighed. If those scales should now come down from yonder throne, I would go in with a shout of joy. Many years ago I found out that I was a sinner. I took Jesus Christ for my Saviour; and with Christ I am ready to step in and be weighed. I do not know how any man can step in without Christ; He is the only One who ever kept the law, who did everything that God required. Take Christ as your Saviour and Master; then you will be ready. I pity the soul without Christ; it is an awful thing to die and meet God without Him.

MAJOR AND MRS. POOLE IN JERSEY.

DURING the last fortnight, successful Gospel Temperance meetings and Bible-readings have been conducted by Major and Mrs. Evered Poole in St. Helier's. On each occasion the audiences have been large; on both Sunday evenings many have been unable to obtain admittance. The Gospel has found an entrance into many a weary, sin-sick soul. Christians have had their faith quickened and their love to God deepened; we trust the result will be more willingness "to spend and be spent in the Master's service."

The after-meetings have been rich in blessing; deep earnestness compelling many a one to stand up and witness for the Saviour, whom they desired to follow openly in the time to come.

The Temperance question, brought before the people each time, has had no mean success; hundreds have donned "the little bit of blue."

RIPE HARVEST FIELDS.—It is said that there are 1200 towns west of the Mississippi without churches or regular religious services of any kind.

LONDON NEPHALISTS' CLUB.—Under this title an organisation has been formed with the view of enabling young men who engage in athletic recreations to do so without being exposed to temptations to drink. As most of the clubs having similar objects meet at public-houses, it will be understood that such a society as that newly formed has a definite and important mission to perform. The Secretary is Mr. C. E. S. Tweedie, 24, Josephine-avenue, Brixton-rise, S.W.

THE LAND AND THE PEOPLE.

BY invitation of Mr. Jas. Mathieson and Rev. John Wilkinson, a number of friends interested in the Jews met at the Mildmay Conference Hall on Tuesday afternoon last week. Lord Shaftesbury hoped to have been in the chair, but was detained at the House of Lords. Mr. MATHIESON, in presiding, said that a large number of communications had been received from well-known Christians, approving of the proposals that were to be submitted to the meeting. He further said he believed that in this movement they were not going before the Lord, but following the leadings of his providence.

As one of the conveners of the meeting, Rev. J. WILKINSON described some efforts he had made in recent years to help Mr. Friedlaender's Mission-work in Jerusalem. The scheme which they were to consider was not designed to send Jews back to Palestine from other places, but only to provide occupation in their own land for the Jews who had already returned, or who might return. It had been asked whether these Jews would cultivate the soil if they were provided with the facilities for doing so. As an answer to this question, Mr. Wilkinson read extracts from one of the leading Jewish papers showing that families now settled in the agricultural districts are most industrious in their avocations, and quite capable of developing the resources of the country.

Rev. H. FRIEDLAENDER said he was not ashamed to confess that he felt deeply moved at meeting so many Christians who were practically interested in the condition of the Jewish people. Proceeding to state the facts that had impelled him to come to this country on his present mission, he said the objects they desired to forward were not only simple and feasible, but in his view an integral part of his proper work of carrying the Gospel to the Jews. He said the Jewish refugees who had gone to Palestine during the last year or so, owing to the Russian persecutions, had done so in the face of strong material temptations to them to go to the West. He therefore contended that they ought to be special objects of Christian care. Although Jews almost everywhere look to their own poor, it was a singular fact that the Jews in Palestine did not receive or give any encouragement to these refugees. In ordinary circumstances these refugees would have scorned to have asked for or accepted aid from their brethren who had been converted to the Christian faith. Now, for the first time, these people had come to the Christians asking for help. He was driven to the conclusion that the events that were happening had been used by the Holy Spirit to bring these poor Jews under the power of the Gospel. Although hunger had at first driven them to apply for help to Christians, the fact remained that many of them have become the undoubted subjects of God's saving grace. Some who had applied to them, and were afterwards led to seek the aid of the rabbis, had again returned to the Christian camp. This could not be explained on any other assumption than that among the Christians these refugees found an attraction that was due to the power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. What was needed now was to make such arrangements as would enable these refugees to earn an honest livelihood by the cultivation of the soil.

A resolution was moved by Dr. ROSEDALE to the effect that the time had come when some scheme should be formulated for the settlement of these refugees in the land of Palestine. The speaker, in a touching way, referred to the inherent desire among all true Israelites to return to the land of their fathers, and said he believed that these persecutions would be the means of sending the Jews as a nation back to the Holy Land. Mr. ELLIS, in supporting the proposal, suggested that English Christians should invest in land in Palestine, and let it to these refugees.

Several other friends having spoken warmly in favour of some immediate systematic action being taken by English Christians for the relief of the refugees, a committee was appointed to consider what shape such action should assume. The result of their deliberations will no doubt be communicated to the public in due course.

COING AND RETURNING.

"For ye were as sheep going astray, but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls."

GOING ASTRAY.

INTO the paths that look so fair,
With gay flowers blooming ev'rywhere,
On, through the heavy perfumed air,
"Going astray."

"Narrow" the path we left behind,
And upward still that path doth wind;
Downward and "broad" the road we find
"Going astray."

Onward we go as those that dream,
Truly, things are not what they seem!
Dancing feet in the morning's beam
"Going astray."

* * * * * *

Changed is the scene, the flow'rs are dead,
And the clouds gather overhead;
All our light careless mirth has fled,
"Going astray."

Oh, for the garments without stain,
Oh, for the narrow way again!
Pleasure we sought and found but pain
"Going astray."

All that once charmed is past and gone,
Weary and thirsty, faint and lone,
Yea! sick at heart, we wander on,
"Going astray."

Darker and darker grows the night;
Oh, for a glimpse of Heaven's light!
Oh, for a hand to set us right,
"Going astray."

O Shepherd! whom we disobeyed,
Far from the fold we've erred and strayed;
Footsore and hopeless and dismayed,
"Going astray."

RETURNING.

"Shepherd and Bishop," Saviour, Thou
Who sought'st us, at thy feet we bow!
Far have we wandered, see us now
"Returned" to Thee.

Oh, blessed rest at thy dear feet,
Oh, "pastures green," how fair and sweet,
Oh, welcome that thy "lost" ones meet,
"Returned" to Thee!

Oh, blessed to be always led,
Oh, safe the narrow path we tread,
No hunger now, O Living Bread—
"Returned" to Thee!

Oh, past for ever is the night
And darkness, for Thou art our Light;
No step without thy presence bright!
"Returned" to Thee!

The hearts that mourned, the tear-dimmed eyes
Are lifted up in glad surprise,
Thy home, thy bliss, before us lies!
"Returned" to Thee!

"Shepherd and Bishop!" all our days
With loving hearts we sing thy praise;
Now—though we wandered from thy ways—
"Returned" to Thee!

OUR FISHERMEN.—Now that our fishermen are brought so prominently before the world by the International Fisheries Exhibition, it will be interesting to our readers to know that a great public meeting will be held at Willis's Rooms, London, on July 12, under the presidency of the Earl of Shaftesbury, to which all those interested in saving the lives of our fishermen and sailors are invited.

FOR VISITORS TO THE TYROL.—Herr Sh. W. Reinmuth, Villa Hechenbleickner, near Schloss Weierburg, Innsbruck (close to Pension Kayser) wishes us to mention that he will be happy to welcome any Christians travelling in the Tyrol and to afford them any information in his power. His wife is English, and he resided in England many years. Opportunity for Christian fellowship on the Lord's Day.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

IN the spacious and airy Town Hall in High-street, Kensington, Mr. Russell Hurditch convened the annual gatherings of the Evangelistic Mission last Thursday. In the afternoon a large company responded to his invitation, and was presided over by the Earl of Shaftesbury. After Dr. Ziemann had asked God's blessing on the meeting and on the Mission, some appropriate passages of Scripture were read by Mr. Abraham Wallis.

Mr. Hurditch made a statement as to the work of the past year. The evangelistic work in London is directed definitely towards the non-church goers, chiefly through the preaching of the Gospel in halls scattered throughout London. In the winter-time the Oxford Music Hall and two places of entertainment in Hammersmith are utilised for Sunday services. During the present summer, thirteen tents, the property of the Mission, are in use in different parts of the country. There have been many real conversions among the attendants at the various services. Among the agencies of the Mission are also Sunday-schools, children's services, mothers' meetings, &c. Of the work of personal dealing it is difficult to speak, but there are many cases known, in which these hand-to-hand efforts have been the means of bringing anxious ones to decision. House-to-house visitation has been largely entered upon, and has been attended with good success. It was the good old Gospel that they preached, and thousands had come under its power, to the salvation of their souls. The constancy of the converts is one of the best proofs of the reality of their profession. The country work embraces sea-side services, tent meetings, colportage, &c. A very successful work is going on at Swindon, at Bushey, and at Margate. Special outlay is demanded in connection with the building of halls in places where these cannot be hired, and Mr. Hurditch made an appeal for more help in this department. Various social meetings had been held specially for our fallen sisters. As the result, fifteen had been returned to their homes, and others dealt with. A large distribution of Gospel literature had been greatly blessed.

The noble Chairman said that among all the Missions in London, he knew none more sound in its basis or more deserving of support than this one. With the great masses of the people open-air preaching was most acceptable, and was the easiest way of reaching them. He thanked God that in this Mission the simple Gospel was adhered to; he believed the masses would either have that or none at all. He fully approved of Mr. Hurditch's plan of calling his places of meeting "halls," in preference to "churches." The prejudices of many people were so great that numbers of them would not be induced to enter a church on any consideration, while they would readily go into a theatre or hall. Speaking of the building department, his lordship thought too much should not be made of that. There seemed to him to be a perfect mania in the present day for church building. Among the applications for help that continually reached him by post, for one that was desired on behalf of the living agent, there were a hundred that had reference to the erection, the repairs, or the beautifying of some church. His lordship closed by a warm appeal on behalf of the operations of the Mission, especially as there are now so many opportunities for carrying the Gospel to the masses of the people.

An address followed by Rev. Dr. Donald Fraser, on being "Conformed to the Image of God's Son." Our strength and efficiency, he said, for such work as this, is our being brought into harmony with the character and purpose of Jesus Christ. The great science of our day is biology, and the study of Christian biology is deserving of more attention than it receives. Law and order are as paramount in the spiritual as in the natural world. The natural scientist goes back a long way, but he is obliged to stop short at the origin of life. So in the spiritual world there is a mystery, a power from above; but there is also the material for God to work upon. So we have the Spirit of the Lord and the spirit of a man, the latter of which is capable of receiving and being moulded by the former. Inorganic matter is not plastic, but the spirit of man is; he is therefore capable of being degraded below the level of the brute, or being raised to the highest heights of conformity to the spiritual. Man has also the power of choice, and God has placed many influences at our disposal in this spiritual life and development. Man alone has the terrible power of not fulfilling the end of his being. The end of all is this: "He shall appear, and we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is." Christ is the model Man, and to his image we must all be conformed, if we would appear in His presence.

A characteristic address followed from Dr. Mackay, of Hull, the subject announced being "Christ's Unfinished Work." The address was full of sharp sayings and telling "points."

At the evening meeting there was again a large attendance, Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., being in the chair. In his adjourned statement, Mr. Hurditch referred to the kind and generous liberality of Mr. Morley in connection with the work of the Mission. But for his timely interposition, unsolicited, two of the halls would have been closed. The Director said the present time was a crisis in the history of the work, and appealed for an increased support, in order that the many calls coming to them might be responded to

Mr. Morley said that, as an Englishman and a Christian, he rejoiced in the increase of Mission-halls. It was a most affecting fact that half of the church and chapel accommodation in the metropolis was not utilised. The masses of the population do not seem to be reached by denominational work, and this fact ought to suggest to all the sects that they should unite their forces in the effort to evangelise the people. The great need of the day he believed to be personal service by the great mass of the professing Christians. Whether we be men of commerce or those holding ecclesiastical rank, we are alike bound to take our part in "preaching the Gospel to every creature." The faith of the people is being shaken in many ways, and there is great need for the service of those who will so present the truth as to commend it to the attention of those who are in danger of falling away into open unbelief.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe spoke on the word "Arise." No better training college, he said, could be devised for Christian workers who shall devote themselves to missionary service abroad, than a few years of work in the different departments of such a Mission as that which had brought them together. Having read some passages from the life of Jonah, Mr. Radcliffe said that only after the disobedient prophet had been punished by God did he discover that salvation was of the Lord. Then he arose and went to Nineveh, as he had been commanded, and the blessing came like a flood. If we had more faith, we should see more floods of blessing in our work for God, both at home and abroad. Sacred history teaches us that God loves to work in floods, and the records of modern Missions tell the same story. But we have been too much like those spoken of in Isaiah lix., as groping in the dark at noonday. Have not our eyes been closed to the wonderful opportunities before us? Are we doing, even now, all that we can for the spread of the Gospel at our own doors, not to speak of the great open fields of Africa, and China, and India? Instead of arising to obey the command of God, we have too often been like Jonah, arising only to run away. We have been like Peter, refusing to preach the Gospel to any but our own countrymen. We have lately heard great cries of help going up from Central Africa and from a solitary missionary in Central China. Christ wept over Jerusalem when He saw that the day of their visitation was hid from their eyes. But our day is not hid from our eyes. God says to us, "Arise, shine, for thy light is come." We long to see Mission work extended in our own land; but the great populations of the world are not in England, or even in Europe or in Ameria. They are in India, and Africa, and China. If we look to God in simple faith, may we not hope to see great multitudes of our English men and women, trained in such Missions as these, going forth to live and labour and die in these lands, the Lord sending down upon them floods of blessing? Then we may also hope to see floods descending upon London, and Liverpool, and Manchester, and all the cities of our own beloved land.

Dr. McKilliam, referring to the former speaker's exhortation to "Arise," said that before we could arise we must first come down before God on our knees in self-abasement and prayer, and be endued with power. Then floods of blessing would come upon the work in which we are engaged. In seven out of the nine instances of recorded prayer in the Acts of the Apostles, floods of blessing resulted. We need to give ourselves more to united prayer. There must also be a corresponding consistency in our conduct if we would see the Lord's hand working mightily in us and by us. Some cherished inconsistency will suffice to hinder the working of his Spirit.

Mr. T. A. Denny said that notwithstanding the number of churches and chapels in London and the provinces, as well as other agencies, he thought there was still plenty of room for the Evangelistic Mission. As the Chairman had said, many churches although elaborately decorated internally and externally, are half empty. Sin is everywhere rampant; lawlessness abounds on every hand, and there is plenty for all to do.

Mr. H. Varley read a paper on the calling and work of the evangelist as given in Eph. iv. 8. The work of the Evangelist naturally stands first and prepares for that of the pastor. The Church of God has in a great measure hindered her growth by not recognising this. The evangelist's work is the evidence of his gift. He must bring everything to the test of God's word, denouncing sin and exhorting to repentance towards God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.

MR. FRANCIS MURPHY IN LUTON.

ON Monday and Tuesday, June 11 & 12, Mr. Murphy held successful meetings here. By invitation of the Blue Ribbon Committee a very influential company gathered in the Friends' Meeting-house, on Monday afternoon, which Mr. Murphy addressed in his happiest manner. He impressed on his hearers their personal responsibility in regard to the drink traffic, and we believe an excellent impression was made.

In the evening, with Mr. Henry Brown, J.P., in the chair, Mr. Murphy gave a most telling and pathetic address in the large Plait Hall, which was crowded in every part. He took for his subject the history of his own life, and showed that however well anyone may be educated in moderation, and however good an example parents may set, if they do not abstain entirely, great danger may attend their children in after life. The large audience were deeply moved at the relation of many of the scenes of Mr. Murphy's life, and a wonderful effect was produced. At the end of the lecture over 100 took the ribbon.

On Tuesday afternoon Mr. Murphy addressed a meeting of women only; several hundred coming at a few hours' notice. His Chairman was Mr. H. Leggitt, and he was supported by many ladies of the town. All seemed greatly interested, and much good was done; numbers took the pledge at the close. Another meeting was held at 8 p.m., presided over by Alderman Drewitt, Chairman of the Blue Ribbon Committee. Mr. Murphy spoke as to the personal responsibility of Christians, and particularly ministers, who, he said, should follow their Divine Master, and go down to the poor drunkard and lift him up out of the mire. At the end of the meeting about 150 pledges and ribbons were taken.

We believe much lasting good will be the result of this two days' Mission; and we trust the richest blessings of God will rest on this earnest worker in the Lord's vineyard.

A GARDEN IN WESTMINSTER.

AT the recent anniversary of the "One Tun" Ragged-schools, in Old Pye-street, a good deal was said about flowers. This arose from the fact that prizes were given to a large number of young people for plants reared in their own homes. But, apart from that, no subject could have been more appropriate to the occasion. The whole institution, and the pretty array of boys and girls who are, or have been, the subjects of its care, might well be compared to a prosperous garden—a very garden of the Lord.

One speaker quoted the passage in Isaiah that tells of the time when the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. In very deed this is what has happened in Old Pye-street. Not so many years ago the neighbourhood was truly a moral wilderness, or swamp, sending forth all kinds of evil and unwholesome vapours. To a very great extent the transformation that has taken place may be traced to the influences of the noble work carried on in these parts for the last quarter of a century by Mrs. Barker Harrison. This lady has been placed by a popular publishing house on the roll-call of the heroines of the time, and justly so. Great must have been her delight at this twenty-sixth anniversary to see the rich and abundant fruits that have grown out of a long period of faithful and unwearied service. The sight of so many fair young human flowers who have been nurtured by the Institution, and are growing up to adorn the humbler walks of social life, and also, as we believe, to adorn the doctrine of our Lord and Saviour, is surely ample reward for a lifetime of toil.

As usual, Lord Shaftesbury presided over the interesting assembly. He declared he was never happier than when looking on a sight such as that he saw before him. After he had received the letter from the children, that was reproduced in our last issue, and after the numerous prizes had been distributed, for length of service and for the rearing of flowers, his lordship addressed "his children," as he familiarly called them. He urged them to commit to memory as much of the Scriptures as they could; in times of sickness and trial they would find that the words of God's Book would be a source of unspeakable comfort to them.

Another long-tried friend of the Institution is Sir Robert Carden, for whom the Pye-street children seem to have an affection scarcely second to that cherished for the noble Earl himself. Sir Robert amused the children greatly; in reply to a letter read to him by one of the girls, he said some good and sensible things about the treatment of domestic servants. His servants, he said, were always looked on as members of the family rather than hirelings, and, as a consequence, they stayed with him for long periods, except when they "unfortunately" went away and got married!

Other friends, among whom were Canon Fleming, Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P., Dr. Sinclair Paterson, Prof. Leoni Levi, &c., took part in the deeply interesting proceedings. Instead of quoting their remarks, we will rather make room for the following statement, sent to us by Mrs. Barker Harrison herself. Help to the extent of £100 at least is needed for the immediate requirements of the work. We can only say that we know of no Mission in London or elsewhere that better deserves the hearty support of the Christian public:—

"There are over 200 children of the poorest and dangerous classes, the schools being in the Pye-street district, in the midst of atheism, Feniauism, and superstition. The various efforts carried on embrace the spiritual and temporal welfare of men, women, and children; the Prayer-meetings, Mission-services, Bible-classes, are all well attended. The children's various meetings—'Sabbath Band,' with 180 members, for teaching them the observance of the Lord's Day, the Band of Hope, with over 300 members, and a Gospel Temperance meeting every Tuesday, are wonderfully blessed.

"As the children are old enough, they are placed in situations; upwards of sixty are now doing well. Above 100 former scholars have recently been communicated with, by letter or personally, to receive the gift of a nice Reference Bible from the Earl of Shaftesbury. Many of them were over 30 years of age, married and respectable tradesmen; three had settled in the United States, doing well; two had been several years superintendents of Sunday-schools; the young women, also, respectably married; and letters of the greatest pleasure were received in acknowledgment of the valued gift.

"This is the first time during twenty-five years that funds have failed us. It is but a trial of faith, and we are sure that the Lord, the bountiful Giver of all good, will incline the hearts of those who have the means to help the children."

A SUGGESTION FOR EMPLOYERS.

DEAR SIR,—We have caused the following notice to be posted in our factory. We think it is desirable that similar notices should be placed in all work-rooms where young girls are employed, in such cities as this. Many are drawn into associations which lead them ultimately to ruin, by innocently entering into conversation with strangers, without having any suspicion of possible evil results.—Yours truly,

Manchester. T. Shaw & Sons.

[COPY OF NOTICE.]

"Girls employed here are cautioned not to enter into conversation, nor to have anything to do with strangers who may accost them in the street during meal hours, and when coming to or leaving work."

CARDIFF STRANGERS' REST.

NO one, unless from personal observation, can justly estimate the need of such a home in a large sea-port like Cardiff, and not even those who know this can trace the blessings which it brings to those who come within its influence. It shines like a light to guide wanderers back to the right path, and its open door reveals the brightness of a lost home to many who once knew its value.

It is rather more than a year since the Rest was opened, and the numbers of seamen who use the rooms and attend the meetings show how greatly it is appreciated. The place was soon found to be too small, and more accommodation was added, but even now the rooms are often overcrowded and uncomfortably warm. The plan of operations is much the same as that adopted at the Rests in London, Liverpool, and Calcutta, and the aim of the workers is to gain spiritual results. Helpers are much needed for the work among Scandinavians, French, German, and Spaniards, and ladies able to speak these languages will be gladly welcomed. There is a large and constant demand for bags of books, illustrated periodicals, &c.

We beg those who are interested in such efforts to send for a copy of the brief report now published; and we are sure their interest will be awakened, and the desire of helping in the work aroused. The work is unsectarian. Copies of the report may be obtained at "The Strangers' Rest," 180, Bute-road, Cardiff, from Miss Tilly, Hon. Superintendent. L. M. R.

REVIVAL AT EDEN VALLEY, AUSTRALIA.—One of the most remarkable outbreaks of God's Spirit that we have heard of for some time has taken place at Eden Valley, in the South Rhine district. For some time this district was entirely given up to the work of the enemy of souls, the public-house was the principal meeting-place of the inhabitants. But within the last twelve months a grand work has been going on by the pastor's stirring appeals to repentance. Some of the most notorious drunkards and Godless people have decided for Christ. The pastor, W. B. Shorthose, believing the place was ripe for a spiritual harvest, gave a pressing invitation to several excellent Evangelists. Night after night the Baptist Church was crowded to hear the story of the Cross. Such has been the work that there are but few left to patronise the public-house.

THE FRENCH IN LONDON.

THE twenty-first anniversary meeting of the French Protestant Evangelical Church in Bayswater, and of the Mission connected with it, was held in the French Church, Monmouth-road, Westbourne-grove, on Tuesday afternoon, 5th inst. Mr. John Macgregor (Rob Roy) presided, and was supported by a large number of the friends of the Mission.

Pastor Du Pontet de la Harpe gave an account of the work during the past year. The Mission includes a dispensary, a foreign governess' home, a day and Sunday-school, a governess' agency, a registry office for servauts, a society for befriending foreign servant girls in England, a Mission to shop-girls, a Bible-woman, &c. &c. All the branches had done good work during the year, and had been used by God for benefitting large numbers of the French in London, both temporally and spiritually. They were the descendants of the noble Church of the Huguenots in practice; they had never known anything else but Christ and Him crucified. In conclusion, the Pastor stated that four years hence, if they were spared, they would commemorate their twenty-fifth year, and he hoped they might be permitted to meet for praise on that occasion in a new church, more suited to their requirements and more in harmony with the considerable Mission connected with it.

Rev. Dr. Sinclair Paterson, Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke, Professor Gladstone, and the Chairman, expressed their hearty sympathy with the work, and their thankfulness to God that such a marvellous agency had been raised up, in a place like London, for the promotion of Christ's kingdom among our French-speaking foreigners, and, through them, in many a dark corner of the Continent, France especially.

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

WE are delighted that our hard-worked and physically weak brother, Wm. J. Lewis, has been invited by a kind Christian lady to Ryde, where he and Mrs. Lewis are spending a few weeks, greatly to the benefit of their health, while the work at home is being efficiently carried on by his devoted fellow-workers, two of whom thus write:—

"God has wonderfully helped and blessed us since Mr. Lewis's departure. Such a bond of love and unity exists between pastor and people that an increased spirit of devotion and energy has manifested itself in his absence. The Gospel services are well attended, and much spiritual power accompanies the simple proclamation of Jesus Christ Crucified, Risen, and Enthroned. Our Monday evening prayer and praise meetings have been excellent in spirit and power. A deep tone of reverence for God prevails. We can say with the Psalmist, 'In thy presence is fulness of joy and at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore.'

"Mr. Lewis is devotedly attached to the band of young persons whom he gathers around him every Tuesday evening to instruct and build up in the Truth, and so prepare them for lives of usefulness. This class is the nursery for the Church; here our open-air speakers and teachers are prepared for their work. The Sunday evening open-air work goes on prosperously, with great crowds of attentive, earnest listeners. We set forth simply the full salvation of God in Christ Jesus, avoiding sensationalism.

"We have just received a letter from a brother in Christ, who some few months ago left us for Australia. He writes saying that Walter Douglas's work is still spoken of; in many parts they have come across many who claim to be 'Douglas's lambs.' This is very cheering to W. D. and W. J. L., seeing they are so intimately related, viz., father and son in our Lord Jesus Christ.

"J. S. & E. H."

MADAME MARZIALS, of Barnave, par Luc-en-Diois, Drôme, France, writes us that the health of her husband, Pasteur Marzials, has been failing, and he is now dangerously ill. It is very desirable that some Christian brother should be found to take the whole responsibility and oversight of the Mission work—a girls' school, three Sunday-schools, three Temperance cafés, in different villages, and the orphan homes. Communicate with Mme. Marzials as above.

Notes and Comments.

WE learn that Pastor Theodore Monod will be among the speakers at the forthcoming Mildmay Conference.

The revision of the Old Testament continues to make progress, although but slowly. The Revisers have just closed their seventy-ninth session, and have carried the final revision of the text as far as Exodus xxvii.

Rev. Narayan Sheshadri, in the Free Church of Scotland Monthly, reports on a recent evangelistic tour in Central India. During five days preaching by fifty evangelists, at the Annual Paitan Fair, some 15,000 persons, he says, must have heard the Gospel.

It is a good sign as to the increasing power of Temperance principles in society that the Dean of Westminster, who recently appealed for £3000 to buy up the license of a public-house, received in two or three days upwards of a thousand pounds towards the amount.

Five new missionaries have been appointed to the foreign field in connection with the Free Church of Scotland. Two go to the Livingstonia Mission, one to Blythswood, and one to Lovedale, all in South or Central Africa; the fifth proceeds to the New Hebrides.

The largest collection ever realised for the Sunday Hospital Fund was taken at St. Michael's Church, Chester-square (Rev. Canon Fleming's), on the 10th inst. It amounted to £917 11s. 6d. Altogether, the proceeds of the day, received up to Saturday last, amount to £22,000.

With the death of Alexandre Castellani, of Naples, a remarkable man has passed away from the world of art. As an antiquarian he was unrivalled, and some of the finest relics of ancient art to be found in our museums, as well as in most of the Continental collections, owe their discovery and preservation to his genius, shrewdness, and unwearied diligence. He was one of those upon whom Papal hands had been laid, having rendered himself obnoxious to Roman authority by his patriotism and love of liberty.

Special interest attaches to the new Mission established in Latimer-road, Notting-hill, from the fact that it is supported by the masters and boys of Harrow School, who have made themselves responsible for the missioner's salary for seven years. Last summer, in response to an address given to them by the Bishop of Bedford on Church work in the Metropolis, the boys organised a committee, and started subscriptions among themselves for the purpose of establishing this Mission, which is most successfully advancing. A Mission-hall is about to be built at a cost of £1,000, a site having been secured at a cost of £2,200.

An interesting meeting of old Harrovians was held at St. James's Hall last week, under the presidency of Dr. Vaughan, Dean of Llandaff, for the purpose of aiding this work. Among those who wrote expressing regret at their absence was the Earl of Shaftesbury; Sir T. F. Buxton, Dr. Butler, Head Master, and others were among the speakers.

Dr. McCosh, of Princeton College, U.S., wishes to retire from professional duties in order that he may engage exclusively in the battle against modern unbelief. At his advanced age the resolution is a very valorous one. Dr. John Hall, of New York, is mentioned as his probable successor at Princeton.

A resolution has been laid before Lord Derby, by an influential deputation, including the rectors and vicars of the principal East-end parishes, Revs. Archibald Brown, G. S. Reaney, and others, to the effect that "State-directed emigration and colonisation is, for the United Kingdom, a necessity of the time."

A correspondent of The Pall Mall Gazette, writing from Boulogne, makes an earnest plea for "the bathing-machine horse," which is too often treated, as he asserts, with great brutality, in addition to being sadly overworked. This state of things applies, we are informed, to other watering-places as well as Boulogne. We trust all the friends of that noble servant of mankind, the horse, who may witness such cruelties, will raise a loud protest, and seek by every means to prevent them.

The eighty-seventh annual assembly of the Methodist New Connexion has been held at Sheffield, with Rev. T. Rider, of Ashton-under-Lyne, as President. This branch of the great Methodist family has a Conference consisting of about 165 members, and is known in many parts of the country as devoted to the interests of the true Gospel of Christ. The new President indicated the spirit of his own work, as well as that of his brethren, when he said in his inaugural address:—

> The more earnestly I consider the intellectual and spiritual needs of to-day, the more profound is my conviction that apostolic methods are as urgently required and as completely appropriate now as they were eighteen hundred years ago; and that men can only be elevated, refined, and saved by the simple Gospel of Christ, applied to their hearts by the power of the Holy Ghost.

A most remarkable meeting has been held lately in Saratoga, convened by a joint committee representing the various Baptist societies of America, which had been appointed to confer, and summon a general Convention of the denomination. The object of this was to submit a plan by which instead of divided and sectarian action in circulating the Word of God, there should be union with other denominations for that purpose. Two whole days were spent in discussing the matter, the Convention being one of the largest ever held by the denomination. The issue was that 461 voted for union, 30 against it. Ultimately the 30 withdrew their negative votes, and joined heartily with the majority. A meeting for praise and thanksgiving was held, and all hearts seemed filled with joy and gladness.

By this decision, the "American and Foreign Bible Society" ceases to exist, a result in which Captain Morgan, its honoured and generous president, in a noble and manly spirit concurred, pledging himself and his colleagues to support the new arrangement. The Christian Union, of New York, says, "The spirit of the men of the American and Foreign Bible Society, as expressed in this meeting, was beyond praise, for it was the spirit of the Master whose sweetest name is Love." All true servants of Christ will hail with satisfaction this fresh advance towards the union of believers in Christian work.

Birmingham last week was given up to festivities and gigantic celebrations in honour of its distinguished representative, the Right Hon. John Bright. Whatever differences of opinion may prevail as to the value of that statesman's political opinions, all England is proud of his oratorical powers, and admires the loftiness of his character as a Christian philanthropist and true patriot. His long-continued career of public and private devotion to the interests of his country, and of unswerving integrity in every sphere of life, entitle him to all the honour his countrymen can put upon him.

Rev. J. Smith, missionary of Delhi, preaching on behalf of the Baptist Missionary Society at Cambridge, on Sunday week, said that the advance of Western science is doing so much to undermine Eastern ignorance and superstition, that the recently-founded Mahometan College at Allegghur, is tending more than anything else to the overthrow of Mahometanism. Mr. Smith spoke most hopefully of Missions, because the human heart everywhere instinctively yearns for God, the heathen feel after Him if haply they may find Him, and the Gospel brings Him nigh to them in Jesus his Son, who is the image of the invisible God.

A minister said the other day that we must face, in a way we never yet have done, the question of sending the Gospel to the heathen world. This needs to be constantly repeated. God is answering the prayers of years in opening heathen countries to the truth; is it not the least that we should set before ourselves, that every church in every town should be represented by one or more of its members in the foreign Mission field? This would create and preserve a vital personal interest between the Church and Missions, and go far to ensure the missionaries' support.

It appears that the University of Oxford has just voted £10,000 for building a laboratory, and supplying means and opportunities for Dr. Burdon Sanderson to pursue his researches. An old member of the University has written to The Spectator urging all anti-visectionists who have any influence in the matter to see what can be done to prevent this vote promoting the practice of vivisection. We notice with pleasure that an Anti-Vivisection Society has been established in France, with such influential men as Alphonse Karr and Victor Hugo among its chief supporters.

The Bill that is now before the House of Lords to make further provision for the protection of girls, the suppression of evil houses, and of solicitation in the streets, is in some respects satisfactory; in other respects it is not so. The Bill has been carefully considered by the London Committee for the suppression of "the foreign traffic;" a petition from that Committee has been prepared, containing suggestions for highly desirable amendments, and has been presented by Lord Mount-Temple. The greatest flaw in the Bill, so far as the protection of girls is concerned, is that it proposes to guard girls up to the age of sixteen years only, from legal consent to the arts of the moral vultures of society. A higher age than that must be respectfully but firmly insisted upon. It will be impossible to accept this and other proposals in the Bill as a final settlement of the matter.

An International Congress is being held in Paris, for the discussion of questions relating to neglected and criminal youth. It is being held under the auspices of the French Society for the Protection of Abandoned and Criminal Children, of which the well-known philanthropist, Mr. George Bonjean, is president, and which has its office at 47, Rue de Lille, Paris. The sittings are held in the Trocadero, and, commencing with June 15, end on the 23rd. We hope to furnish some particulars in our next.

The claims of Spain upon Evangelical Christendom are just now specially urgent. The Spanish peasantry, it is said, are very largely alienated from Romish influence and teaching. The Bishop of Meath bears some testimony to this fact, and says concerning it:—

There is one other element of urgency in this present "opportunity" which cannot fail to carry weight with every thoughtful mind. It is this. The field within which this work of reform is being carried on—more especially as regards the rural districts of Spain and Portugal—has not as yet been pre-occupied, to any large extent, by secularism and infidelity. The very backwardness of these countries has kept them free from that tide of unbelief which follows too often in the track of modern civilisation. As Dr. Neale truly says, "The peasantry of Spain have all the seeds of faith yet in their hearts." Yet a little while (his Lordship adds) and this may be no longer so. It may be, ere long, with Spain as it is now with France. By and by many a heart now soft may be hardened into indifference, and many a conscience now tender may have become callous to the thought of religion in any form. It may then be too late to do the work which God calls us to finish now without delay. Let us then be up and doing "while it is day, before the night cometh in which no man can work." Great, in truth, is the need of those who ask our help, and great indeed is our opportunity. While we have that opportunity let us resolve, God helping us, to supply that need!

The responsibility of the Church of Christ at this time is heavy and vast. The Lord's voice may be heard on all sides saying, "Behold, I have set before thee an open door." It is needful to press the importance of individual preparedness to respond to his appeal. Many help societies by their contributions who ought to be at work themselves, spending and being spent for God. Labourers are wanted, toilers who, from love to the Master, are ready to go forth and reap the whitening fields. Men go far and spend much in tours and travel simply for pleasure; when shall we see the Church supplying bands of evangelists ready, at their own cost, to travel and explore for Christ? Only by personal fidelity and devotion to His work can we overtake the opportunities which present themselves all over the world.

Now that many are leaving home for their annual country, sea-side, or continental trip, it is not out of place to urge upon Christian excursionists the importance of using their influence, wherever they may be, for good. In many a town or village communities of the Lord's people may be cheered and helped by their kindly sympathy and aid. Lodging-house proprietors, domestics, boatmen, and public servants may be reached by a friendly word or printed message of Divine mercy and truth. The sea-shore may furnish a wide sphere for quiet Christian effort among the children, and with adults of every class. It will greatly tend to make the holiday happy, and holy too, if the Saviour's loving service be entered upon in connection with it, unobtrusively, and in the spirit of faith and joy in God. "Blessed are ye that sow beside all waters" is a promise to be borne in mind.

The twenty-fourth Conference of the Midland Clerical and Lay Association has just been held at Nottingham. The Rev. Canon Tebbutt read a Paper on "Evangelical Distinctiveness in Ritual and Doctrine." His summary of the grand realities which go to make up the system called "Evangelical" is so clear and well defined that we reproduce it:—

(1) First in the distinguishing features of our scheme of doctrine we place the absolute authority of Holy Scripture. We maintain the integrity of God's inspired Word; we believe that its authors were "moved by the Holy Ghost" to write what they wrote, each in his own style, but each in fullest truth. We hold "that the Holy Scriptures contain sufficiently all doctrine required of necessity for eternal salvation through faith in Jesus Christ." We accept no tradition foreign from or repugnant to Holy Scripture; and whilst we do not undervalue the aid of man for the understanding and unfolding of God's Word, whether of ancient or modern exposition, we always place the Bible above the Church. (2) We trace the spiritual life in the soul of man, not to a sacramental origin, but to the one prime source of all life in the eternal redeeming love of God in Christ. We say that the initial of spiritual life is due, not to the efficacy of ordinances, but immediately and exclusively to God's sovereign will and grace. "Of his own will begat He us with the word of truth" (James i. 18). (3) A third feature, which should mark true Evangelical teaching, is the message of a full, free, finished justification, through the blood and righteousness of Christ, to every true penitent and believing heart. (4) Next in order comes the need of clear distinctive teaching as to the person and work of the Holy Ghost in the regeneration of the soul. (5) One subject remains, and with this I will conclude. No Evangelical teaching can be considered complete in which the doctrine of the second advent and kingdom of our blessed Lord does not find a pervading presence. With us this great and solemn fact will not be merely the subject of Advent, to be laid aside for the rest of the Church's year, but a present, vitalising power in all our teaching and inner life.

At the same Conference an important paper was read by Mr. A. H. Guinness, M.A., on "Jesuitism, the Influence it exerts in Social and National Life." Attention was called to a fact which receives but too little consideration, viz., that while Germany and France have expelled Jesuits from their land, Protestant England receives them with friendly greeting, and grants them her favour and protection. The influence their presence exerts, clandestinely and by false representations, is a fact which Protestants ought not to be ignorant of, or fail to meet with firm and stern opposition. They are employing their residence in this country for the promulgation of their pernicious principles to an extent few perhaps are prepared to believe.

Mr. Guinness pointed out what is the real character of Jesuitism, directing attention to the three main accusations brought against it, namely, probabilism, mental reservation, and justification of means by the end. He said:—

I am prepared to prove from their writings the distinct inculcation of these principles, and, further, to show by extracts from their works the character of the teaching enforced by the application of these principles. These extracts distinctly sanction the practice of equivocation and of perjury, the commission of theft, the use of bribery, even the bribing of judges for the perversion of judgment, the perpetration of the grossest immorality, the evasion of the payment of taxes, the deposition of kings and rulers, the release of subjects from their allegiance, the commission even of murder and of regicide.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland has been occupied with a long and somewhat stormy discussion on the question of instrumental music as an aid to worship. A resolution was moved condemning its use, and calling on all churches in the Assembly who had adopted it to discontinue it, as contrary to the rules of the church. An amendment sanctioning its employment, and deprecating any interference with congregational liberty in the matter, was ultimately carried by a majority of eleven. As in the case of the Free Church of Scotland, the minority appear to feel very strongly on the subject, and threaten further action in reference to it.

We note a pleasing indication that the working classes are not so alienated from religious teachers and teaching as that they may not be drawn into alliance with them. The working-men of Sheffield have just presented the Archbishop of York with a handsome cabinet of cutlery, mounted in silver, as a mark of their regard for him and his efforts on their behalf. It was presented at a crowded meeting, held in the Sheffield Albert Hall, last week.

In his address in reply, the Archbishop said that the word "condescension," which had been applied to his coming amongst them so often, was quite out of place. If they had been on the footing of condescension, they would not have got on so well as they had. He had never had a thought of the kind, but came as a man amongst men. He had never sought either to flatter them, but had always found them appreciate bold and straightforward utterance. These words are worthy of notice by all who desire to reach the masses; when properly approached, they are far more accessible to Gospel influences than many suppose.

No sadder or more appalling calamity has befallen this country for many a year than that by which nearly 200 children were suddenly deprived of life at Sunderland on Saturday last. The many bereaved households will have the deepest sympathy of the nation, not to say of the whole civilised world. We pray that in the time of their distress they may be able to cast themselves upon the God of all grace and consolation, and that out of this inexpressible and almost unparalelled source of sorrow there may arise such salutary influences as shall be to the good of man and the glory of Him who is "out of evil still educing good."

This fearful and unlooked-for disaster suggests the reflection that such large gatherings of young people should not be left without adequate adult supervision. A searching inquiry will, of course, be made as to the defective internal arrangements of the building that was the scene of the accident.

STARVING PEASANTS IN DONEGAL.—Mrs. Ernest Hart, 38, Wimpole-street, S.W., has described in The Daily Chronicle the sorrows and starvation of the poor peasants of Donegal. She says, "hundreds are being kept from starvation by doles of a pennyworth of meal a day." In one place, 3600 persons out of 4500 are being fed by charity. About 14,000 persons are requiring food in Donegal county, though it only costs 7d. a week to keep one person alive. Mrs. Hart pleads for help for a people who are "self-reliant, industrious, sober, and pure-living."

MISSION TO THE KABYLES, ALGERIA.—Mr. Alfred S. Lamb, who has for some six or seven years successfully conducted a Mission in Partick, Glasgow, has left with his wife and children for Algiers, where he has devoted himself to work among the Kabyles. An interesting meeting was recently held in the Burgh Hall, Partick, which was largely attended by many leading citizens of Glasgow. To mark the esteem in which the young missionary was held, a purse of £111 was presented to Mr. Lamb, which called forth a very touching and feeling reply. We wish him God-speed in his new field of labour.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MISSION IN EXETER HALL.

SUNDAY EVENING, JUNE 3.

The Gospel of Christ the Power of God to Deliver the Enslaved.

THE closing meeting of the Mission, which crowded Exeter Hall in every part, was presided over by Mr. William Fowler, M.P. Part of the sixtieth chapter of Isaiah was read by Mr. F. Murphy, and the Rev. Vernon Charlesworth offered prayer.

ADDRESS BY THE CHAIRMAN.

It has struck me, in thinking over the subject which we are to consider to-night, that there are two kinds of slavery in the world—the one slavery by law, and the other slavery by custom and by habit. We have had most extraordinary illustrations of the power of Christ's Gospel to undo and abolish slavery by law. In this country, as you all know, we abolished it long since, and the name of William Wilberforce will always stand out before the world as one who was a great practical Christian, and, therefore, a great emancipator of slaves. And on the other side of the water we have had in our time, a momentous illustration of the same truth, in that mighty struggle by which slavery was abolished in the United States of America. I have no hesitation in saying that but for the power of the Gospel of Christ, slavery would not have been abolished in America or in England at this hour.

But what we have to discuss to-night is the other question—the slavery of custom and habit. I desire to draw your attention to certain facts of Christianity which seem to me to show that it is powerful in this as well as in the other case. We know very well that habits are most powerful over men. Men have disagreeable, disgusting habits that cling to them for life; but they have also habits which are degrading, demoralising, and destructive to the very life of the man. There are two such habits that stand out before the world as peculiarly destructive—the habit of vice and the habit of drink. They are closely associated with one another, and both are most powerful to the injury of the people. But I think we shall agree that taking all classes, and taking the different periods of man's life, there is no habit at this moment so destructive to our country as the habit of taking intoxicating drinks. That at least is my firm conviction. I cannot read the newspapers day after day without noticing the awful crimes, the terrible disorders, the fearful miseries that are continually produced, even in cases where the law cannot interfere, and where the law only records and registers the miserable results that come before its officers. If we could reckon up the premature deaths that take place in this country in one year, not deaths from violence, but deaths the direct result even of moderation in drinking, I believe the tale would be something terrible to tell. One of the greatest physicians of our day once told me that no one had any idea of the number of men prematurely cut off who are not regarded as being destroyed by drink, but who are supposed to be carried off by ordinary disease. I mention this only as an illustration of the extraordinary importance of the question.

We have to consider to-night these facts, which are so notorious and so frequently repeated that people say they are almost tired of their repetition, though I believe we cannot repeat them too often, or impress them on our minds too much. But what we have to ask ourselves is this: Has Christianity a power to overcome this evil, just as it overcame the evil of legal slavery? I say, if Christianity is worth having, it has that power. It is a reality; it is not merely a question of name, but, as the great Apostle said,—"It is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth." How easy it is to say those words, but how hard sometimes to act up to them. Many of us, perhaps, who condemn the drunkards are indulging in habits that are just as opposed to the Gospel of Christ. If a record were made of the power of habit in covetousness, what a ta there would be against some of us who have not sinned as the drunkard has sinned. There is a great deal said against the habit of covetousness in the Bible: but it is a mighty power in the world still, though I believe Christianity can overcome and destroy that habit as well as all other evil habits.

How does the Gospel work on the mind of man? This is what the Apostle says in the eighth chapter of Romans, and we cannot read too often: "The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Now, there he puts the whole thing in a nutshell. The slavery is gone because we are free by the power of the Spirit of Christ. The Apostle is no superficial reasoner, but goes to the bottom of things. He says that the cause of that weakness in us which results in our being overcome by these evil habits is, that by nature we do not understand anything higher than ourselves. He says the natural man cannot understand the things of the Spirit of God, because they are spiritually discerned. The mere human law frightens us, it may keep us from doing wrong; but it does not make the man a better man. It does not alter his inner nature, and elevate him, and lift him up above himself into the liberty that the Apostle calls in another place "the glorious liberty of the children of God." "The carnal mind," as he tells us, "is not subject to the law of God neither indeed can be." But "the law of the spirit of life in Christ can make us free."

There is one thing about these habits which I wish to mention as especially applying to the habit of drinking. There is a peculiar power of the habit to re-assert itself. You may think it has gone, but it comes back again. I shall never forget hearing Mr. Gough describe what he suffered when he tried to get over this terrible habit of drinking. A man wants to be a changed man in order to get rid of this terrible slavery to his own vices. I do not say that a man is never rescued by other motives, but I say a man who becomes truly changed by the Spirit of God is a more powerful man for good as an abstainer, than the man who is merely led away by some economical theory or by some notive of minor importance. How easy it is to drift into some terrible habit that becomes so powerful over us that nothing in the world but God's grace can lift us out of it. If ever there was an illustration of this, it is in this curse of drink. All over the country there are groans and cries going up about the power of this evil.

We live in very dangerous times, in many respects, especially in the case of those to whom God has given much of influence and wealth. We are apt to forget everything but the present. There is so much bustle and business that we do not seem to have time to attend to these higher things; but sooner or later we shall have time to die, and then the question will be whether we have indeed understood anything of this great gospel of which we are speaking to-night. It seems to me as if many thousands of men and women were saying to us, who profess to be Christians: "You profess the name of Christ, who gave his life for men, and we therefore ask you to follow his example, and give up something, so as to help us. He gave up his life; we ask you for his sake to give up a small indulgence, not a necessity, so that we may be helped in our struggle by your example and your influence. Paul said he would eat no flesh while the world stood, if flesh made his brother to offend. Surely we may say that drink ruins thousands every day, and so we appeal to you to throw it on one side for the sake of those who are weak and need your aid." Sure I am that, if we are led by Christ's spirit, we shall try to help our fellows; and no money and no words are so powerful as that personal example which proves our professions to be genuine, and not a mere matter of words lightly spoken and soon forgotten. I heard this morning a few words of a beautiful hymn, which I thought were very appropriate to the meeting of to-night, and I will conclude by quoting them:—

> "Come unto Me, ye weary,
> And I will give you rest;
> Oh, blessèd voice of Jesus,
> It comes to hearts oppress.
> It tells of benediction,
> Of pardon, grace, and peace,
> Of joy that hath no ending,
> Of love which cannot cease."

ADDRESS BY MR. FRANCIS MURPHY.

I am glad to be here this blessed Sabbath evening to speak to you upon this theme of the power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ to save to the uttermost all who will accept it. Our Chairman opened to us that great stream of salvation, the 8th chapter of Romans, out of the verses of which all the experiences of every man and woman are gathered up. I read a verse or two from Isaiah lxi. where that great Apostle of the Gospel, some 600 years before Christ had appeared, gave a beautiful description of Him. Looking down through the unborn ages he saw something of the stately steppings of the crucified One, who came to this world to teach us the Gospel of our blessed Father in heaven, and so he said: "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; He hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound."

It is a beautiful message, and, if you remember, when our Saviour entered the synagogue, He took up the Book and read that same verse. I was delighted with the Chairman's beautiful statement—how kind we ought to be towards each other, how merciful, seeing how easy it is for any of us to drift into a habit that we do not think injurious at the commencement. There is not a man in this house who, if he were asked the question, "Did you ever intend to be caught in the meshes of intemperance, or to become its slave, and have the word 'drunkard' written over your forehead?" would stand up and say that he expected any such thing to come upon him.

What is the truth about this evil? It is simply this, that this old country is the most hospitable country in the world; and this very beverage that has given us so much sorrow has stood as the emblem of hospitality and of good cheer from time immemorial. Whilst people are willing to shut up public-houses, and reduce licences, even men who do sign the pledge and put on the blue ribbon have not been able to empty their wine cellars, simply because they want to be hospitable. Now this is a fact; I know a great many good men who are in just this condition. Therefore, it is very necessary that we should all be kind and merciful and considerate in dealing with them. The great want of the present day is, for us men who are talking about this Gospel being able to save, to be anointed ourselves. If a man is anointed himself, if God has set his love upon him, if he is possessed of the Holy Spirit, if he has been thoroughly regenerated and disenthralled, and has had the witness of God's Spirit is his own heart, and is able to stand up and say, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," then he should be extremely tender to his brethren, knowing that but for God's mercy he himself would have been lost. There are many of us who are good at talking, but practising is a different thing. If there is anything that is beautiful in religion it is that it makes a man kind and loving to his wife and to his children. I want a man to begin to practice in that little circle called home. I have a great desire when my life's work is done that my children may say, "Well, I thank God for the memory of my father. He has been good to me." What we want is the Gospel in our hearts, nd to begin to practice it, no matter what it osts.

Love is the conquering and reclaiming power, nd there is nothing in this world that will ever ring it out of darkness, and out of sorrow, and ut of sin, like the Gospel of our blessed Lord nd Master Jesus Christ, who is the centre of ife, and the fountain of life, and who to-night s the inspiration of that blessed and holy theme. It is singular how we see it manifested in the experiences of fathers and mothers. I have yet in all my public experience to meet with a father or a mother who has ever deserted a child. Some of you may know instances of that kind. I do know just one, not where the mother deserted her boy, but where the brothers did. There are a great many who have brothers that do not leave home, but who, when the prodigal comes back, are much like the elder brother in the Gospel story, and will not come in, God help us to be kind when the prodigal comes home.

One of the saddest experiences of my life has been trying to save a widow's son. The family were in fine circumstances. The mother came to our prayer-meeting. She was one of the brightest little creatures in the world. She sent request after request for prayer for a boy that was a slave to drink—a great big handsome fellow who had been led into the habit of drinking, not in the public-house but in palatial residences, in beautiful drawing-rooms where he placed his feet under mahogany and moved amongst the cultured and refined. There he sipped the ruby wine, there the appetite was formed in him, until he came down into the streets and became so low that he took the last undergarment he had, folded it up, carried it away, and gave it to a man for the price of drink. That is the strength of this accursed thing, and if it ever seizes you young men as it seized me, and a multitude more like me, oh, be careful, for you may not escape. I escaped only with my life, by God's mercy. This mother asked me to go and see her son. I did, and the drink was written on every feature of his face. When I entered the room, George looked at me over a pair of glasses, and seemed quite astonished. He told me he was delighted to hear of the work I was doing, and wished me great success, and said he knew a number of friends whom he would endeavour to bring to the meeting and see if they could not be induced to sign the pledge. "There are always a few, you know," he remarked, "who take just a little too much." I walked close up to him, and caught his hand in mine. I did not know that he was this woman's son, but it had just dawned upon me. I called him by name. I said, "Your name is So-and-So. Your mother sent me to you. She has been in our prayer-meetings for two weeks praying for you." What happened do you suppose? That great, big man stood up, his lips quivered, and he said, "My mother! my mother!" and he turned away from me and sobbed as if his heart would break. Said I, "I want you to abstain. I want you to give your heart to Christ." He said, "I did not mean to tell you who I was, but I have broken my mother's heart."

That man came to the meeting. He kept his word, and brought a crowd with him. I noticed them at the back of the hall at the noon-day prayer meeting, and they were talking to each other. I noticed that the little woman in the hall had got a sight of him. The crowd moved round and surged along the aisle till they came in front of the platform. George was in that crowd. They wanted him to sign, but he said, "No, I won't sign." But when that mother came and put her arms round his neck and said, "George, you will sign," he said, "Yes, mother, I will for you." He did sign. I begged of that man to give his heart to God. I believe he did. But he was never really received by his brothers—never. He was not treated kindly. About a year after I came back to that city, and heard how he had broken his pledge and taken to drinking again. It was his last dissipation. He staggered into a little back lane in a court in the city, and that was the end of George.

Oh, the drink! oh, the drink! Oh, Christian people! I beseech you to-night, let us give up our little for the sake of the masses who are dropping down into the maelstrom, never again to come up. In Christ's name let us give it up, for the sake of the fallen. What was it that saved me? I am here to testify to the world to-night that I never would have lived had it not been that God had saved me. He saves to the uttermost, and by his grace and mercy I live. The miracle of his saving power shall be renewed. Kingdoms shall be subdued, and righteousness shall be established, and the last link in the accursed chain of this ungodly habit shall be broken, and every home shall be lit up with the grace and beauty and love of our blessed Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

ADDRESS BY MR. G. O. BARNES.

I want to keep in view the theme of this evening's discourse—"the Gospel the power of God unto salvation in delivering the enslaved." I truly believe that God gauges his blessed salvation for the weakest one that needs it, and if I can preach a Gospel for the weakest it shall be a Gospel for the strongest. Having read a long letter received by a recent mail, voluntarily sent to him by a friend who lives at Harrisburg, Kentucky, describing his redemption from the power of the drink, Mr. Barnes proceeded: The Gospel that could save that man could save you. If you had seen him you would believe it. He has not told the fiftieth part of his history. He was as full of whiskey as he could hold, for he was an old soaker upon whom no quantity of drink seemed to have any effect. Some people do not believe that Jesus can save a man in this condition. What a libel on the grace of God! This man was saved with his body reeking with drink. Yet the night after he had confessed the Lord Jesus Christ he slept like a baby; and from that time he was free. "The night before," he said, "I could not have written my name if I had died for it; now my hand was as steady as a rock, and it has been as steady as that ever since." It was an immediate cure. The man has testified, and I know that his witness is true—that he has never had the faintest desire for the accursed stuff since that hour.

That is the kind of Jesus Christ we want. We are all agreed that the Gospel is "the power of God unto salvation to them that believe." If we do not believe, God himself cannot save us. I speak with perfect reverence. Rejection is absolute destruction, and that is the only rejection I can find in the Bible. But then there comes back the question, What is the Gospel? Brother Francis Murphy spoke the truth when he said, "It is love that is going to conquer." It is God's love incarnate in his Son that is going to save all that are to be saved. "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." Jesus Christ upon the cross is the only hope of a lost world. He tasted death for every man—that is the Gospel as I know it. "God so loved the world"—loved it while it was yet unlovely, when it was as hateful as the devil could make it—"that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." That is the Gospel, and I could repeat fifty verses exactly the same. "Glory to God in the highest," was the answering echo from the heavenly host. Surely they know what the Gospel is—"On earth peace, good pleasure in men." The original is even a little stronger, it means "Good pleasure in men as men." Not in people who believe in Jesus Christ, and in men who have turned over a new leaf. The sweet joy of a saint is, that when he does right he knows his Father is well-pleased with him. But back of all that there is "glory to God in the highest, peace on earth and good pleasure in men," as men. When they are naughty? Yes. If He has not good pleasure in us when we are naughty, He has it not at all, for we are always naughty more or less. Even the best of us have our naughty points; so He has to put up with some naughtiness any way.

Does God take pleasure in the sinner? Yes. In the liar? Yes. In the drunkard? Yes. In the rum-seller? Yes. This blue ribbon means to me good pleasure in the rum seller as well as in the drunkard, for both have souls, and both are equally men. If this movement ever deteriorates into a deadly fight with rum-sellers your cause is gone. If you do not deal with rum-sellers as God is dealing with you your work will come to nought. This is the backbone of the Gospel, as clearly as the Alps are the backbone of Europe—that God has nothing against any man, woman, or child, in this world. The reason is simple, that Christ atoned for all sin. He "bore our sins in his own body on the tree." Blessed be his name, He went deeper than that! He put away sin, root and branch, by the sacrifice of Himself, That is the reason Jesus Christ received sinners, and ate with them. He did not die to save good people—there were none. That is the reason Jesus Christ justifies the ungodly; and if ever He is to justify any one it must be the ungodly.

I believe in a man being saved first, and getting good afterwards. That was what saved this man whose letter I read. I said to him, "My friend, God has got nothing against you." That was the first word that struck his poor dull ear. It is the only thing that will touch a man full of self-accusation—"God has nothing against you, whatever you may have against yourself." Having nothing against you, there is no reason why you should not come to Him. He says, "Take my Son: confess Him as best you can." Then I remember the words he said: "There was one thing you spoke that clenched the nail; you said,

> 'Just as I am, without one plea,
> But that thy blood was shed for me.'"

"If you will confess that Saviour as yours, if you accept Jesus as you are, and not as you are not; if you will take that Saviour, and you are not saved, then I will be damned in your place." Said he, "That is a fair proposition." That was the only thing that the poor stupefied wretch could lay hold of, and he said, "I will close with that proposition." He came forward, assisted by his friends, took Jesus as his Saviour, and that letter tells the result. He has never wavered for a single moment. All that God asks of you is to confess Him as your Saviour; and then, if you want to be delivered from the power of strong drink, do not be ashamed to keep on confessing Him. If you will confess the Saviour, He will deliver you. That is the sweet Gospel of the Grace of God, if I know it.

ADDRESS BY MR. T. E. MURPHY.

I am thankful for the success of those who have been labouring in this cause; and I hope and trust the work will go on until every home in this great city shall feel its blessed influence. There are some people who, before they engage in this work, desire to be convinced from a scientific standpoint. This, in itself, is very proper, but there is a higher ground than that occupied by the logician; there is a nobler attitude than that which is assumed by the scientist. The philosophy of this Book teaches us that love is the basis of all true and noble action. Those who love not labour not, but what we love we labour for. Hence it is that this work is dedicated to that fundamental virtue, and it illustrates its power and beauty by the lives of those who have suffered and died for love. I have read the history of that wonderful man who stopped not to admire the mountain-top, with its eternal diadem of snow, nor the wild flow of falling waters, nor the stately piles of architecture; but in the dungeon and in the pest-house he stayed among the lowly, pointing their eye of faith to a home beyond the tomb. When Howard died, the dust of earthly toil was upon his garments, and the damp of the dungeon was upon his brow; but his memory lives to-night to bless humanity as much as ever it did.

There are those here to-night who remember, and those like myself who do not remember, but have read, that when pride and ambition plunged the nations of the East into a bloody war, thousands fell by cannon and by sword, while tens of thousands perished by the slow hand of disease. Ambition and selfishness neglected their wants, but their wail of suffering reached one sympathising heart at least, and from a pleasant English home, where Christian refinement dwelt, and where all the elements of wealth and culture prevailed, there came forth a young and devoted woman, in whose heart that wail had vibrated as the voice of God. The sneer of the cold-hearted, the breath of the slanderous, affected her not. The love of home, the novelty of the position, and, as some urged, its impropriety, affected her no more than did the pictures which were drawn of the corruptions of a soldier's life, the contagions of the hospital, and the perils to which her life would be exposed. Love—pure, holy, godlike—swelled her heart, and sustained her among the sick and dying in the Crimea. To her the bursting bomb, the roaring cannon, the rattling musketry, the flashing sabres, spoke no words of terror; but the grateful utterances of the relieved sick was as the dew of heaven to her heart and the music of the blest to her ears. Her reward of love is sure; for though the sweetest songster of the grove has ever borne her name, and night after night warbles in our ears the melodies which link that name to richest notes of harmony, yet even its music shall be forgotten in the gush of holy joy that fills all angels' hearts at the mention of the name of Florence Nightingale. The spirit that actuated John Howard to administer to the wants of the prisoner, and actuated Florence Nightingale to administer to the sick and dying upon the battle-field, is worthy of emulation in all who are engaged in Gospel Temperance work.

ADDRESS BY MR. WILLIAM NOBLE.

Allow me to tell you how it was I got the blessing which Mr. Francis Murphy spoke of to-night, and of which he read to us in the sixty-first chapter of Isaiah. How can I preach this Gospel? "Because the Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, and because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings." In 1877, just on the eve of my departure for England (I was at the time in New York), John B. Gough said: "I want you to come with me to Jerry McAulay's Mission Hall." I said, "Who is Jerry McAulay?" "He is a converted riverside thief." I said, "That is a pretty sort of company to keep, but I will go anywhere with you." That night I was driven by Mr. Gough to Jerry McAulay's, who received us in the ante-room—not a very lively-looking place. I saw he was in earnest. Turning to Mr. Gough he said, "We generally have a few words of prayer before we go into the Mission room," and Jerry asked me to pray. He soon got the straight tip that that was not in my line. Until a man knows of a truth that his sins are blotted out of God's Book of Remembrance he will never pray. I said to Mr. McAulay, "I would rather not." He prayed, and just asked God to bless John B. Gough and William Noble. By and bye we entered the meeting, and Jerry gave out—

> "The mistakes of my life have been many,
> The sins of my heart have been more."

Then said Jerry, "We will have a few verses from the Word; after that Mr. Gough will occupy ten minutes, Mr. Noble ten minutes, and you good people can have a minute each."

"This is something new," I said. "It takes me five minutes to get into my subject. Speak for a minute!" Ah, they said in a minute what I could not say in an hour! One man got up and said: "I thank God that Jesus not only saves me from drinking, but from smoking, from lying, from stealing, and swearing; bless his holy name." A woman got up and said: "Since I have been converted I say 'please' and 'thank you.'" Ah! it is a sign that a change has taken place in a man's heart when he is grateful; but there are men and women in this city who are not thankful even to their earthly saviour, putting God on one side. As I stood upon that platform listening to those experiences, my heart longed to know what these converted drunkards and thieves knew. "Oh!" I said, "would to God that I could get rid of William Noble, to-night, and know of a truth that I am anointed," for there was a good deal said about the anointing power.

I returned to England in the month of December, 1877. I said to my wife, "I am going to give up lecturing." "Then," she said, "what are you going to do?" "Well," I said, "I can see that my first step is to give up everything, and never rest till I can stand before an audience and say, 'I know in whom I have believed.'" To-day, sir, we have men and women who repeat, every Sabbath, "I believe in the forgiveness of sins," who come and tell us it is presumption to testify that Jesus saves. I know to-night, blessed be God—I say it humbly—that my name is written in the Lamb's Book of Life. Jesus Christ is my Saviour, and God is my Father, and the Holy Spirit my Comforter. I met a friend in the City one morning, and I told him the state in which I was. He said, "Come to the noon-day prayer-meeting." Blessed noon-day prayer-meeting for me, at 165, Aldersgate-street! This was the thought that flashed through my mind: "Wilt thou have this man to reign over thee? Art thou willing to have a funeral, and to bury William Noble? Oh, yes; let William Noble go into the grave. Let self be buried, and let Christ arise." And He did that day. Rev. William Cuff was there, from the East London Tabernacle, and he came up and gripped me by the hand. From that time I have gone up and down this town, and many another, with a clean bill of health.

This is the closing day of the Mission. How stands it with you and God? If sudden death were to come to-night would it be sudden glory? Then the only way to be ready for eternity is to take Him. As brother Barnes put it at one of our meetings in Hoxton Hall: "There is no need to get down on your knees and howl for an hour." The sin question was settled upon the Cross 1900 years ago. Blessed Jesus, we take that finished work to-night. It is thy work for us. Let that be the crowning work in this Mission, that tens and scores of men and women in Exeter Hall on this 3rd of June will find acceptance in Jesus.

THE FISHERIES EXHIBITION.—Messrs. A. Boot & Son, 24, Old Bailey, E. C., have issued a twopenny "District Railway Guide and Directory to the Exhibition." It contains an excellent coloured ground-plan of the Exhibition, and gives a large body of information on the various exhibits.

KING EDWARD RAGGED SCHOOLS.—The last report of these schools states that there are 761 children on the books of the Sunday and week evening schools. During the winter Sunday evenings 200 are frequently sent away for want of room. The various branches report satisfactorily, the Mission services for adults and Band of Hope especially. Prizes were gained this year by 58 scholars for good conduct in their situations. The Secretary is Mr. C. Montague, 67, Turner-street, E.

A CONVENTION will be held at Norwich, July 11 and 12. The subjects are, Wednesday morning, "The Lord Jesus Christ as the Revealer and Representative of God to Man; evening, "The Lord Jesus Christ as the Substitute for, and Representative of, Man to God." Thursday morning, "The Holy Spirit applying the Redemption of Christ in conversion and sanctification;" evening, "The Holy Spirit enduing believers with power for service." This will be the first Conference of the kind ever held in Norwich, and prayer is earnestly desired for its success in the highest sense. The Committee includes members of many sections of the Church.

REV. W. H. AITKEN AT PENGE.

DURING the last two weeks Mr. Aitken has been working with much encouragement at Penge-lane Church, where the Rev. Mr. Dankes and his fellow-workers had made very earnest preparations for the Mission. The meetings began on Sunday, the 3rd, and as the church is in close proximity to Mr. McAnally's, where Mr. Aitken had been previously labouring, there was from the first great preparedness to receive the Word. Many had been already impressed and awakened at the other church.

There was hopeful work each night, but on the evening of Friday week the impression was very powerful, and the large vestries were crowded with anxious souls. Sunday week will be forever memorable to many. Mr. Aitken invited the anxious to cross the road and meet him in the schoolroom. A very large number at once complied with this direction, indeed, many more than could be spoken to, and a very blessed season followed, in which it is hoped many sought and found a Saviour. All praise to the Lord of the harvest for this day of visitation.

The second week of the Mission passed with a great measure of interest and of blessing. The congregations were much larger, and, so far as man can judge, each night there was quite a harvest of souls. Much prayer had been offered for the members of the very numerous Church choir, and as the week closed thanksgivings were returned for the spiritual blessing that had fallen on almost all these men. There is "great joy" in this parish, and many from the surrounding neighbourhood seem to have received blessing. Mr. Aitken and his helpers concluded their work here on Sunday last.

COLLINGWOOD-STREET MISSION, S.E.

THE sixth anniversary of this Mission was held on Friday evening, the 8th inst. The chair was taken by Mr. F. A. Bevan, who, in his opening remarks, expressed his very great pleasure at being invited to such a meeting, and also his surprise at having been so long connected with nearly every kind of Christian work in London and never till very recently heard of this Mission. He commented on the self-supporting nature of the work, and said it was a matter of much congratulation for him to find a Mission which had never been in debt, and which was entirely voluntary from beginning to end. It was also pleasing to find that working-men, after the labours of the day, were willing to employ their time and energies in such a work. Several bore testimony to the good they had received through the instrumentality of this Mission. One who had spent nine years in prison spoke with much feeling of the great change that had taken place in his heart and life. Another, who had been engaged in the Zulu War, rejoiced that he was spared to return to England, and has since found the Saviour.

A letter was received and read from the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon expressing his deep interest in the work of the Mission, and recommended some one to be set apart to give his whole time to the work, so that a system of visitation might be carried on, and that the work among the Church members might not be neglected, promising for this purpose a yearly contribution of £10. Mr. F. A. Bevan promised a similar sum, and Mr. G. Hatton promised £5 per year. It is earnestly hoped that other Christian friends will come forward to assist in this object.

Mr. Joseph Ashton, 41, Queen-street, Blackfriars-road, is the secretary.

WINTERBOURNE GUNNER, near Salisbury, has been visited with a gracious revival in connection with the labours of Mr. William Skinner, of the Evangelisation Society, who has been working in the village at intervals during the past eight months. As an outcome of the work a Prayer Union has been formed. The members belong principally to the labouring class. The idea has been found to work well and has proved most helpful to the young converts. The Union has been formed about two months, and now numbers nearly fifty members.

A COLLEGE FOR LIBERIA.

AN afternoon in the middle of June, with the thermometer at 80° in the shade, does not seem a favourable time for a successful public meeting. There was an unusual combination of platform attractions announced for the meeting in Exeter Hall last week in connection with the College for Liberia, and the occasion had been well advertised; yet the audience that was drawn together at no time much exceeded a hundred persons.

Among those who were expected to speak, the Earl of Aberdeen, and Mr. Lowell, the American Minister, sent messages of inability to attend; the latter gentleman, however, said he believed the object of the meeting to be an excellent one, and he would send a contribution towards it.

In the temporary absence of Lord Shaftesbury Lord Kinnaird assumed the chair, and Archdeacon Farrar opened with two brief prayers. Then Professor Stewart, one of the two coloured teachers now on their way to Liberia, had the platform, and made his statement. He was sure, he said, of the sympathy of English Christians in this cause. After an eloquent description of the degradation of the negro race through the influence of the slave trade, he briefly sketched the origin and progress of the colony of Liberia. With the aid of England the slave trade had been abolished all along the western coast. In response to an earnest call from a Liberian chief, a lady in New York had devoted a portion of her wealth to the founding of a church and school in the colony. There is a population of 30,000 negroes, who have gone, or descended from those who have gone, from America, and 80,000 aborigines. Mr. Joseph Cook, of Boston, has said, in a recent letter, that Liberia should be "a pillar of fire leading all Africa out of the deserts of Paganism into the promised land of advanced civilisation and undefiled Christianity." The work of the Liberian College has received the imprimatur of many leading philanthropists of Boston and New York. A female department has been added and also an agricultural department, while the latter branch of the work will be greatly developed by the removal of the college itself, from the coast, to a healthier and more central position in the interior. Twenty-six coloured students, undergraduates of colleges in the Southern States, are about to sail for the Liberian College. If all these students are possessed of a tithe of the eloquence and fervour of Professor Stewart, they will be a wonderful acquisition to the ranks of those who are seeking to train the coloured population of Western Africa for God and for heaven. His companion, Professor Browne, has not the same overpowering gift of speech, but in a few sentences he was able to show that the thoughtful young negrohood in America are all looking anxiously to the extension of this movement as one of the great hopes for the future of the race.

After some sympathetic remarks by Sir T. Fowell Buxton, Rev. Dr. Phillips Brooks, of Boston, endorsed the statements of Professor Stewart as to the favour with which the Liberian movement had been received in the United States. He had much admiration for those young men, such as the two who were present, who had relinquished a much easier and more promising career, in a material sense, in America, and were going forth to Africa—the land of the past and the future of their race. While he believed this with respect to Africa, he thought at the same time that it was quite a mistake to say that the negroes were not needed in America. America is the home of all peoples, and the recent legislation by which the door had been shut upon one of the most wonderful races in the world was something of which his country ought to be ashamed. He had the most profound conviction as to the suitability and need of this Liberian College, and he thought England and America could not better show their mutual sympathy than in helping their brethren of the coloured races. Dr. Brooks moved a resolution appointing an English committee for the furtherance of this movement. It includes several of the most influential philanthropists of the time, Mr. A. Burson, of Exeter Hall, being honorary secretary. The resolution was seconded by Dr. Donald Fraser in an able and hearty address, who said that while other European nations had ambitions of a doubtful character with respect to Africa, England ought to have an ambition of a better and more beneficent character.

Mr. T. A. Denny moved the thanks of the meeting to Lord Shaftesbury, and Professor Stewart seconded in a very touching speech. His Lordship, in reply, said he rejoiced to think that he dwelt in the minds and hearts of the coloured people, in whose welfare he had felt a deep interest for many years. He thanked God for the changed feelings in America towards the coloured people, as evidenced by the presence and earnest speech of Dr. Brooks. He believed that England had done a great wrong to America in the past by the share she had in imposing the system of slavery upon the American Continent; we ought now to make restitution by seeking to forward the cause of the blacks. His lordship alluded to the unworthy opinions that had been sometimes expressed as to the negroes being an inferior race, an idea that was confuted by the work of the Jubilee Singers, as well as by the addresses of the coloured gentlemen on the platform, who had exhibited such a deeply earnest missionary spirit. These colour distinctions ought now to cease, and the truth be recognised, that God had "made of one blood all nations for to dwell on the face of the earth."

The interesting proceedings were terminated by Rev. Dr. Oswald Dykes pronouncing the benediction.

WORKING LADS' INSTITUTE, WHITECHAPEL.

A FEW years ago, in conversation with a London errand-boy, about sixteen years of age, I found that he had left Sunday-school, and attended no place of worship; nor did he pray or read his Bible. On the other hand, he was so fascinated by the sensational, illustrated literature of the day that he would read it while walking in Cheapside with a basket of goods on his head.

Here was a lad living in the midst of Christians and Christian agencies, but untouched by them. Indeed, his was a godless and practically a heathen life. I reflected that this youth was but a type and representative of thousands in the metropolis who daily earn their bread by hard labour, either as errand boys, apprentices, or factory hands. Many of them live in homes destitute of comfort, and others in wretched lodgings, and experience teaches us that their dangers and temptations are very real. During the day they may be thrown into contact with men who drink and swear; they may also be tempted to untruth and dishonesty; but the temptations between the hour of leaving work, about 7 o'clock, and the time for retiring to rest, say 10 o'clock, are certain and unmistakable.

It is sometimes said that these youthful toilers should spend their evenings "at home," but a moment's reflection will show this to be a mistake. Were their abodes like the happy Christian homes of some of the middle classes the case would be different, but being what they are it is impossible. The mother has often a large family: the living-room is small and there is perhaps washing going on. The lad would only be in the way, and is not expected nor wanted until bed-time. Then, what is he to do? There are the streets: but I think no one who sees them as they are at night would wish him to spend his hours wandering aimlessly in them. The public-house is always open, so is the music hall, the low theatre, or penny gaff. These resorts, I believe, are the ruin yearly of hundreds of bright and virtuous lads, who enter them because they know not where else to spend their leisure.

Looking at this condition of things, and the grave issues involved, I felt constrained to make some effort, and wrote a letter to The Christian. Many and cheering were the responses, expressing sympathy and promising help. It seemed that, to effect good, the first thing must be to save our youth from these baneful places by providing some resort which the boys might frequent every evening; there might then be opportunities of influencing them. Hence a house was taken in the main road, Whitechapel, and opened as a Working Lads' Institute. It was an experiment, and some friends feared could never succeed—for either the lads would not come, or even, should we get them, they would leave as soon as they discovered the nature of the literature and resources provided.

Seven years have passed away, and we can say, "Ebenezer." The following facts may be of interest: Within a month of the opening, 166 had paid subscriptions and become members, and some of them are still with us. Altogether nearly a thousand have attended, including a number of Jews.

We begin to see some fruit from the work. Some of the lads have joined the City of London College, others are now in the Y.M.C.A. Several have become teachers in the Institute, while more may be found filling posts of usefulness as secretaries of Sunday-schools and Temperance Societies, and lay preachers. One is an assistant missionary in South Africa. We have precious letters telling of good done and hearts and lives given to Christ.

Our aim is large and high: The physical, mental, moral, and spiritual improvement of all we can reach. The whole nature should be trained and devoted to God, and the means must be adapted. Lads need recreation and mental culture, as well as the heart won for Jesus. Hence our programme comprises reading-room and library, classes for reading, writing, arithmetic, drawing, singing, shorthand, French, &c. Lectures and entertainments, cricket and swimming, Temperance savings bank, clothing-club, &c. Bible-class and evangelistic services, and other agencies. Several other institutes have since been started, directly or indirectly in connection with ours, and are doing good.

The premises at Whitechapel are small, and for a long time our work has been sadly hindered for want of accommodation. Two years ago it was decided to start a fund for a new Institute, which might meet the urgent need. After a long and prayerful search, a suitable plot of freehold land (over 200ft. deep) was secured, the price being £1950. Designs have been prepared for the buildings, which will comprise reading, refreshment, and class-rooms, dormitories, lecture-hall (which can be used for Gospel services) swimming-bath, gymnasium, housekeeper's apartments, &c. These will cost about £6000, making a total outlay of £8000. The property will be vested in trustees.

The Committee and friends have raised £2,600. The ground is paid for, and there is about £200 now in hand. In other words, we still require some £6000, and we cannot commence building until we have at least £2000 more. We seem to have come to a standstill. The need of such an institute is most pressing. It would accommodate about 1000 lads annually, and once erected would, we are persuaded, prove an incalculable blessing. It grieves us not to be able to go forward, but we have done what we can, and know not to whom to look for contributions. We are praying and waiting for God's guidance and help. The treasurer is Mr. Frank A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

"THE MORNING WATCH."—This is the title of a new association, the members of which undertake to rise early and spend a short time in private prayer, praise and reading God's Word. A little book, entitled "The Morning Watch," which gives full information on the subject, may be obtained from Rev. J. T. Wrenford, St. Paul's Vicarage, Newport, Mon. (price 6d. per dozen).

COLPORTAGE WORK.—A sale of work on behalf of the City of London Colportage Union was recently held in the City Temple. Dr. Parker explained the aim of the union, which he said was to displace bad books by good ones. Mr. S. Morley, M.P., in commending the effort to the sympathy of the public, urged others to adopt a custom he and his wife observed, of carrying little books for distribution as opportunity offered.

MR. HENRY THORNE IN DERBY.

A NINE days' Mission has been conducted here by Mr. Thorne. The Committee of the Derby Y.M.C.A. invited him, and are now thankfully rejoicing in the success that has been vouchsafed. Mr. Thorne, besides being an able Missioner, has remarkable powers of administration, so that the arrangements made were in every way complete. The manifested unity between members of the different congregations —Episcopalian, Baptist, Congregational, Wesleyan, &c. has been a most striking feature.

Night after night, in steadily increasing numbers, the largest room in the town was thronged. At the close the same building, which was only large enough for the meeting of the Church Congress last year, was filled to the very end. The large proportion of men who came was very noticeable. Many, both men and women, remained afterwards for prayer and to receive personally further help and exhortation. At these after-meetings, Mr. Thorne was aided by a large band of workers. Those entrusted with this important and delicate duty had been selected by the various ministers who were in sympathy with the Mission.

On the Sunday immediately following, two Mission sermons were, by request of the Committee, preached in as many of the churches and chapels as possible, and Rev. Sholto D. C. Douglas, Rector of All Souls, Marylebone, London, preached on the following Wednesday to a crowded congregation at All Saints. The work is being still continued by a series of weekly addresses, especially for those who have received blessing, to be given by different ministers, on "Worldly Conformity," "Holding Fast," "Prayer," "Confessing Christ," and "Dedication," and on "Searching the Scriptures," by Mr. Thorne. A "Bible Searching Union" has already been formed, and has commenced weekly meetings with good prospect of continuance.

The Derby branch of the Y.M.C.A. is taking advantage of the occasion to consolidate its work in this and other ways. It has expressed, in more definite terms than we have seen before, the object of such an association, viz., "The well-being of young men—spirit, soul, and body —for time and eternity;" and this Mission is proof that whilst the Y.M.C.A. is essentially a lay movement, independent of ecclesiastical control, the evangelical churches are not only not ignored by it, but are regarded with feelings of cordial respect and active sympathy. The Derby branch has been happy in securing at this important juncture the services of an able, experienced, and energetic local secretary, so that there is good promise that Mr. Thorne's Mission will be remembered by its outcome in an increase in the town of practical and united Christian work.

THE FERNLEY LECTURE this year is to be delivered by the Rev. William Arthur. It is sure to possess more than ordinary interest for all who have valued Mr. Arthur's ministry and personal friendship in the past.

INDIGENT BLIND VISITING SOCIETY.—Lord Shaftesbury presided last Friday afternoon at the annual meeting of this society, at Farnley House, Chelsea Embankment, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Armitage. The total number of blind persons visited is 811, of whom fifty are suspended from relief for want of subscribers. These are visited by nine visitors, who are themselves blind. London is divided into nine districts for the purpose. About thirty of the blind educated in the classes are now regularly employed by the British and Foreign Blind Association as writers of embossed manuscripts on the Braille system, and the Bible has been stereotyped in the Braille type by a blind man. Lord Shaftesbury commended the work of the society, and enlarged upon the deplorable calamity from which the poor blind suffered. The claims of the society were also advocated by Rev. Dr. D. Fraser, Canon Fleming, Mr. W. J. Armitage, Major Fitzroy, and Dr. Armitage, the last of whom gave some details of the work of the society. It was, he said, the great missionary society to the blind in London, and they could certainly judiciously distribute treble their income. If the blind folks could do work, they were taught to earn their own living, thereby making them independent members of society as far as possible.

THE STORY OF MY DUTCH PICTURE.

By GAWIN KIRKHAM.

IN August, 1867, I visited Holland, to attend the General Conference of the Evangelical Alliance, held at Amsterdam. This led to other visits during the two following years. Altogether, on these three occasions, I spent ten weeks in that country. The time was chiefly occupied inpreaching by interpretation; and the Lord graciously confirmed the Word with signs following, for I have no doubt of the conversion of sinners by the preaching of the Word.

Though at first told by the public prosecutor that I should be put in prison if I preached in the streets, afterwards I had the joy of thus proclaiming the Gospel in the Hague and other places. This joy was shared by my fellow-labourer, Robert Craig. Mr. Isaac Esser, one of my interpreters, and himself the most diligent of Dutch open-air preachers, wrote some years afterwards, that, in a low street in the Hague, which I very distinctly remember, the effects of the preaching were so striking that "the police have almost nothing more to do;" and so remarkable was the change that the burgomaster declared that "One good street preacher is worth ten policemen;" a verdict, by the way, which I should like to see generally adopted by English mayors.

But the most interesting reminder of these visits is an allegorical picture, entitled "The Broad and the Narrow Way." My kind host in Amsterdam was a bookseller, Mr. De Hoogh. In his shop window was a chromo-lithograph of this picture, about twenty-four inches by nineteen. Day after day I looked at it, and on returning to England brought two copies with me. But as the "Explanation" was still in Dutch, I made but slow progress in unfolding its meaning. By and by I induced my young Dutch friend, Frederick Emmighausen, to translate this into good English, and thus I obtained the key of the position. Then I attempted to describe it, and my hearers were evidently so deeply interested, that I decided to have an enlarged copy painted. This proved too small to be of any practical value, so I had a larger one made, and then another; and finally, rather more than two years ago, Henry Bevis, the scene-painter, of Pentonville-hill, prepared me a copy, nine feet by twelve, which, with a "new quintuple dual illuminator," an invention of a friend who is an engineer, enables me to show it with comfort while I am expounding it.

The picture may be described as a kind of Continental "Pilgrim's Progress," and is based upon the passage in the Sermon on the Mount, beginning, "Enter ye in at the strait gate," &c. (Matt. vii. 13, 14). In the general foreground are a number of persons, rich and poor, making their choice of two gates, one very wide and the other very narrow; the one with a fine "Welcome" over it, and the other with a plain inscription, "Enter ye in at the strait gate." Venus and Bacchus invite to the unsatisfactory pleasures of the one way, while a preacher tries to induce the people to enter the other. In the centre of the foreground are the Tables of the Law—the Ten Commandments, with grapes and corn on the right-hand side, to signify blessing and fruitfulness; while on the other side are thorns and briars, and the crawling serpent, signifying barrenness and the curse.

The Broad Way contains the house of the strange woman under the shadow of the theatre; a worldly inn, presided over by Bacchus; a ball-room; a band of music; a gambling house; a house of such as take a pledge of the poor; a market-place; a lottery-table; cruelty to animals; children disobeying their parents; a Sunday train, and a battle-field; while a second preacher stands far up the road warning the travellers to turn from their evil ways. The end of the road shows the unerring balances of justice, and the awful doom of the wicked, who are sent into "everlasting punishment."

On entering the Narrow Way there is a fountain with Rev. xxii. 17 over it. Then a cross is seen on which is an image of the crucified Redeemer, near which is a friendly church, with a minister giving the cup of communion to a new convert. Then a series of steps are climbed and a Sunday-school is seen, opposite which is a man carrying his cross. A little further on is a hospital, deaconess house, and an open-air preaching crowd, representing the place for good works. Here a prodigal is restored, and soon after a lion is met and conquered. Then a steep hill is climbed, and soon the New Jerusalem is reached. As the pilgrims approach the city they see a rainbow, and over all is the eye of the triune Jehovah. Suitable texts are given, so that with an open Bible the picture is self-interpreting to a considerable extent.

I knew from the first that the original was a German production; but only last year did I see a German copy, and receive information of its origin. It appears that it was designed more than thirty years ago by a pious lady, the wife of a wealthy merchant in Stuttgart, named Reihlen, and that she induced a gentleman of the name of Walker, an amateur artist, also of Stuttgart, to paint it. This gentleman died about a year ago. It was then circulated as a wall-print throughout Germany; and the Dutch, struck with its suitableness to convey moral and religious truth, made a Dutch edition.

Such is a brief description of the picture and account of its origin. I am afraid to say how many times I have expounded it during the last eight or ten years; but I know it is exactly ninety-five times in the eight months ending May 31.

It has a Mission in this country. God has blessed it to the turning of sinners from the broad into the narrow way, as is proved by a number of testimonies I gratefully treasure. This account is written at the request of friends, who wish its existence to be more widely known. Copies may be had and particulars obtained at the Open-Air Mission Office, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

WE are glad to find many of the influential residents of the metropolis are beginning to bestir themselves on the question of street immorality. At the invitation of Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe a number of gentlemen from different parts of London met at the residence of the Marquis of Ailsa, in Charles-street, Berkeley-square, on the 11th inst., to consider the best means of closing houses of evil resort, and cleansing the streets from the unblushing incitements to sin that are seen on every hand. The hope was strongly expressed that the Bill for the better protection of young girls, recently introduced into the Upper House of Parliament, would, with some needful alterations, speedily become law, and that the painful scenes now witnessed would be effectually put down.

Meantime it was urged that Vigilance Commitees should beformed in every district throughout the metropolis, to act in concert with the police, as has been already done in the parish of St. Jude's, King's-cross, with good results. Among those who took part in the proceedings were Revs. H. W. Webb-Peploe (Chairman), Sholto Douglas, — Andrews (Vicar of St. Jude's), Sir William Muir, Lord Radstock, Mr. S. Morley, M.P., &c.

At the annual meeting of the Social Purity Alliance last week, in Exeter Hall, Canon Wilberforce made an eloquent and telling speech. He said if the evil of social impurity was ever to be stamped out they must go to the root of the matter, and not deal merely with the symptoms. In this matter a tremendous burden rested with the ladies, who ought to show, unmistakably, their detestation of transgressors in the other sex. If all who were known to be the betrayers of womanly honour were excluded from respectable society, a greater blow would be dealt at the evils with which the Purity Alliance contended than by any other means. Other speakers also insisted on the meting out of equal punishment, at least, to the male partners in vice, who in most cases are the sorest offenders.

The "Summing Up" of the Lord Chief Justice in the recent trial of Messrs. Foote and Ramsey, for blasphemous libel, revised, and with a preface by his lordship, is published by Messrs. Stevens & Sons, 119, Chancery-lane, W.C. Price 1s.

The Church Portrait Journal for June (6d. W. Poole) contains a most excellent photographic portrait of Rev. W. H. Aitken, with a short but correct and comprehensive biographical sketch. Many of the friends of the eminent evangelist will doubtless be glad to possess themselves of the magazine, which also has a portrait and sketch of Rev. Prebendary Meyrick.

The Church. By a Layman. 6d. W. Ridgway, 109, Piccadilly. A useful little treatise on an important theme, designed to promote a more careful and definite use of the term "Church" than at present prevails. It is likely to be serviceable in arousing inquiry and leading to further breaking away from mere ecclesiasticism and human priestcraft.

Mr. F. E. Longley, 39, Warwick-lane, has issued a series of penny handbooks on the "Married Women's Property Act," "Liability of Employers," "Bills of Sale," and "Sale of Food and Drugs;" also "Our Eastern Cathedrals," "Watering Places," "The Rhine," "Channel Islands," and "Amsterdam." For persons seeking information on these topics the brochures will be found serviceable.

Murray's London Time Tables & Diary. 3d. A. Boot & Son. This most excellent and handy little work of reference continues to keep the traveller informed of the latest changes and improvements in city and suburban railway accommodation. Messrs. Boot also publish a Shippers' Diary and Mercantile Register (1d.), which ought to prove of great service to all connected with trade.

Studies in Anthropology. By the Rev. Jas. Woolcock. Bible Christian Book Room, 26, Paternoster-row. A volume of lectures delivered before the Jersey Young Men's Christian Association, with the object of guarding young men against the scepticism of the day, and to strengthen them in the Christian faith. The subjects treated on are: "Man: Whence came he?" "What is he?" "His relation to the Unseen;" "His World," and "His Work." They are full of striking quotations from various authors, are sound and logical in their reasoning, and admirably adapted for the end they have in view.

Eudokia: The Angels' Song. By Theophilus, A.M. of Glasgow University. Elliot Stock. The author in his preface brings a very heavy charge against the Revised New Testament, which he declares "to be wonderfully like the Popish Douay or Rhemish New Testament in English, rendered from the Roman or Latin Vulgate, only outdoing that version in retaining all its corruptions; in importing into the text many changes of a most doubtful character, and in casting out the most precious Scriptures without cause or reason shown." The object of the book is to substantiate this charge. We think the author overstates his case, and fails to do justice either to the revisers or the revision. Their work is by no means perfect, but spite of some defects, which in common with himself we should desire to see remedied, there are yet many commendable points, and the revisionists are worthy of praise rather than censure for their painstaking, and we believe, honest attempt to faithfully translate the original text.

The Expositor. 1s. Hodder and Stoughton. This learned monthly represents a broader school of theology than we feel justified in following. Nevertheless, we must bear witness to the singular ability, devoutness, and earnestness of the writers, and that for the most part its pages are doing valuable service in the exposition of the common truths held by Christian men. The articles are always in defence of Revelation, and while discrimination may be necessary, they may be read with profit by all Bible students. Sometimes indeed they may be read with the highest advantage even by men whose convictions move firmly along Evangelical lines. In the last three numbers we would specially note the Editor's "Chronicle of Balaam," "Isaiah, an Ideal Biography," by Dr. Plumptre, and a most valuable and remarkable paper on "The Day of Judgment" by Dr. Matheson. We would also note with gratitude a brief exposition of Philippians i. 22 by Dr. Weymouth.

From Ward, Lock, & Co. we have received Parts 31 and 32 of The Universal Instructor, 6d., which well sustain the reputation of former issues. The diagrams are good, and the varied instruction is conveyed in an interesting and popular way. From the same publishers we have received Parts 25 and 26 of Dr. Adam Clarke's Commentary, which embrace Matthew xii. to Luke v. (1s. each) The exhaustive and scholarly comments form a body of divinity easily accessible to the Bible student.

Little Folks. 3s. 6d. Cassell & Co. The midsummer volume of this popular serial for the young, just issued, is a perfect storehouse of pictorial and literary gems. We know of no magazine of its kind on which so much skill and talent are lavished, and the publishers richly deserve the large support they receive from the youthful reading public. The "Little Folks" Humane Society now numbers, we are told, more than 33,000 members; we hope its ranks will be doubled during the next six months. A very attractive programme is announced for July and the succeeding months; now is the time for those who are not readers to become so.

Sunday Meditations. By Daniel Moore, M.A., Prebendary of St. Paul's. 5s. Religious Tract Society. A thoroughly excellent and precious book. We have read the "Meditations" with great personal profit, and in all the fifty-five, extending over 320 pp., there is not a wrong or doubtful evangelical note. They are, it is true, arranged for the seasons of the ecclesiastical year, but there is nothing merely sectional about them. They are suitable for all Christians who love the tender and faithful presentation of Scriptural truth. They are at once instructive, practical, and consolatory; and they are all this because based on a faithful exposition of the inspired teaching of the Word of God.

Heroes of Science: Chemists. By M. M. Pattison Muir, M.A., F.R.S.E. Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. Excellent service has been rendered to thousands of youths and students in Great Britain by the publication of this beautiful volume. We have read its pages with surprise and admiration. Chemistry can never be treated in a popular manner like the science of astronomy. But in this book the history and progress of chemistry are traced from the earliest times to our own in a form that gains the attention of the reader, and conveys, with singular freedom from mere technicality, the most important scientific knowledge. The biographies of such great chemists as Priestley, Dalton, Davy, Graham, and Liebig, which are grouped round the accounts of their discoveries, give a great charm to the book.

Roman Britain. By Rev. Prebendary Scarth. Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. This is a small but most attractive volume, upon a subject of the deepest interest to every Englishman. We have only two matters of regret with respect to the work. The first is, that the chapter on "The Rise and Spread of Christianity" in Roman Britain, comes far short of what we could have wished in the way of information; and the second is that this brief record gives no other view of early British Christianity than that of a Church in Britain, with its "edifices, altars, Scriptures, discipline, holding the Catholic faith, and having intercourse with Rome and Palestine." We regret this High Church conception of the first British Church. We are satisfied, from subsequent history, that when the Britons were driven, after the invasion of the Anglo-Saxons, in the year 452, into the Cambrian mountains, they carried with them Christian doctrines and practices which had been transmitted from their forefathers, and which were more conformed to Apostolic simplicity than the foregoing description would convey. The book abounds, nevertheless, with rich, varied, and most valuable information relating to the first four Christian centuries.

The Life of Christ. Vol. 1. By Dr. Bernhard Weiss, Counsellor of the Consistory, and Professor of Theology in Berlin. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh. It is to be gratefully noted that the Spirit, whose office it is to glorify Christ, is raising up barriers of sound learning against the tide of a reckless and destructive criticism that has been weakening faith, and paralysing preachers. This book is to be hailed as a powerful contribution to the reaction which has happily set in. It examines rationalistic criticism with extraordinary acumen, scholarly calmness, fine discrimination, and marked perspicacity. It reduces many of the conclusions of modern learning to mere mirage and pure blundering. It proves that the highest erudition can go hand-in-hand with orthodox truth, and upholds the sacredness and authority of New Testament Scriptures on historical grounds.

The first part of this volume occupies more than two hundred pages, and is taken up with an inquiry into the origin of the four Gospels. After an able review of negative evidence, it arrives at the significant conclusion that thirty-seven years after the death of Jesus, the Gospel of the Apostle Matthew appeared. This was at first the Gospel of the Jewish Christians. Two years later, that of the Evangelist Mark was sent forth, written for the Romans. The Gentile Churches, founded by St. Paul, received what Dr. Weiss designates the Pauline doctrine of Luke about the year 80. After this there is a most valuable dissertation on the authenticity and composition of John's Gospel.

The second part begins the Life of Christ. Here we have no romantic memoir, but a reverent following of the four records in presenting the successive stages of Christ's life. While we do not profess to agree with the learned author on every point, we venture, nevertheless, to say that no more timely work has lately appeared, and we wait anxiously the publication of remaining volumes.

Letters to the Editor.

YOUNG FOREIGN GIRLS.

My dear Sir,—Will you let me inform your readers that to aid the many unprotected foreign young women constantly passing through London, Gordon House, 8, Endsleigh-gardens, N.W., was opened two years ago, especially to receive German young women? Such good service has it proved that no less than 460 German, 31 French, 17 Swedes, 2 Danish, and 1 Dutch, have resided in it during that short time. They are welcomed by a German superintendent. Space would not allow me to record the joyful benefits conferred on the homeless and destitute, both temporally and spiritually.

To make this work a real substantial help to foreign girls, it is proposed to open a foreign registry as soon as premises can be obtained.

Yours sincerely,

John Shrimpton.

FREE THOUGHT AND FREE ACTION.

Sir,—It has lately been shown in an influential daily paper, that a phrase or an expression often becomes commonly used by those who attach a perfectly different meaning to it from what it should rightly convey. There is a word that I think may be classed with these misleading expressions, and that is "Freethinker," which is used frequently to designate those who in truth are rather entitled to be called "Freedoers."

We are all Freethinkers! No fetters forged by man have yet been able to chain up minds; they may be darkened and warped by evil influences, but as long as reason remains thoughts cannot be robbed of their freedom. It is when these thoughts are turned into action that, without infringement of the just liberty of a man, he may be punished for them directly if they are criminal or dangerous, or indirectly by the denial to him of certain privileges enjoyed by others. This cannot be called persecution of free thought, but it is a checking or restraining of the free action, of those who would endanger the well-being of others. A man may think what he pleases so far as regards his fellowmen, but if he gives vent to those thoughts by speech or pen, thought thereby becomes action, and as such is met by moral, or political, or social laws, that seek to prevent prejudicial acts, but cannot put force on thoughts, and therefore do ont attempt it.

A man may harbour thoughts that are opposed to all moral law, and are contrary to the belief which is the foundation of our country's legislation. If the opinions are unexpressed the matter rests between him and his inner consciousness; but if he proceeds to advocate his views by speech or pamphlet, and influences thereby the opinion and conduct of others, he passes from the domain of the free thinker into that of the free doer, his words written or spoken being acts affecting his fellow-creatures.

A man must think as he lists, and is responsible for his unuttered thoughts only to God: for his acts he is accountable also to his fellow-men; and if they see reason to believe, judging from those acts (or words), that he will do what he can to undermine the sure foundation on which all law, order, and authority alone can rest securely, they are surely entitled to refuse him the power to endeavour to destroy what they deem sacred, and to decline to place in his hands fresh instruments of destruction.

I think those avowedly Christian men who are favouring a movement to remove a barrier opposed to an atheistical triumph, confound in this case liberty of thought with licence of opinion openly avowed in words, which thereby becomes licence of action.—I am, Sir, yours obediently, L. P.

June, 1883.

BISHOP MAGEE'S SPEECH.

Dear Sir,—I am a regular and interested reader of The Christian, though I do not always agree with it. Permit me to express my regret at your quoting with approval a passage from the Bishop of Peterborough's speech in the House of Lords. You speak of the extract as "containing principles well worthy of consideration by all the churches, indicating as they do the vast importance of the spiritual, beyond the political, in connection with church work and life." No Christian man doubts it. But the words were spoken by a political functionary, in a political place, on a political occasion, and by one who, thus steeped to the neck in politics himself, could speak of "political dissenters" in terms obviously meant to convey a reproach, or worse.

He also, in the extract you quote, speaks of the Church as "politically neutral," not "intriguing with political parties." I do not ask you to receive any counter-assertion, or to open your columns to arguments on the point; I content myself with saying that both the statements and the innuendoes of the prelate are strongly dissented from by numbers of your readers, and that the advice he is supposed by you to give sounds strange from the mouth of the wealthy and ennobled prelate of a State Church, speaking from his place in the Upper House, where the Bench of Bishops have so often foiled the wishes of the people of England.
—Yours truly, Edward Butler.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For a great blessing on the Mission at Christ Church, Southport.

PRAYER.—For blessing on Messrs. Mateer and Parker's labours at St. Giles' and Gosport.——That Mme. Marzials may be guided in her present trial, arising from the failing health of her husband, and that the Lord will guide all connected with the Mission work at Barnave to his own glory.——For a sister, a sad sufferer for many years, from a mysterious and seemingly unalleviable complaint, who deeply desires to be remembered by Christian friends.

Mission and other Appeals.

Convalescent Institution, New Brighton, Cheshire.—The Lady-Superintendent appeals for help towards the expenses of the Home, as the sums charged are not sufficient to meet its requirements. Full particulars on application.

London City Mission.—An appeal is made in the June Magazine of the Society for £10,000 to make up the present deficit, and an additional £5000 a year to maintain the work. The office of the Mission is Bridewell-place, near Bridge-street, E.C.

Rosslyn Mission, Islington.—Miss Garnet, 32, Westbourne-road, Barnsbury, N., appeals for monetary help for this Mission. She says: "Souls are being saved at nearly all the meetings, and a good work is carried on in the Gospel Temperance cause." Mr. Gawin Kirkham commends it.

Wandsworth Mission.—Mr. E. Powell appeals for £500 for the erection of a hall in connection with this Mission. A good work has been done for some years past by unpaid agents, who have not only done the work, but have also met the greater part of the expense. Different rooms have been used for the operations, carried on with much inconvenience. The lowest classes are reached by this agency, and there has been much blessing. Contributions to be sent to Mr. J. P. Wilson, 2, Lake-terrace, Wandsworth-common.

SOUTH LONDON.—Any friends willing to assist in open-air preaching, during the summer, in South London, will be welcomed at 1, Victoria Hall, Lancaster-street, Blackfriars-road, S.E.

WELCOME HOME, CARDIFF.—Would you have the kindness to name to your readers how acceptable would be loans or gifts of pictures, wall texts in different languages, and books, model ships, birds, fishes, ferns, or flowers, suitable for fitting up the Sailors' Welcome?—G. Lawrence.

LECTURES TO MEN ONLY.—Mr. Henry Varley continues to give lectures to men only on "The Obligations and Advantages of Chastity." On Tuesday, 12th inst., he addressed from 1200 to 1400 men in Mr. Charington's Great Hall in Mile End-road. The large assembly was evidently profoundly impressed. On Friday last, also under the auspices of the Moral Reform Union, whose offices are 1, Leinster-place, Westbourne-terrace, he spoke at Whitfield's Tabernacle, in Tottenham Court-road. The chair was occupied by Mr. Geo. Williams. About 800 men attended. The lecture was most enthusiastically received, Mr. Varley's statements and appeals deeply and solemnly affecting the entire audience.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN. £250 Now much needed.

The Collection made at the close of 1882 is now more than exhausted.

THE NUMBER "SEVEN" IN SCRIPTURE.

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, C.B.,

Author of "Shadow and Substance," "Forgiveness, Life, and Glory."

"I do not presume to offer an opinion as to the purpose with which the number seven has been so prominently interwoven with the Scriptures. That there is some purpose, however, I can hardly doubt; for the use of the number is far more than merely mechanical or artificial. It runs through the whole of the Bible, commencing with the institution of the seventh day—or Sabbath—in Eden, and concluding with the various series of "sevens" in the Apocalypse."—Extract from Introduction.

"Choice Sayings."

BEING NOTES OF EXPOSITION OF THE SCRIPTURES.
REVISED BY ROBERT C. CHAPMAN.

Happiness, Joy, Comfort & Peace.

Begin every day with the Word of God and prayer, if you would enjoy settled blessedness. It is in the Word of God that the fulness of Christ is revealed, as the rich portion of every one who trusts in the Blood of Christ. (Page 157).

Salvation, Justification, Pardon.

"How can I be pardoned?" says the poor self-condemned sinner. "How can I not pardon?" says God. The sinner looks at his sins; but God looks at his Son's atoning blood. Sinner, do thou likewise. (Page 136.)

THE POPULAR EDITION OF

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE

To the OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.

Strongly Bound in Cloth Boards, PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

Presentation Edition, handsomely bound in Cloth, price 7s. 6d.

THE POPULAR EDITION

Of CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE (Published by MORGAN & SCOTT) contains a carefully revised and much extended List of the PROPER NAMES of the OLD and NEW TESTAMENTS with their Meanings in the Original Languages, by Rev. ALFRED JONES, M.A., Author of "The Proper Names of the Old Testament Scriptures Expounded and Illustrated."

The Publishers desire to call the attention of Sabbath School Superintendents and Teachers to the "POPULAR EDITION" of this invaluable Work, which, at the price now named, is within the reach of almost every Teacher in the land.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—The Publishers will supply twelve copies of the "POPULAR EDITION" of "CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE" to any Sabbath School Superintendent on receipt of Post Office Order or Cheque for 5os. Thus the Teachers of his School may be supplied with this useful handbook at a reduced rate.

Mr. D. L. MOODY, after having recommended the purchase of a good Bible, says, "Next I would advise you to get CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE and a Scripture Text Book. These books will help you to study the Word of God with profit. If you have not got them, get them to-morrow, for every Christian ought to have them."

☞ "CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE" may also be had in Twenty-Four Weekly Numbers, price 3d. each (post-free, 3½*d.*).

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings; and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

Works suitable for Bible Students.

Published by MORGAN & SCOTT.

John, whom Jesus Loved. Sketch of the Character, Writings, Theology, and Influence of the Beloved Disciple. New and Enlarged Edition. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. With Chromo-Lithographic Views of the "Sea of Galilee" and the "Isle of Patmos." Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.

"This is not a book to be taken up lightly, read hurriedly, and carelessly dismissed. It merits, and will reward, a quiet, thoughtful perusal."—The Record.

"Thy First Love." Christ's Message to Ephesus. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece. Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"A clear and thoughtful exposition. Dr. Culross writes in an easy, interesting manner; sometimes quaintly, always pointedly. Many a laggard in the heavenly race would be stirred to activity by reading Dr. Culross' exposition."—Penuel.

"Behold, I stand at the Door, and Knock." Christ's Message to Laodicea. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. Tinted covers, 1s. cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"A most opportune book. Would that every professing Christian would thoughtfully and prayerfully peruse it. Sunday-school teachers also would find it immensely stimulating and reviving."—Hive.

Notes for Bible Readings. A Collection of over Six Hundred Subjects, carefully compiled and arranged. Suitable for Bible Readings, Cottage Lectures, Sermons, Addresses, Sabbath-school Lessons, &c. Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d. A cheap edition may also be had in tinted cover, 2s. 6d.

"This is a book which every Bible student should possess. It will be of special value to the class-teacher, and an assistance also to the preacher. It brings together an immense number of subjects, with groupings of Scripture texts on each. It supplies valuable matter for private meditation; and those who conduct Bible readings will find it most suggestive."—Christian Progress.

Christ Lifted Up. Meditations on the Death, Resurrection, and Ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ. By Rev. ROBERT GILCHRIST. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"The subject from beginning to end is well thought out, and the volume altogether is well fitted to be at once edifying and awakening."
Free Church of Scotland Monthly Record.

"The fulness of Christ for every need of fallen humanity is set forth in a clear, convincing, and attractive manner."—Christian Week.

The Gospel according to Moses: as seen in the Tabernacle and its Various Services. By Rev. GEORGE RODGERS. Frontispiece. Tinted covers, 1s.; cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

"No young Christian, and especially no preacher, should be ignorant of the truth which this small volume very simply but very forcibly enunciates."—The Record.

"A very spiritual as well as instructive little book, the Saviour being typically portrayed in the Tabernacle, the High Priest, and the Sacrifices."—Churchman.

SPECIALLY SUITABLE FOR

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MEETINGS.

A Series of 4 two-page Leaflets, each containing a collection of stirring Pieces, admirably adapted for use at "Gospel Temperance" and other Meetings. Price 9d. per 100, or 7s. 6d. per 1000.

CONTENTS OF NO. 1.

Where is my wandering boy to-night?
One there is who loves thee
The mistakes of my life have been many
Long in darkness we have waited
Are you coming home, ye wanderers?
A ruler once came to Jesus by night
Fierce and wild the storm is raging
Why do you wait, dear brother?
Say, where is thy refuge, my brother?
Why perish with cold and with hunger?
From the riven Rock there floweth

CONTENTS OF No. 2.

What can wash away my stain?
Come, thou weary! Jesus calls thee
Should the death-angel knock at your chamber
The Gospel bells are ringing
Have you any room for Jesus?
Oh come, sinner, come! 'tis mercy's call
Make room for Jesus! room, sad heart!
Oh, do not let the Word depart
Brightly beams our Father's mercy
O Christ, in Thee my soul hath found
Light in the darkness, sailor!

CONTENTS OF No. 3.

When my final farewell to the world I have said
Standing by a purpose true
When the storms of life are raging
I have read of a beautiful city
Ring the bells of heaven! there is joy to day
I have heard of a land far away
"Land ahead!" its fruits are waving
Oh, tender and sweet was the Master' voice
'Tis the promise of God full salvation to give
When storms around are sweeping

CONTENTS OF No. 4.

Of course you know that to and fro, throughout our glorious land
She only touched the hem of His garment
Our Master has taken His journey
Tempted and tried
Father, don't you hear the angels
The prize is set before us
There is a Fountain filled with blood
Would you lose your load of sin?
Yield not to temptation, for yielding is sin

FIFTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN"

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK

CASE of Mr. CHAS. SPANNER. of RYDE—CONSUMPTION—LEFT LUNG DISEASED.

This patient, who resides now at 2, Vernon-cottages, Preston-place, Ryde, came to consult me by the earnest persuasion of a chemist in his locality. His first symptom was cough, commencing Jan., 1882, followed by hæmoptysis at intervals, with pains in the left side, short breathing, and general loss of flesh.

Improvement soon took place, and the correspondence and advice continued until the latter end of the year.

Last month (March) I received a letter, in which he says:

"I am now quite well as the result of your treatment, by God's blessing. The liniment for which you sent me a prescription has removed all pain. I shall always recommend your medicine: without it I should have been a confirmed invalid (if alive) by now. I have recently married. I am thankful to add my testimony. —Yours faithfully, CHAS. SPANNER."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

BOOKS FOR ENQUIRERS AND CONVERTS.

Young Converts;

Or, Beginners in Zion's Ways. By Rev. R. BOYD, D.D. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

I have been continually asked by young converts where they could get a book in which they might find advice that would be helpful to them. This book seemed just the thing needed at this time. I have known the author, Rev. Dr. Boyd, for many years as a dear father in Israel. I have read his work carefully, and recommend it to all young Christians for prayerful meditation." D. L. Moody

The Way of Life.

A Book for Enquirers. By Rev. ROBERT BOYD, D D. Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth Boards, 1s.

"About fifteen years ago this little book attracted my notice. I read it with interest, and felt so much profited that I re-read it several times, and then circulated hundreds of copies among the soldiers during the American war. The number that then seemed blessed through reading the book has induced me to ask Messrs. Morgan & Scott to republish it, hoping that it may be the means of good in this country, as it has been in America." D. L. Moody

All About Jesus.

Thoughts and Reflections on the Person and Work of Christ. By ALEXANDER DICKSON. This book was printed at the express desire of Mr. D. L. MOODY. Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"The volume sets forth Jesus very much in Scriptural language, for we have counted over 1340 passages of Holy Writ, chastely and lovingly interwoven in the discourses. Throughout, Jesus is the subject of delightful meditation, affection, and adoration."

The Methodist.

Addresses to Young Men.

By Rev. DANIEL BAKER. With Preface by D. L. MOODY. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"These discourses were designed to be of an awakening character. They were preached (in substance) in numerous revivals, and were blessed to the hopeful conversion of many precious souls, of whom some fifty or more have become ministers of the Gospel. May He who was pleased to bless these discourses when they came from the pulpit, bless them also now." AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Rescue Work among Discharged Prisoners.

21,669 Discharged Prisoners have accepted our invitation to Breakfast at the Prison Gates at Coldbath Fields and Holloway since we first commenced this Rescue Work four years and a half ago, and we have now in contemplation the erection of another Iron Room on ground kindly granted by the Home Office Authorities, just outside Wandsworth Gaol, in which we purpose carrying on a Rescue Work among these fallen men of a precisely similar kind.

The extra outlay for the erection of the building, with the working expenses, will be very considerable. Who among the Readers of "The Christian" will help us in this Mission of Mercy?

GEO. HATTON, Superintendent,

12, Ampton-place, Regent-square, W.C.

Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN. £250 Now much needed.

The Collection made at the close of 1882 is now more than exhausted.

715 applications have been made here for admission to the Homes since January 1st, and to the utmost capacity of the Branch Homes every suitable case has been received.

Among the above a very large NUMBER OF GIRLS OF TENDER YEARS (preventive cases).

£250.—Donations to this amount are much needed for PRESENT HELP and to aid in the autumn months, when so many Christian helpers are absent from their homes in search of health and recreation, and contributions are scant.

READER, PRAY HELP. As usual, Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., will receive contributions; the Bankers, Messrs. BOSANQUET, SALT & Co., 73, Lombard-street, E.C.; FRANCIS NICHOLLS, Esq. (of the Committee), 14, Old Jewry-chambers, E.C.; or Office—200, Euston-road, London, N.W.

EDWARD W. THOMAS, SEC.

£50.—The Committee will be much obliged for a Donation of this amount to effect a much needed improvement at the Open All-Night Refuge—and the present time is most suitable to do the required work.—E. W. T.

The "One Tun" Ragged School (Old Pye-street) EXCURSION.

Will friends kindly help us to take nearly 400 poor Mothers and Children, and many Babies, from the "back slums" of Westminster, for one day's enjoyment in pure air, amid the green grass and wild flowers? £20 are required, towards which the smallest donations will be thankfully acknowledged by ADELINE BARKER HARRISON, 78, Coleshill-street, Eaton-square, S.W., Hon. Secretary; or by Mr. A. J. WOODHOUSE, 1, Hanover-square, W., Treasurer.

BIBLE AND COLPORTAGE SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

AN undenominational Society, with Agents in all parts of Ireland. Carefully selected and trained Colporteurs are spreading the knowledge of Jesus by the living voice and the printed page. They have access to the people everywhere, and are not interfered with in their work. A contribution of £40 will secure a Colporteur for a year in any part of Ireland. Funds greatly needed.—Rev. H. M. WILLIAMSON, Belfast, and Rev. JOHN ELLIOTT, Armagh, Secretaries, by whom contributions will be gratefully received; or they may be paid at the office of this paper.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.
Supported by Voluntary Contributions.
President—

The Right Hon. the EARL of SHAFTESBURY, K.G.

Established 1822, for the purpose of employing humble Christian men, well versed in the Scriptures, to visit from house to house throughout the country, and visit all denominations. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required. The work is carried on in a spirit of love.

Subscriptions or Donations will be thankfully received by the Secretary, Capt. KEARNEY WHITE, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin; or at 9, Paternoster-row, London.

The Earl of Shaftesbury says in his last letter to the Secretary:—Many thanks for your kind letter, and many thanks to Almighty God for the good intelligence you give me about your Scripture Readers in Ireland. I wish I could more effectively assist you. Your letter is the best thing that I have seen or heard from Ireland

I enclose my donation, and only wish it was more.—Yours, SHAFTESBURY

N.B.—Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

URGENT APPEAL.—The Committee of the Ladies' Samaritan Society of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic 25, Queen's-square, Bloomsbury, earnestly appeal for contributions in aid of the poorer patients and their families. The work of the Society is not in any way curtailed by the rebuilding of the Hospital, but is still carried on in the new wing, and the Committee will most thankfully acknowledge the smallest gifts in money or clothing. Old coats and trousers are much needed.

KESWICK.—Ninth Annual Convention will be held (D.V.) July 23 to 28.—T. D. HARFORD BATTERSBY, Keswick; ROBERT WILSON, Broughton Grange, Carlisle.—For lodgings apply to Mr. POSTLETHWAITE, Eskin Place, Keswick.

GREAT COLEMAN'S, near Ongar, is now opened by Dr. and Mrs. S. C. GRIFFITH to give change of air and rest to educated people of limited means.—For particulars, apply to 45, Finsbury-square E.C.

MRS. WILKES proposes to be at home every Wednesday from Two till Five o'clock, for the purpose of seeing friends of Rescue Work. Trains from Liverpool-street to St. James-street Station, Walthamstow, every half-hour. "The Elms" is within five minutes' walk of the station. The Elms, Coppermill-lane, Walthamstow, Essex.

Full particulars on application to the PRINCIPAL. Dr. CRANAGE has recently greatly enlarged and improved his School premises.

TO GODLY PARENTS.—The undermentioned (who is in no way connected with the school) is desirous of recommending an old-established YOUNG GENTLEMEN'S BOARDING SCHOOL, DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED FACING THE SEA on the South Coast, a short run from London, in which a thorough and first-class Education is given, based upon the teaching of the Holy Scriptures.

It is one of the few remaining schools in which the power of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ influences the hearts and conduct of the pupils.

The success, happiness, and training of the Boys have been so remarkable in this School that a BOOK OF TESTIMONIALS GIVEN BY THE PARENTS should be read to appreciate results so unusual. Two Vice-Chancellors have placed their wards as pupils in the school. Reference kindly permitted to Dr. THORN, Paddington, London.

BRIGHTON.—EDUCATION.—Mr. ALFRED CLARK, B.A. (Lond.) receives about 20 Sons of Gentlemen, from seven to fourteen years of age. Terms from 40 to 55 Guineas. Figgis, Brighton; Rev. W. Haslam, 19, King's-road, Brunswood-park, N.

THE WOODLANDS, Hitchin, Herts,
—Select Boarding School for Boys. For prospectus apply to the Principal, ISAAC SHARP, B.A., a member of the Society of Friends. Careful personal training. Efficient staff of masters. Excellent recreation grounds.

BELMONT COLLEGIATE SCHOOL
for Girls, 13 and 14, Belmont, Bath.—A thorough English education, with Latin, mathematics, French, German, &c., on inclusive and moderate terms. The School is arranged on the best modern lines, and the utmost care taken that the whole tone and atmosphere be decidedly Christian. A few boarders received in the house of the Principals.

For Delicate or Backward Youths
PRIVATE TUITION

must always be far preferable to ordinary school life, where such boys are usually left to the care and tuition of inexperienced and often uninterested Assistant Masters, and to the rough treatment of hardier Schoolmates.

MR. WILLIAM PENN

devotes his personal attention, care, and tuition to such Pupils, of whom he takes only a few, as he desires to preserve the strictly family tone of his home, wherein his Pupils are received as members of, and sharers in, the family life. In the fear and love of God it is sought to train this family, developing all kindly and gentle feeling, encouraging observation and a love of Nature. It is Mr. Penn's conviction that is of more value than an extensively stored memory, and the mere acquisition of knowledge apart from some perception of its significance as a factor in human life and interests is not encouraged. The House is admirably situated on the eastern brow of the northern heights of London, open on all sides and commanding an extensive and delightful view of over twenty miles of River, Lake, Hamlet, and the Forest of Epping, into which it is easy to penetrate for pleasant rambles, &c. Abundant opportunity for close by. A Carpenter's Shop is fitted up on the Premises, and Pupils are taught Carpentry and Joinery by a competent Tutor. Drawing, Painting, and Shorthand are included in the curriculum. Full particulars on application with References to parents of Pupils.

PHILOSOPHY
MAGNETIC TREATMENT.

We have advocated the claims of Magnetic Treatment in these columns by such arguments as are always unanswerable when the subject has passed beyond the theoretical into the proved and practical. We have endeavoured to put the arguments in intelligible language such as any reflecting reader could comprehend; and we are encouraged by the fact that our labour has not been in vain; but there is yet a class of readers who are not to be convinced by argument or converted by statements of our patients unless made by persons known to them. For the satisfaction of this class of inquirers we have arranged to append a list of 1000 names, some of whom are readers of The Christian, and may be known to other subscribers; these have endorsed the following general statement, and have expressed themselves willing to confirm it by letter or personal interview:—

"We have great pleasure and satisfaction in acknowledging the economy and efficacy of Mr. B. Copson Garratt's Treatment by Magnetism."

The Christian.

RELIGIOUS INTOLERANCE IN SWITZERLAND.

SIR,—I am not about to enter into any controversy concerning the movements and methods of the Salvation Army, in writing to you to follow up the letter of your correspondent "Sigma," concerning the persecution to which our country men and women have been subjected in Switzerland. Regarded independently of all religious controversy, the situation in Neuchatel at this moment is an exceedingly grave one, and is not unlikely to lead to something like a revolution. The question is one of liberty and justice, of freedom of public worship, and freedom of public and private meeting, as well as of the traditional hospitality to strangers which once was characteristic of Switzerland.

I hear from a Swiss correspondent that the Grand Council of the canton of Neuchatel has endorsed the "arrete" of the Council of State concerning the suppression of all meetings in which the "Salvationists," even though citizens of Neuchatel, should appear or take any part. "The debates," says my correspondent, "were most interesting, but very, very sad; for only two speakers dealt with the question from the point of view of principle. Liberty and justice were represented in this Council by a minority of 15 against 57, and a revolting resolution was passed, proclaiming that all religious exercises connected with this movement should be stopped, whether conducted by English or Swiss people, in private houses or anywhere else. All persons who have taken part in such meetings received a circular the next day from the prefect of police, forbidding them not only to hold any such meetings again, but never again even to attend any such meetings in any place whatsoever."

The tremendous significance of such an attack on freedom and personal rights must surely be evident to every English man and woman who understands the merest elements of justice. This precedent will serve as a justification for the tyrannical suppression of any movement in future which may not happen to please the dominant party of the day; a party hostile to religion, and leaning towards a strongly centralised and despotic form of government.

English people will not find the same freedom as formerly in certain Cantons of Switzerland to preach the Gospel, or to promote any social or moral movement in which they may be interested. I believe a great conflict of principle is about to arise in that country, and I earnestly hope that English Christians will not deny their sympathy to those Swiss patriots—their fellow-Christians—who may have to fight a hard battle for liberty of conscience and just law.—I remain yours, &c., JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for week ending July 7:—July 1, Luke i. 1-17; July 2, Luke i. 18-25; July 3, Luke i. 26-33; July 4, Luke i. 46-56; July 5, Luke i. 57-66; July 6, Luke i. 67-80; July 7, Luke ii. 1-14.

GAMBLING AT HOME AND ABROAD.

CANNOT something be done to put down gambling in the west of London? The authorities are quick to suppress a game at cards for money in the east of the metropolis, but no attempt is made to abolish "so-called clubs in fashionable St. James's, where baccaret, roulette, French hazard, and a dozen other games are played the livelong night through with entire impunity."* Our readers would be surprised to learn how many young men of real or expectant wealth are annually impoverished or absolutely ruined in these dens. Gambling is no less grave a vice because carried on in a fashionable drawing-room, with piles of gold for stakes instead of pence; and until the strong arm of the law summarily and impartially closes all such establishments, irrespective of locality, we must be prepared for an increase of the evil.

The enormous gains of the Monte Carlo gaming-tables are a direct incentive to play in all countries, and we are not surprised that no less than thirty-seven illicit tables were recently found open at night in and around Nice during a single police raid. For several years previous to the formation of the "International Association for the Suppression of the Gaming-tables at Monte Carlo," the clear profits of the Casino were over 25,000,000 francs per annum. The Prince of Monaco receives 250,000 francs yearly for the concession, besides a share in the profits and considerable supplementary sums; and as the expenses of the casino and entire principality are defrayed by the bank, the sum annually lost by players cannot have fallen below FIFTY MILLIONS OF FRANCS! The receipts have fallen off considerably since 1881, but it is estimated that fully 30,000,000 francs have yearly found their way over the green tables into the coffers of the bank. What losses and misery does this sum represent! How many, tempted to play in the hope of "luck" and sudden wealth, have gone and on till ruin and disgrace have stared them in the face! How many dependent wives, children, and relatives have been reduced to absolute poverty in a day! And, alas! how many have committed self-murder to escape the shame caused by their own folly.

While desirous of avoiding anything approaching sensationalism, we venture to quote the following paragraph from the Colonie Etrangère, a paper published in Nice: "An Englishman allowed a train to run over his neck; a Russian blew his brains out; a young Bavarian fired a couple of bullets into his chest; a Pole shot himself in the middle of the gaming saloon at Monte Carlo. A well-dressed stranger shot himself at the Hotel des Empereurs, Nice; a merchant poisoned himself at the Hotel de la Garl, Cannes; an Austrian of distinguished family blew out his brains in a shed at Ségurance, Nice; a lawyer threw himself from the top of the rock Rauba Capen into the sea, Nice; a German officer shot himself in the ear; a Hollander poisoned himself; a Dutch nobleman shot himself in the garden of his villa, Monaco; and a widow, fifty-five, poisoned herself at the Hotel des Deux Mondes Nice; she had sold her last jewel to try and recover her losses at Monaco. A German shot himself on a seat, a few steps from the casino; an Englishman hung himself on the Ponsroad; a gentleman shot himself before the Café de Paris, close to the Casino; and a young Russian shot himself at the Casino door."

The Times, of the 10th ult., reports the circumstance of a young German of good family having shot himself the Thursday after losing at the gaming-tables; and a young Englishman of good family, whose father held a high position in the House of Lords, told the writer last week that he had lost a fortune at Monaco, was a beggar on the world, and that he seriously contemplated suicide as the only way of escaping misery and shame. The writer has a list of fifty more suicides before him, the direct results of gambling at Monte Carlo. What sorrow and distress these violent deaths have entailed upon helpless victims! Many of our readers visit the Riviera as a winter resort, and we entreat them to dissuade persons from going to Monaco "just to see the place." Though Monaco be "even as the garden of the Lord," the cry of it is great, and its sin very grievous, even as Sodom and Gomorrah.

It is gratifying to find that the International Association has succeeded in drawing the serious attention of the great Powers to the subject of public gambling at Monaco. Almost the entire press of the United Kingdom is in favour of the movement, and the leading Continental press lends hearty co-operation. The question has already occupied the consideration of the French Chamber of Deputies and Senate, and the Italian Parliament and German Reichstag have denounced in indignant terms the continuance of an institution so fruitful in crime, misery, and death. The subject will now be shortly brought before our own Houses of Parliament. Full information will be afforded by Mr. R. Stewart Clough, Secretary, 8, Adam-street, Adelphi, W.C. A series of popular tracts on the sinfulness and evils of gaming would doubtless be blessed to many to whom card-playing is becoming a passion. Gambling is a crying evil both at home and abroad, and it is time to raise our cry against it, lest it burst upon us as a flood.

FIELD-LANE RAGGED SCHOOLS.—The Rev. Jackson Wray presided, on the 20th inst., at the forty-first annual meeting of this charity, at Holborn Town Hall, in the absence of Lord Shaftesbury. Mr. Peregrine Platt read the report, which stated that the institution benefits as many as 2120 persons weekly. There was a debt of £2000 still standing. Rev. F. A. C. Lillingstone was glad this institution had not lost its old friends, even in the face of the manifold organisations around them. Rev. G. W. McCree said the intellectual and moral improvement of the poor of London during the last forty years had been marvellous, which was largely owing to the influence of such refuges as this. If they wanted to bring the refuge work to a triumphant conclusion they must abolish the drinking customs of the country. Revs. Burman Cassin, Sinclair-Paterson, M.D., T. Harley, and R. P. Downes, also advocated the claims of the institution.

PERSONAL UNION WITH CHRIST.

NOTES OF AN ADDRESS AT A MEETING OF THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE, JUNE 22.

By Rev. W. FULLER GOOCH.

WHAT do we mean by union with Christ? Not a mystic, far-away something which cannot be properly defined, or clearly understood, but a truly practical and conscious oneness of soul with Him who is not only the living Saviour, but for all believers "The Life." Many regard the subject as vague and illusory, remote from the common walks of life, and belonging to the ideal rather than the actual. Not so is it taught in the New Testament; it is there set forth as a fact of human consciousness, entering into every sphere, and imparting its influence to every circumstance of the believer's life.

We have a spiritual nature as truly and literally as we have a material one. We allow ourselves too often to be so absorbed with the needs and desires of the latter, that we become unmindful of the former. We forget the Master's words, "Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?" In seeking the welfare of the outer, we forget the infinite superiority of the inner nature with which we are endowed. Yet our spiritual necessities press upon us as closely and as imperatively as our physical. The soul craves satisfaction; it has its hunger and its thirst, its weariness and its faintness, its longings and its loathings, as truly as the body has. Not more surely are meat and drink a necessity for the sustenance, refreshment, and satisfaction of the one, than spiritual supplies are essential for the sustenance, refreshment, and satisfaction of the other.

Slow and unwilling as men are to believe or acknowledge it, personal union with Christ is the only means of supplying the necessities of the soul. The Saviour's words in John vi. 53, 56 are not the language of mysticism or mere idealism. It is a sober, solid truth that "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the Last Day. For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed."

The act of eating is singularly expressive in its symbolic use, and is frequently employed in Holy Writ to denote the necessity of union with Christ. In the paschal feast it was not enough that the lamb be slain, and its blood sprinkled; its flesh had to be eaten. The language of the prophet, as he addresses hungry, starving souls, is, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters; and he that hath no money, come ye, buy and eat." The same truth has a prominent place in the simple but significant service we call the Lord's Supper. "Take, eat," said Christ to his disciples.

Let us dwell for a moment upon the significance of this act. It is personal. It applies to myself, and can only be my own act. Another's eating will not satisfy my hunger. Union with Christ is also personal, and can only be enjoyed through personal faith in Him. The union of the Church with Christ, as a whole, is a precious truth, and one we may not ignore or mutilate; but the union is as real and as essential in reference to each member as it is to the body viewed in its completeness; and we can only know its preciousness by individually enjoying and realising its power. We are members of the true Church of Christ, not by outward ceremonies, or external profession, but by inward and personal oneness with Christ Himself.

Eating is a necessary act; we eat to live. So is it a necessity to spiritual life that we be one with Christ, and that we be constantly drawing from Him, by closest ties of faith and love, fresh nourishment and inward strength. Nothing else can take the place of this. Eating indicates appetite—desire. Even so the soul once quickened, and made alive to spiritual things, hungers after righteousness and closer communion with its Lord. To use St. Peter's simile, if we have tasted that the Lord is gracious, we shall "as new-born babes desire the sincere milk of the word that we may grow thereby." Our language will be, as we think of the good Shepherd, and the ever fresh and verdant meads to which He leads his flock:—

> "The pasture I languish to find,
> Where all who their Shepherd obey
> Are fed, on thy bosom reclined,
> And screened from the heat of the day.
> 'Tis there I would always abide,
> And never a moment depart,
> Concealed in the cleft of thy side
> Eternally held in thy heart."

Eating results in assimilation. That which we eat becomes part of ourselves, is incorporated with us, and physically goes to make up our very being. Union with Christ assimilates the soul to Himself. By faith, all Christ is, and all He has, all He has done, or is doing, becomes our own. One in spirit, one in thought, one in purpose, Christ and a true believer are inseparable. To the believer Jesus says, with complacent, loving tone, "I have redeemed thee, thou art Mine;" while the believer, with humble, trustful joy responds, "My Beloved is mine, and I am His." So close is this union, that in one well-known text the Church is actually called the Christ (1 Cor. xii. 12). Closer assimilation, nearer union cannot be than that which results from saving faith in Christ. Referring to it in his sublime prayer, He compares it to that which unites Him to the Father, and says, "That they all may be one, as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee." "I in them, and thou in Me." Union with Christ a necessity? Oh, yes! such a necessity as all that is vital, all that is worth possessing in connection with the religion that bears his name depends upon it. Well might He say, "Without Me (severed from Me) ye can do nothing." "If a man abide not in Me, he is cast forth as a branch and is withered."

If this union is so essential, the blessedness of realising it becomes at once obvious and indisputable. How do we realise it? By faith, and by those sacred engagements which are the evidence that faith is really in exercise. Faith reads the fact of this personal union in the revelation God has given us of his purpose and its accomplishment, in the Gospel of his Son. "God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith He loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ (by grace ye are saved): and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." Faith assents to this, and lays claim with eager joy to the privileges and blessings which flow from it. Discerning the boundlessness of Divine grace in thus providing for the soul's deepest need and most intense desire, she sings:—

> "Christ Jesus is my all in all,
> My comfort and my love;
> My life below, and He shall be
> My glory-crown above."

Under this impulse the soul draws near to Christ, seeks, daily, closer communion with Him. In prayer the believer talks with Christ, while through Him he has access to God. In the Word of Truth he finds his Lord in every page, and, sitting at his feet, learns of Him. Is he in the furnace of affliction? The Son of God is with Him there. Is he in the busy scenes of earthly life? He knows that there, where the temptations to forget the spiritual, and to be absorbed in the material, are so strong, he may yet rely upon his Master's presence and experience his preserving power. Does he go forth to works of usefulness and acts of Christian service in the great harvest-field of God? Then he goes conscious that the Master he serves will stand by to give him needed wisdom, grace, and strength. Yea, in every scene, and under all circumstances, he will abide in Him, and so be able to say, "I can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth me." United to Christ, and conscious of the union being real and strong, he will enter into the joyous confidence of the apostle who said, "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the life that I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me." As Jonathan fed on the honey of the wood, and found his eyes enlightened, or as Elijah ate of the angel's food and went in the strength of it forty days, so the believer, feasting on a realised oneness with his Saviour, will find his heart lifted up in the ways of the Lord, and his soul gladdened and refreshed with the salvation of God.

Let us not omit to notice how in various passages personal indwelling is the great element of bliss arising out of our union with Christ. "He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, abideth in Me, and I in him." "And hereby we know that He abideth in us, by the Spirit which He hath given us." This is the peculiar blessedness of the believer in Jesus; Jesus becomes his friend, "A friend that sticketh closer than a brother." No mere creed, or ecclesiastical system, or dry school of thought, becomes our heritage, but intimate and delightful intercourse with our Lord.

The natural result of thus blessedly realising oneness with Christ will be that we count it our duty and privilege to manifest it in love to all who share this gracious experience with us. Union with Christ necessitates union with Christians as a logical fact, for Christ is not, and cannot be divided. The body is one, whether all the members recognise its oneness or not, and He is the head of the body, therefore to be of the body is to be one with Him, and to be one with Him is necessarily to be one with the body. If we dwell in Christ, we shall be lifted above the atmosphere of mere partisanship and out of the region of division and strife. His commands will be paramount with us, and among these his new commandment that we should love one another will certainly not be least considered, or least obeyed. It is because we are yet carnal, rather than spiritual, that we have aught of envying, strife, or divisions among us, and because, as St. Paul puts it, we walk as men, or (as it is in the margin) according to man (1 Cor. iii.)

Our separate organisations have their uses, serve their turns, and properly, according to conscientious convictions, enlist our sympathies, but let us remember they are not of themselves the commandment of Christ—they are all more or less of men. Churches are, as to outward rules and regulations, organised, and rightly so, by men whose sanctified intelligence has guided their action, but the Church is organised of God, and as to its inner life and universal obligations is governed directly by its Head. Hence, while loyal to our consciences on minor points, and in our local spheres, we are bound to be also loyal to the commands of Him whom we all reverence and love as our Sovereign, Master, and Lord. If we are this, we shall not allow our human limitations to override his Divine prerogatives, and so shall be in our conduct one to another Christians first, Conformists or Nonconformists, Congregationalists, Methodists, or whatever beside, secondarily and subordinately. Our reason for loving our brother will be, not that he belongs to our sect or party, but that he belongs to Christ, and even though we see not in him all the lovable traits we could desire to see, yet as a duty to Him with whom we both are one, we shall, for his sake, love, and lovingly serve if need be, whosoever we have reason to believe is his. Charlotte Elizabeth has a beautiful simile somewhere in her writings: she compares the Church and its various sections to an immense rose-tree she had seen growing in a garden, having on one stem twenty different roses, from the deep-tinted velvety damask to the pure and delicate China rose. All bloomed in beauteous perfection and harmony, while all derived their life from one parent stem.

And the recognition of this oneness is a privilege as well as a duty. While it is everything to be one with Christ, it is also much to be one with all the good and great who have ever been linked in with Him. If I am Christ's, and Christ is mine, then the apostles, the noble army of martyrs, the spirits of the just made perfect, yea, all the host of the redeemed, are also mine, for having come to Jesus, I am also come to "the general assembly and church of the first-born, whose names are written in heaven."

Few questions are of equal importance in these days to that of how we can best discharge this duty, and prove that we value aright this privilege. Never was the practical union of Christians in Christ, and for his sake, more needful than now. Unity is found among those who are on the side of Antichrist, their hosts are well-organised, well-disciplined, and grow increasingly enthusiastic in the pursuit of their object. They borrow impulse from our divisions, and sometimes triumph through our scattered condition. Oh, for more absorption in the claims of Christ, more readiness to surrender personal and social considerations for the sake of those which are central and world-wide; central in their reference to the Saviour's glory, and world-wide in their bearing on the good of men. Let us dwell in Christ, let us love as brethren, seeing Him in each other, and living for his service. Then shall we see and know more fully "how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity," and among us "the Lord shall command the blessing, even life for evermore."

ENGLISHMEN IN FRANCE.—Nothing has ever given me more joy than a little effort made a fortnight since for some Englishmen employed in an American circus which lately came to Vevey. On inquiry I found that twelve Englishmen and four Englishwomen were amongst those employed. To these I gave English books, which were very gratefully received. Feeling that something more should be done for their souls' good, I asked for the loan of a hall, and also got a friend to procure some English Bibles. We invited them to a meeting in the evening; eight came, including a Frenchman, who asked to come. We read God's Word together, which I strove to apply to their hearts. To see the delight of these men when addressed in their own tongue, and furnished with a Bible as a gift from Vevey, was something to make the heart glad. I hope that the above facts may incite other Christians (who have not yet done this) in different towns, to care for these men and women leading such a rough life. ANNE MALPAS.

THE NUMBER "SEVEN" IN SCRIPTURE.

By MR. S. A. BLACKWOOD.

THE most cursory reader of the Bible can hardly fail to have noticed the way in which one particular number—the number seven—occurs with remarkable frequency. Isolated cases, as well as groups of instances of such occurrence, have often been pointed out; but I do not think that the extent to which that number, when not actually specified, enters into the structure of many parts of Scripture has been observed; and I am not aware that any complete and exhaustive record of all the passages in which the number appears has ever been made.

In a recent consecutive study of the Scriptures I have taken occasion to note down, as far as I could, all such passages; and I venture now to publish the compilation,* not only because it is interesting in itself, but also because it seems to me likely to stimulate search and to arouse inquiry.

I do not presume to offer an opinion as to the purpose with which the number "seven" has been so prominently interwoven with the Scriptures. That there is some purpose, however, I can hardly doubt; for the use of the number is far more than merely mechanical or artificial. It runs through the whole of the Bible, commencing with the institution of the seventh day—or Sabbath—in Eden, and concluding with the various series of "sevens" in the Apocalypse.

If it were found occurring in a marked and definite manner only in some of the poetical parts of the Bible, some might be disposed to attribute the fact to human design. But when we discover it entering into some of the historical scenes, which we should be slow to consider as susceptible of methodical arrangement, we are, as it seems to me, constrained to admit that its adoption must be intended to serve some distinct purpose, to teach some important lesson.

Take, for example, such instances as these: Seven utterances of God in Eden; seven sayings of Christ on the cross; seven weepings of Joseph; seven excuses of Moses when commissioned to deliver Israel; seven prayers of Jesus recorded by Luke; seven miracles recorded by St. John; seven resurrections mentioned in Scripture; seven "walks" described in the Epistle to the Ephesians; seven beatitudes in the Revelation. We must surely acknowledge that a Divine design has caused this particular number to be so frequently employed, and to enter into the composition of the books of the Bible—books written by so many hands, and at such various periods.

Whatever other object the Divine Author of the Bible may have had in view in making such frequent use of the number, it seems to be generally believed, for one thing, at least, that it was intended to convey the idea of completeness, or perfection. The first employment on the occasion of the completed work of creation is strongly in favour of this presumption.

Some suppose, again, that its component parts, three and four, have some reference to that union of the divine with the human which was planned from eternity, and carried out through the work of redemption, three being regarded as the divine number, as connected with the Trinity, and four as the human or earthly number, as being used in connection with the four seasons, the four winds, the four quarters of the globe, &c. It is interesting to notice, with reference to this supposition, that the first three petitions in the seven which constitute the Lord's prayer have reference to the name, kingdom, and will of God, whilst the last four relate to our human necessities.

It seems, at any rate, to be clear that its constant occurrence in the Scriptures is the result of nothing short of Divine intention; and it is remarkable that He who has thus connected it so closely with the very structure of his written Word should also have caused it to enter into the works of his hands, as regards both animate and inanimate creation.

We know, for example, that both light and sound consist of seven parts—the seven colours which complete the rainbow, and the seven notes which constitute the scale of music—while the moon's orbit is performed in four weeks of seven days. The septenary periods, whether of days or years, which bear so distinct a relation to many of the phenomena in the life of both man and beast, are as clearly the arrangement of the Creator.

Whether, therefore, we consider the works of his hands or the word of his lips, we are equally confronted by the fact that this mysterious number has been selected by Him for some wise and useful purpose, into which we may at least reverently inquire, though perhaps not yet able fully to discern it.

The compilation may stimulate a spirit of search into a very interesting subject, and will, at any rate, I trust, lead to an examination of the letter of the Word, which, by God's blessing may result in a better understanding of its spirit, and thus prove not to have been made in vain.

May the teaching and enlightenment of the Holy Spirit be vouchsafed to those who use these pages, so that while thus searching the text of the Scriptures their hearts may experience the power of that Word which is able to make wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus.

MISSIONARIES FOR AFRICA.

THE Free Church of Scotland continues to give proof of her Evangelical zeal by year after year sending missionaries and ministers to the foreign and colonial field. The Mission-colonies, as they may be called, which have recently been founded, make continual demands for more help, as, in the providence of God, the sphere of their operations extends. It says much for a Church when the blanks made by disease and death are speedily filled up by the flower of her young men.

A pleasing illustration of this has just occurred in the history of one of the most hopeful of the African Missions—Livingstonia. No difficulty was experienced in finding missionaries, doctors, and teachers, to take the place of those who had fallen at their posts. The other week a great valedictory meeting was held with the new missionaries in the Free College Church, Glasgow; and on Monday week there was a second and well-attended meeting, when the Presbytery of Glasgow ordained, and solemnly set up as the Rev. James Alexander Bain, M.A., of that city, for the work of a missionary in Livingstonia. Rev. Professor Candlish preached, and Rev. George Reith gave the charge to the young missionary, with whom the audience shook hands, and wished God-speed on retiring. Mr. Bain sailed last week. The party is accompanied by Professor Henry Drummond, of the Free Church College, Glasgow, who goes out on a visit of exploration in connection with African Missions.

LIVERPOOL.—A very encouraging work of grace has been going on in connection with Evangelistic services held at Windsor Hall, in this city, by Mrs. Yeoland. During the three weeks the attendance was good, and at the farewell gathering several bore testimony to the saving power of Jesus

"THE BLOOD."—3.

SANCTIFIED BY BLOOD.

By the Author of "The Gospel and its Ministry."

"I WILL sing unto the Lord, for He hath triumphed gloriously: the horse and his rider hath He thrown into the sea." Such was Israel's song of exultation as they stood on the desert sand, and saw the sea close upon their enemies. Not only were they rescued from slavery, but they witnessed the destruction of the power which had enslaved them. Their deliverance was absolute and complete.

But what was their spiritual condition? What was their relationship to God? They were redeemed from the judgment of Egypt, and from the bondage of Egypt; but they had as yet no altar, no covenant, no priest, no sanctuary, no right to approach a holy God, no fitness for his presence. These are privileges and blessings secured to every sinner who believes in Christ; but in the key-pictures of the Pentateuch God has spelled out the truth for us, line upon line, that we may learn the definiteness and fulness of the provision He has made to satisfy his own holiness and the sinner's need. The first thought in redemption is deliverance from all that is against us, whether it be Divine judgment, or the powers of evil which enthralled us. But God would have his people near Him, and without holiness there can be no approach. It is not enough that there should be desires for holiness, and an earnest of its attainment. The sinner must be sanctified before he can draw near to God. Redemption in its fulness includes this, but as the truth is unfolded in the types the two are entirely distinct. It was as a redeemed people that Israel set out upon their wilderness journey to the land of their inheritance. But what was the attitude of God towards them as they gathered around Sinai—their first great Pentecost, "Charge the people, lest they break through unto the Lord to gaze, and many of them perish." Such was the Divine command to Moses.

And when, after the law had been delivered, the leaders and representatives of the people were summoned to the Mount, they were warned to "worship afar off." They could not come nigh; Moses alone was to come near the Lord. The distance was measured out which separated them from God. Such was their condition in the opening scene of the 24th chapter of Exodus. But that chapter marks a great crisis in their spiritual history. The significance of the sacrifice it records is entirely ignored in every system of theology; but yet the importance of the truth it typified cannot easily be exaggerated. The covenant was dedicated by the blood of the great burnt-offering, and that same blood was sprinkled on the people. The sprinkled blood of the Paschal lamb had redeemed them. By the blood of the burnt-offering they were sanctified.

And mark the change it produced in their relationship to God. The very men who, before that sacrifice was offered, had been charged to "worship afar off," were, after that blood had sanctified them, enabled to go up to God. But yesterday they trembled afar off in the camp, now they could be at rest in his presence. "They saw God, and did eat and drink." Nor was this nearness for the Elders only. The people had been warned in terms of the utmost solemnity that any attempt to approach their God was death. But now that they stood in the acceptance of the burnt-offering, the Divine command to that same people was "Let them make Me a sanctuary that I may dwell among them" (xxv. 8).

This twenty-fourth chapter of Exodus is the key to the Epistle to the Hebrews, which takes up our spiritual history after the Passover has been accomplished. In the doctrine of the Epistle the Passover has no place. Its purpose is not to teach how sinners can be rescued from bondage and death, but how they can be brought nigh to God. In the twenty-fourth of Exodus, Moses, the mediator of the old covenant, makes purification for sins, and then goes up to God to receive the full revelation of that covenant, and deliver it to Israel. In Hebrews, the Lord Jesus, the Mediator of the new covenant, having made purification for sins, ascends to the Majesty on high, and "speaks from heaven" to those who are the children of that covenant. The parallel is complete. The next step is the consecration of the High Priest, but this is to anticipate. Heb. ix. 12, 19—21 refers still more expressly to Exodus xxiv. See again Heb. x. 29, which warns the sinner so solemnly against treating as common "the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified." The latter part of chapter xii. is no less definite. We have in the 24th verse the Mediator and "the blood of sprinkling;" not the Passover, but the burnt-offering of the covenant; and the 29th verse uses the very words of Exod. xxiv. 19. The last chapter refers to it again: "Jesus, that He might sanctify the people with his own blood, suffered without the gate" (ver. 12). And the 20th verse, that sublimest utterance of the Epistle, turns back to the subject of the opening verses of the first chapter, and brings before us the Mediator, now become the great Shepherd of the sheep, brought again from the dead through the blood of the everlasting covenant.

Sanctification by blood was no mere theory or fiction for Israel. God was unchanged, and the people were unchanged, but the blood of the covenant made such a change in their relationship with God that, instead of forbidding them to come near Him, He could charge them to prepare a place that He might dwell in their very midst. And the chief argument and purpose of the Epistle to the Hebrews is to prove that the blood of Christ does more in fact for the believer now than the blood of the sacrifices did for Israel. If the blood of the burnt-offering availed to sanctify, so that the people were fitted for the Divine presence in their midst, is it possible that the blood of Christ can fail to accomplish this?

In the popular theology of the hour the truth of what is termed the believer's "standing" is disparaged in favour of the practical element of his condition and walk. What does this mean but to exalt human attainment above what Christ is to the soul that trusts Him? True it is that a practical walk befitting the believer's standing in Christ is essential to the enjoyment of favour and fellowship with God. And this remains to be treated of in the sequel. But the foundation of all blessing is that which is flippantly disparaged as "standing." No height of attainment in Christian character, no measure of consistency of conduct, can of themselves avail to bring the smallest blessing. They are merely the removal of hindrances to blessing. Christ is the ground of all blessing; character and conduct are merely conditions.

But is it possible to state in plainer terms the truth conveyed in the language of the type? The believer has come to "the blood of sprinkling" (Heb. xii. 24); and in that blood, the new covenant is his (1 Cor. xi. 25), and he is sanctified thereby. This is not a theory, but a great Divine fact. If he be redeemed by blood, it behoves him to learn that he is also sanctified by blood. He is called to be holy, but the exhortation is based upon the fact that he is holy. No less than fifty times is the believer so described in the Epistles. The essential thought in sanctification is separation—separation from all evil unto God; and absolute separation can only be through death. Therefore is it that sanctification is ours in Christ, through his death made our own; or, in other words, through his blood. God demands sanctification in a practical sense too; and not only that, but also holiness as a personal attribute. But underlying all is the great truth that we are absolutely sanctified by blood.

In confounding this sanctification with justification, theology has robbed the Church of God of a great truth of immense practical importance. They are entirely distinct in the types, and clearly distinguishable is the doctrine of the Gospel. But the one may serve to explain the other. Just as a sinner is justified and declared to be righteous in virtue of identification with Christ in death and resurrection, so, as really, and on the same ground, is he sanctified and declared to be holy. And further: to slight the justification which is ours in Christ, because of the importance of righteousness in a practical sense, would not be a greater outrage upon God and his truth, than it is to disparage sanctification by blood because of the need of practical holiness. "But rather rejoice that your names are written in heaven," was the Lord's reply to his disciples, when they came to Him exulting in their achievements in his service. When the believer sets a higher value upon his own attainments than upon the provision God has made for him, he is on perilous ground.

MR. DENHAM SMITH.—After six months of earnest evangelistic service in different parts of London, Mr. Smith will preach the Gospel during the next two months in Dublin.

LILLESHALL, SHROPSHIRE.—On Monday, 18th inst., a nine days' Mission, conducted by Mr. H. Thorne, in this pleasant village, was brought to a close by a very happy praise meeting in the tent, when much heartfelt thanksgiving and praise ascended to the God of all grace, from many hearts. The regular workers are greatly cheered by the manifest blessing that has attended Mr. Thorne's faithful, earnest setting forth of the whole counsel of God. The "dinner-hour" addresses for the benefit of the workmen employed in large iron works close at hand, drew large numbers, who listened with reverent attention to the Word of God. A little band of hopeful converts met Mr. Thorne on the last evening to hear his parting counsels, and stood up in the praise meeting as a testimony of blessing received. The Y.M.C.A. Branch here has been reorganised, with the prospect of increased life and activity.

THE PURE LITERATURE SOCIETY.—On the 20th inst., by permission of Mr. and Mrs. Greer, the annual meeting of this Society was held at Grove House, Park-road, St. John's-wood, under the presidency of the Earl of Shaftesbury. The annual report stated that for nearly thirty years the Society has been actively engaged in promoting the circulation of pure and interesting literature. It has supplied books at half price to 5713 libraries for working men, schools, and other institutions, of a total value of 42,798*l*. Funds are still needed to meet the requirements of poorer districts, and 500*l*. will be required for this purpose during the present year. Over 100 magazine associations are connected with the Society, and above 1000 parcels of selected periodicals are sent out monthly from the office in Buckingham-street, Strand. Mr. J. Macgregor referred to the work done by the Society, and explained that they did not publish any books or periodicals themselves, but simply carefully selected those that were suitable. Their list now contained the names of about 4000 volumes. The society had done much good and useful work amongst railway employés, soldiers, sailors, and policemen. The noble chairman, Dr. Angus, Dr. Sinclair Paterson, Rev. Burman Cassin, and other speakers, urged the claims of the Society, which was doing a noble work in combating the evil influences of the cheap and trashy periodicals of the day.

By Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE.

THE TEMPLE CLEANSED.

III.—THE PARABLE OF THE CLEANSING.

IN the midst of all this confusion there stood Jesus the Messiah, the glorious Son of God. It was a strange sight. This very nation of Israel bound together by the hope of His coming. They point on to Him in every part of their ritual, by almost every prophecy and psalm of their Scriptures, by all the great events of their history; yet all the time they are thinking of Him as afar off. And lo, He stands in their midst, unhonoured, unknown, looking upon all the confusion with grief, and indignant. He knots the cord: He speaks in the fierceness of his zeal and the consciousness of his own supreme authority. And before Him go the oxen and the sheep, the money-tables are upset, the dove-sellers hurry forth with their cages, and once more the court of the worshippers is cleared.

Here is the only deliverance for us, the indwelling of the living Saviour. We have too often a religion that knows only the dead Christ, that looks back to one who lived eighteen hundred years ago. We need more than that. There is the religion of the Christ to be, who is coming again in great glory, and then shall He set all things right and put down his enemies under his feet. By all means let us look back adoringly to Him who bare our sins in his own body on the tree. By all means let us look on joyfully to the triumph of our glorious Lord. But I want a present deliverance; a victory now. Look up. The living Christ, the mighty Saviour, standeth in our midst. He comes to make this very temple his abode, to put down the confusion; to hallow all its courts. This is our deliverance, and only this.

Christ Himself dwelling in the heart is the only deliverance from the traditional religion or from the dead forms of the Temple service. He reveals the Father to us, and we worship Him in spirit and in truth. We hold communion with Him, and within us is restored the Holy of holies. We hear the voice of the Father. We have his love shed abroad in the heart. The light of his countenance gladdens us. We have the glorious presence of the King. We know Him and delight in Him as the fairest among ten thousand, and the altogether lovely. "We will come unto him and take up our abode with him," is a promise that the Master waits to fulfil.

The living Christ within us makes us right with our brother. In Him we find the blessed secret of being always true, and humble, and unselfish, and generous. He makes the crooked tempers straight, and pours into the springs of our life something of his own true brotherliness.

The living Christ within us makes us right toward the things of the earth. He restores us to our first position, as men having dominion over the earth. He only can give within us, for wild confusion, peace. In Him we become the children of God, to love and please Him in all things. In Him we become true brothers of all men, to love and serve them. In Him we become able to keep the world in its right place. Surrender to Him the oversight of all the place, the key of every chamber, and He shall set it right.

But is there not another parable that might be added:—

IV.—THE PARABLE OF THE FAILURE?

By this act of daring enthusiasm, Christ at once stood before the people as a prophet. Elias verily had come. The authorities were shamed by his words into new efforts, and the people were roused by them into new demands. Christ had come, had spoken, had cleared the courts; henceforth they were determined to keep them free from such confusion. Never again should there be any ground for such a reproof. Rules of the utmost strictness were introduced. Notices were everywhere set forth forbidding that any should henceforth go up to the House of the Lord "with a staff in his hand, or with his shoes on his feet, or with money in his girdle, or with a sack on his shoulder, or even with dust on his feet, and no one might carry a burden of any kind through the Temple, or spit within its holy precincts." (Geikie.)

And what was the end of it all—authority, lofty resolutions, stringent rules? Three years later Christ came again, and the place that had been a house of merchandise, had sunk down now into a den of thieves!

How often we are content with visits from Christ—visits that reprove and shame us. Then we stir ourselves into great purposes and wonderful intentions, and we let the Christ go forth from the Temple whilst we are arranging what we mean to be and to do. And soon it all ends in a new manifestation of our own weakness, and in the darkening of our despair.

Christ only, by his own presence, can set the Temple in order; Christ only, by his own abiding, can keep the Temple in order.

This is what the blessed Lord would be to thee and me, my brother. This is the purpose of his coming; this is his great salvation. Do not think of Him only as One in whom we have the forgiveness of sins, or the hope of getting to heaven. He comes to dwell within us, that He may make us right with a threefold and glorious rightness; right toward God, right toward our brother, right toward all things. Open the door of the heart to Him; He stands and knocks. Kneel at his feet and give Him the possession; He will come in and dwell in us. His own indwelling shall consecrate the Temple to God, and hallow all its courts.

"For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, ... that He would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith."

And that indwelling is the only consecration. "Christ loved the Church, and gave Himself for it; that He might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the Word, that He might present it to Himself a glorious Church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish."

* * * * *

"I have been reading about holiness," said one to me the other day; "I do wish I could find it."

"Find IT?" I said, "you mean find HIM." Holiness is in Jesus. 'As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God.'"

A week after my friend came to me with a radiant face: "I have found it in HIM."

We think and talk of holiness as if it were getting into the King's garden, climbing over a wall by a tremendous effort, or getting in as a great favour, and plucking a flower which we wear in its fragrance for a day, then keep it pressed and treasured, a faded remembrance of the King's grace. No, holiness is ours only when we open the door of our heart unto the King that He Himself may come in and make this barren place the garden of the Lord, a very paradise wherein He may walk and talk with his child.

HOMES OF THE POOR IN EDINBURGH

AN Edinburgh city missionary has placed on record some very appalling facts, gathered from personal observation, as to the social condition of the lower classes in that famous and cultured city. Extracts from his pamphlet (which has been printed for private circulation) are given in the last week's issue of The Christian Leader. Our contemporary writes that many of the facts cannot fittingly be reproduced in its pages. After remarking on the evils that arise to young women from habits of gambling, love of dress, and scanty pay, the writer describes in the following terms "The Homes of the Poor":—

Another cause of the appalling degradation is the character of the houses which the authorities allow to be provided for working-men. Those who have never personally visited these districts have no idea in what kind of "homes" thousands of their fellow-creatures live. One tenement on the front street, six stories high, has on each story twelve to fourteen families—allow four for each family, and we have 300 people on one stair. The whole building is without proper sanitary arrangements. Many of the "houses" are separated only by a wooden partition, so thin that all loud-speaking in one house is heard in the next—rent, 1s. 9d. to 2s. 9d. a-week. In the closes the state of matters is even worse. Some of the houses, with damp almost dripping from the walls, have hardly any ventilation. One cellar, having three squares of glass for a window, an earthen floor, six feet high, twelve feet square; in this live the father, mother, and grown-up son and daughter; rent, 1s. 6d. a-week. Another habitation, rented at £3 5s. a year, is a corner of the staircase, partitioned off with the remains of old packing-cases, with hardly any light coming in at the mock window.

And then think of the low lodging-houses, in which all kinds of characters mix—washing, eating, &c., going on generally in one common room, the atmosphere of which may be more easily imagined than described. Some of these low lodging-houses for men have a floating population of over a hundred—twenty sleeping in one room; a single bed is a luxury. Try to fancy the religion in such a room—the quiet prayer. Can we wonder that men become still more irreligious when once they have sunk to this level? But in the low lodging-houses for couples there may be from two to six beds in a dormitory about twelve feet square. A scantling of wood, six feet high, divides one from another, but all is exposed in front, and children have to sleep with their parents. We need add nothing; the moral training may be left to common sense to imagine.

Such a state of things in the rich and refined capital of Christian Scotland is enough to make one blush for their country. It seems simple mockery to preach the Gospel to the poor, without making some effectual provision for the abatement of these evils.

TEXT CARDS ON THE CONTINENT.—A lady in Geneva writes of encouragement she has had in the distribution of cards (Mrs. Grimké's) in the tramcars and to the children in the streets. She has gathered groups of little ones around her, promising them a card if they would first learn the text. They did so with great joy, and went home delighted with their prize. The elder people gladly accepted them also. Our correspondent urges travellers on the Continent to take advantage of this mode of doing service for the Lord, in spreading the good seed of the kingdom.

ST. GILES'.—Messrs. Mateer and Parker, from Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Tabernacle, have been holding a five days' Mission in St. Giles'. The meetings were held in the Mission Chapel, Little Wild-street, Drury-lane, commencing on Sunday morning, June 17, at eleven, with an address to Christian workers, and continued every evening until Thursday, the 21st. Our esteemed Irish brother, Mr. Mateer, spoke each evening with much simplicity and considerable power, whilst Mr. Parker sang many of Mr. Sankey's new solos very sweetly, and with striking effect. We have had the joy of pointing inquirers to the Saviour each night. If I mistake not there is a path of much usefulness for these devoted brethren.

ONE YEAR AFTER.

IT is just a year since Messrs. Moody and Sankey moved away from Glasgow, after conducting one of the most successful Missions they ever held. It was, too, one of the longest, extending over some five months. It occurred to us lately, in order to test the results of the work, to make inquiries, and we mentioned three special cases as those on which information, if it could be obtained, would be valuable. The remark is repeated ad nauseam, "Oh, wait till the excitement has passed away, and then—" The prolonged pause usually following is understood to mean a good deal that is untoward and disheartening. Of course, in Mission work, as, indeed, in connection with every other kind of religious effort, a percentage of those impressed fall away, and again take their place among the "lapsed masses." There is, and always will be, the thin, poor soil on which the good seed will drop and apparently flourish for a time, only, however, to be a miserable failure in regard to fruit-bearing.

Now with regard to the three persons we have referred to. The first of these was a divinity student, who, at the time of the visit of the Evangelists, was a sad backslider. Once a successful preacher of the Gospel, much owned of God, spiritual pride had brought him very low. He had, too, given way to drink, and such a wreck was he, that he had taken a very menial situation in connection with the law. He was seen often about the streets in a deplorable state of intoxication, and was generally regarded by those who knew him as perfectly irreclaimable. Said a gentleman who knew him, and who expressed his wonderment at hearing him give his testimony after his restoration to God, "My wife and I, as we saw him pass along in his degraded state, often prayed, 'God help that man!'" This ex-divinity student again took his stand boldly but humbly on the right side during Mr. Moody's meetings; and now he never loses an opportunity of preaching that Gospel which is once more so dear to him. Only recently he was presented with a valuable testimonial by some of those who have benefited by his work.

The second case is that of a baker, a man well advanced in years, who had been scores of times in prison; in fact, he was rarely ever out more than long enough to get drink and to return. He, too, professed his conversion during the meetings, and he still holds faithful to his religious professions. He is living at a village near Glasgow, where recently, at his own expense, he provided a substantial tea for about seventy members of the Mizpah male choir visiting the locality to conduct services there. Our correspondent adds, "He is an earnest, working Christian, and is now as much honoured as he was formerly despised."

Our last case is that of a well-educated man, who acted as a chemist's assistant, and was, in fact, a sort of unregistered doctor in the east end of the city where he lived. He was of a powerful build and strong constitution, which he did his best to destroy, being a very heavy drinker; indeed, he was rarely, in later years, fully sober. Whilst partly intoxicated he was induced to attend one of the Evangelists' services, and there he was talked with and afterwards attended home, with the result that in a day or two he fully decided for Christ. Quite fresh on our memory is the testimony he gave at a subsequent meeting. "Were you tempted?" asked Mr. Moody. "Yes," said the man; "I met one of my boon companions a few days ago, and he asked me to go and have a drink with him. I took him into a side street, and there pulling out my Bible, I said, 'This is my tap now.' My 'friend' said, 'Do you mean it?' and on my assuring him that I did, he looked surprised, turned on his heel, and left me." The speaker is now engaged in Christian work, and has, by his sincerity and unaffectedness, won the esteem of all who have come in contact with him.

It remains to say a few words respecting one part of the active Christian life of Glasgow having its origin in the visit of our American brethren. In what is known as the Cowcaddens district, a northern part of the city, drunkenness was, and is, alas! still fearfully rife, and very few of the inhabitants attended any place of worship. Here, then, was a wide field for evangelising effort, and one, too, that demanded immediate and constant attention. Mr. Moody saw his opportunity, and the Evangelistic Association was not slow in following his excellent advice. Meetings have been held in Cowcaddens almost nightly ever since he and Mr. Sankey left this great manufacturing centre. The Cowcaddens Free Church, which was lent for the purpose, has been well filled every Sabbath evening. On week-day nights the attendance up to the month of May has averaged 229; and since then, the weather being warmer, and uninviting for indoor gatherings, 179. Some hundreds of names have been taken of those who at this church and at these services have professed to accept Christ as their Saviour, and these persons have been systematically visited in their homes. Deducting a percentage of loss through individuals changing address, and so not found, and a percentage of cases where effects seem to have passed away, there yet remains probably quite three-fourths of the whole number of names originally taken, of good cases, now fully particularised, of men, women, and young people owning to having been savingly changed through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and apparently growing in grace and knowledge. Since the workers are becoming more experienced, better and better results are being attained, and the work still goes on, blessedly and increasingly successful.

Did space permit, much might be said as to the free breakfasts, established during the first visit to Glasgow of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and which are still given each Sabbath morning. During all these years, we believe, not a penny has ever been asked in support of the heavy outlay hereby occasioned, and though the donations are published month by month, they are mentioned anonymously, or only with the giver's initials attached. About two thousand adults and children receive the bread that perisheth Sunday by Sunday, at a weekly cost of £20, or thereabouts. But not only so, these poor creatures, some of whom have reached the lowest depths of degradation and misery, have an opportunity given them at each of these breakfasts of hearing of "the unsearchable riches of Christ.

Such, then, are a few of the results of earnest, self-sacrificing labours among a densely crowded community; the sum and the reward of these labours eternity alone will reveal. W. B.

THE GLASGOW MIZPAH BAND.

The Christian Leader of last week gives an interesting account of the first anniversary celebration of this band of "reconstructed" men:—

"The conspicuous success which has crowned the efforts of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association, in knitting together men who have been rescued by grace from the thraldom of strong drink, deserves the earnest consideration of every follower of Christ. The first annual demonstration of the Mizpah Band has just passed off with great success, and the work which has been accomplished during the year is a glorious testimony to the genuine character of the revival of last year under Mr. Moody and his consecrated workers. The form of the anniversary meetings made them exceedingly interesting, and well fitted to extend the valuable work. The Mizpah choir and members met in the Mizpah Hall, Cadogan-street (Dr. Somerville's old church), and marched to the tent on the Green, and here a mass meeting took place. Warm-hearted friends of the movement were seated on the platform, and stirring addresses were delivered. The address of Dr. Wallace was specially enjoyed. He gave instances of men having been reclaimed through the Band who were now rejoicing in deliverance. The meeting in the tent over, an adjournment was made to the Evangelistic Hall, James Morrison-street, where a soirée was held. Much credit is due to Mr. William Moodie, the efficient conductor of the Mizpah choir. Mr. Moodie has undertaken the work in such a thorough manner that any notice of this good work would be incomplete without mentioning his name. He meets the choir every Saturday afternoon at four' in the Christian Institute; and this is a wise arrangement, as Saturday is such a trying day. May the great movement go on extending its field of operation! With Dr. Wallace, I hope that by next anniversary the singing portion of the band will reach a thousand members, so that the city may be divided into ten sections, with a hundred singing men in each."

DR. SOMERVILLE IN SOUTH AFRICA.

SIR,—I send you a brief account of the visit of Dr. Somerville, of Glasgow, to our town. Prior to his coming, a committee was formed, to arrange for the meetings, consisting of nearly all the evangelical ministers of our town, and our large and magnificent Town Hall was secured.

Port Elizabeth is one of the largest towns in the whole of South Africa, having a population of nearly 20,000. The inhabitants are chiefly European, but there are many Hottentots and half-castes, Fingoes, Kaffirs, and Malays. Among the Europeans are churches for well-nigh all sections of Christians: Episcopalian, Presbyterian, Independent, Baptist, and Wesleyan; and among the natives are extensive Independent, Wesleyan, and Episcopalian Missions. There is room for much special evangelistic work, and most of us hailed the worthy Doctor's coming with delight. Our meetings began on Saturday evening, April 28, and continued through the following week. Large congregations assembled, and on the Sunday evening our Town Hall was crowded to excess. Every day, at noon, a service was held in the schoolroom of Trinity Episcopal Church, for Christians, and was very well attended. The meetings were supported by all classes of the community, and Christians of all denominations joined in them. Great blessing was experienced by nearly all God's people, and we believe many of the unconcerned were awakened. A Ladies' Christian Association has been formed as one result of the Doctor's Mission.

We have felt deeply grateful to God for sending his dear servant among us, to cheer us in our work, and to arouse the unconverted. We are not often favoured in this "Great Thirst Land" with visits from such men as Dr. Somerville, and they are, therefore, specially refreshing. We sincerely wish Dr. Somerville and Mr. Cumming, who is with him, the abundant blessing of the Lord, and our prayers will follow them in their future work. People have no idea in England how we in this far-off land appreciate such opportunities, and we are looking forward to the Doctor's return, when he will lecture for us before proceeding to Cape Town and England. We ask the prayers of your readers for South Africa.

HENRY J. BATTS,
Sec. Ministers' Committee.

Port Elizabeth, South Africa.

THE GOSPORT MISSION KETCH.—Mr. Henry Cook, of Gosport, has again visited Havre in his Mission ketch Annie. On the Lord's day, and every night of the week, crowded French meetings have been held. The Word preached has been received with joy and gladness. Mr. Cook's visits here will not soon be forgotten. Little children as well as adults have shared its benefits. We are now expecting to do a good work among the soldiers. Special meetings for them are to be held every evening one hour before the usual public services commence. Will your readers pray for our brother's work? JOHN W. HERIVEL, Pasteur.

20, Boulevard François jur., Havre.

A FIFTEEN DAYS' SPECIAL MISSION was brought to a close at Bignold Hall, Forest Gate, E., on Sunday, June 17. The preachers have been Lord Radstock, Dr. Laseron, Messrs. Henry Varley, F. C. Spurr, and others. The Lord has wonderfully owned this effort in the conversion of many souls, and the quickening of his children. The afternoon Bible readings, conducted by Mr. F. C. Spurr, have been very helpful to the Lord's people, and the Mission services every night have been times of power and blessing. At the closing service, when Mr. Henry Varley preached, the hall was densely crowded; the Word was with power, many confessing Christ in the after-meeting. This branch of the Evangelistic Mission has been richly blessed of God.

STIRRING WORDS FROM THE SOUTH.

WE have seldom read more stirring and seasonable words of address than those which fell from the lips of Mr. R. Searle, as chairman of the South Australian Congregational Union, at its annual meeting held in Adelaide last April. The subject was "Some of the more prominent Aspects of Christian Living." His appeal to Christians for individual consecration to the service of Christ was unusually powerful and strong. We quote from it in the hope that it may produce salutary impressions upon some of the many idlers in the vineyard to be found amongst ourselves, as well as in the far-off colony. Speaking of the urgent need of consecrated effort Mr. Searle said:—

"The work to be accomplished is so great that the present staff of ministers, Sunday-school teachers, and other workers, cannot possibly overtake it. Thousands of boys and girls are growing up without any knowledge of God or the Bible. Hundreds of families never attend a place of worship, and their children are receiving no religious instruction whatever. Vice and ignorance, dirt and disease, drunkenness and crime, are around us on every hand. There are houses so filthy that the germs of disease lurk in every corner; there are children so ignorant that they know not the name of God or Christ, except, indeed, they hear it in some vulgar jest or blasphemous oath; there are men and women so degraded by drunkenness that they have sunk below the level of the beast; there are orphans lacking the hand of love to guide them; there are widows needing not only bread and raiment, but what is sweeter still, loving sympathy and help; there are many sick ones lying on beds in weakness and pain, who are wanting the common necessaries of life, and many a dying man or woman who look in vain for a hand to smooth the pillow, for a cup to moisten the parched lips, or for a gentle voice to whisper divine words of comfort to their trembling spirits.

"Surely it is enough to make good men weep to see misery and sin so rampant, and yet so few of Christ's followers who, in a genuine practical way, are making earnest effort to stem the torrent of iniquity that is rolling by our very doors.

APPEAL TO CHRISTIAN WOMEN.

"Christian matrons, cannot you help in this holy crusade? Is it necessary that household cares (important as they are) should claim all your precious time? Could you not devote some hours of the week to ministering to the sick, and caring for the dying? Are there not some of your frail, sin-polluted sisterhood whom you could by sympathy and love lead into paths of sobriety and virtue? Christian maidens, who, like Mary of old, have learnt at the Master's feet, cannot you help? Is it needful you should give so much time to dressing, and visiting, and partying, and fancy-work? Could not some of the precious hours be devoted to teaching the thousands of ignorant children that crowd our city streets, or to assisting the old and decrepit, and smoothing their pathway to the grave? Is it not true of some of you, that the frivolities of life have too large a place in your heart? Depend upon it, you will find the truest happiness not at the dancing party, or the theatre, but in doing the Master's work."

A CALL TO YOUNG MEN.

"And you young men, in the freshness and glory of your young manhood, is there no work for you? I know many of you that wear the King's livery; but you are not doing his work. You smoke your pipe, or play your game of whist, or take your ease with slippered feet, whilst your less fortunate brothers, less hedged round by godly ties or pleasant associations, are slipping down the broad road to death. Do you know that hundreds of your fellows are fast going to the devil through the fascination of drink? Do you know of the traps, and snares, and pit-falls, which are nightly laid for them, that they may be robbed of their purity and virtue? Yes! you know it all! and yet you never stretch out a helping hand or raise a warning voice! Do you dare to utter that Cain-like excuse, 'Am I my brother's keeper?' Ask your conscience! ask your Bible! My young brothers, be up and doing! arouse you from your sloth! use the talents which God has given you! Do all you can for the bodies and souls of those around you, if at last you wish to hear, 'Well done, good and faithful servant.'"

The following words on remedies for existing evils in connection with church organisation contain not a little practical wisdom. They are perhaps too radical in their suggestions for some lovers of conventional customs and of stereotyped plans of action; but they point in a direction to which the churches must turn their attention with earnestness and readiness to discern the signs of the times, if they are to retain their hold upon the people.

THE REMEDIES PROPOSED.

"First, let us follow the Christlike method of giving practical sympathy to those who are outside the organisations of Church life. Let us show them that we have a real interest in them and their children, in their homes and their work, in their joys and their sorrows, in fact in all that concerns their common everyday life, and having fed the hungry, clothed the naked, and educated the ignorant, we shall probably find them all the more ready to sit at the Master's feet. Second, let us do away with pews and pew-rents; let us put chairs or comfortable open benches, to which all shall have an equal right, and where the rich and the poor together can worship God as brethren and sisters of the same great family. Let no one be compelled to pay for a seat in the house of God; let the widow give her mite and the rich man of his abundance. Third, as far as possible, without diminishing the deep spirituality of worship, give greater variety and cheerfulness to the service, and endeavour to induce the congregation to join heartily in all.

"I am thoroughly convinced that if some church would have the courage to work on the lines thus briefly indicated, it would not only achieve a great success, but would help practically to solve the difficult problem of how to win back a multitude of men and women who are now passively antagonistic to Christian faith and worship. There are many who though they could not at first be induced to attend the ordinary worship of God's house, would in most cases be willing to attend a service of another description. The influence of song is so universally recognised that it is strange so few efforts have been made to attract non-churchgoers by well-selected services of song. I am persuaded that large numbers would be attracted by them, and that they might be made the stepping-stone to a brief mixed service, where prayer might be offered and the Gospel preached."

The concluding words of the address point to

without which no real success in work can be achieved:—

"If the Divine Spirit were more sought and more manifest in our midst, we should not have to complain of cold and lifeless worship, we should not have to mourn the paucity of attendance at our week-day services, we should not be so engrossed in purely secular pursuits. We should not lead such selfish lives or take such pleasure in worldly amusements. Were his presence and guidance more sought and felt, the precious time that God has given us would be put to better use. Our young men would not waste their leisure in lazily sitting and smoking when so many of their fellows are being led to ruin. The daughters of our homes would not fritter away the hours in the fripperies and fopperies of fashionable visiting, or assisted by weak music and silly small-talk, go whirling down the mazy dance until often the prolonged hours of night deepen into the early hours of morning. It is the absence of the Sacred Fire, promised by God to his waiting people, but given only to those who earnestly seek it, that causes the human spirit to be content with the muck-rake, and to grovel in the dust, instead of finding its highest joy in doing the Father's will."

For the Young.

THE WIFE'S NEW STORY.

THE story, ma'am? Why, really now, I haven't much to say;
If you had come a year ago, and then again to-day,
No need of any word to tell, for your own eyes could see
Just what the friends of Temperance have done for John and me.

A year ago I hadn't flour to make a batch of bread,
And many a night these little ones went hungry to their bed;
Just peep into the pantry, ma'am; there's sugar, flour, and tea;—
That's what the friends of Temperance have done for John and me.

The pail that holds the butter he used to fill with beer;
He hasn't spent a cent for drink for two months and a year;
He pays his debts, he's well and strong, and kind as man can be:—
That's what the friends of Temperance have done for John and me.

He used to sneak along the streets feeling so mean and low,
And always felt ashamed to meet the folks he used to know;
He looks the world now in the face, he steps off bold and free;—
That's what the friends of Temperance have done for John and me.

Why, at the shop, the other day, when a job of work was done,
The boss declared, of all his men the steadiest one was John;
"I used to be the worst, my wife," John told me, and says he—
"That's what the friends of Temperance have done for you and me."

The children were afraid of him, his coming stopped their play;
Now every night, when supper's done, and the table cleared away,
The boys will frolic round his chair, the baby climb his knee:—
That's what the friends of Temperance have done for John and me.

Oh, yes! the sad, sad times are gone, the sorrow and the pain;
The children have their father back, and I my John again.
Don't mind my crying, ma'am, indeed it's just for joy, to see
All that the friends of Temperance have done for John and me.

And mornings when he's gone to work, I kneel right down and say,
"Father in Heaven, oh, help dear John to keep his pledge to-day!"
And every night, before I sleep, thank God on bended knee
For what the friends of Temperance have done for John and me.

MANITOBA.—A correspondent writes asking prayer for a small company of Christians meeting in a remote district of Manitoba. Mr. Duncan is holding services there, and hopes to continue.

BANFFSHIRE RAILWAY.—The evangelistic work in connection with the Banffshire railways is going on favourably. Messrs. Marr and McDougal, the missionaries, meet with every encouragement in their work, and their labours are highly appreciated by the men. The social meetings on pay-nights have been successful, and have had a good influence in checking drunkenness and prompting sobriety. The Earl and Countess of Seafield have been much interested in the movement, and have done all in their power to help on the cause. There are about 600 men on the works, and about 200 pledged abstainers.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week, in a Double Number, price 2d., we shall give full reports of the leading addresses delivered at the Mildmay Conference.

The Primitive Methodist Conference has met this year at South Shields, their President being Rev. Wm. Cutts, of London. The report for the past year showed an increase of 5151 church members, not a single district having reported a decrease.

It appears that the vigorous protest made by the Highlanders of Strome Ferry against Sunday trading has resulted in the railway directors issuing a notice to the effect that no fish shall be despatched from there on Sundays, at least for the present.

The Swedenborgians have just been holding their seventy-third annual meeting. Resolutions were passed pledging the society to further reprint and issue at nominal prices the writings of Swedenborg, and that with special reference to their circulation among the working classes. It behoves the friends of orthodox truth to be awake to the insidious advances of the delusive and ensnaring doctrines of Swedenborgianism, which completely explain away the leading truths of Christianity.

The Chicago Times reports a passing visit paid to that city by Mr. Sankey, "on his way west to enjoy a vacation." He addressed a meeting in Farwell Hall, and, according to the reporter, "entertained the audience with several hymns." The Chicago scribe appears to have endowed Mr. Sankey with the gift of prophecy in a way which must have surprised the Evangelist not a little. The following statements will, we trust, come true at no distant day, but as yet the events which they describe must be written in the future tense, rather than in the past or present:—

He [Mr. Sankey] gave an interesting sketch of the progress of evangelism in London, saying that the Moody meetings were held in two large halls, each with a seating capacity of 5000. The halls are so arranged that they can be taken to pieces and moved. While a meeting is going on in one, the other is carried to a new district, and so alternately.

The same issue of the Chicago paper that contains a notice of Mr. Sankey's visit gives seven long and closely-printed columns of outline sermons delivered in the city on the preceding day. We wish our leading dailies in London, Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, Edinburgh, and Glasgow would in this respect take a leaf out of the book of their Transatlantic contemporaries.

A private asylum, for a select number of ladies of unsound mind, has been conducted for some years with great success by Dr. and Mrs. Craig, of Bishopstone House, Bedford. The patients have been Christians themselves or the relatives of Christians, and 61 per cent. of them have been restored to soundness of mind, and to home. This is an answer to the mistaken idea of many that such persons need to be withdrawn from Christian association in order to recovery. Dr. and Mrs. Craig are themselves Christians, and endeavour to make a judicious use of the Word of God, with constant prayer for the Great Physician's healing power to be made manifest.

Captain Smith, of the Evangelisation Society, has issued "A Word of Caution" to the workers under his supervision. His words as to the importance of care not to allow mere emotion and surface impression to be mistaken for a true work of God upon the heart are very timely, and deserve earnest attention. Our Lord says of the wise man that "he digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock." For lack of this, many so-called conversions prove ephemeral, and disappoint in their results those who counted upon them. Our Lord in his ministry was very slow to take advantage of mere multitudes and external surroundings, and in times of popular excitement in his favour was specially heart-searching and plain in his teachings. Nothing will bear the test of the coming day but that which is truly spiritual and of the Holy Ghost. It is not enough for preachers to be careful as to laying the foundation, but "let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon," lest he be found to have employed wood, hay, stubble, rather than precious stones.

Captain Smith says, referring to the desire to tabulate results:—

In many of the letters received of late there has been an attempt to estimate the results of the preaching of the Gospel, and to count the numbers of the so-called converts almost night by night. Such a system can only hinder the Gospel, and be productive of sad disappointment, and I desire earnestly to warn all our fellow-workers against adopting or encouraging it. Is it not like 1 Chron. xxi. 2, 3? I heard lately of one of our Evangelists praying God at one place he was visiting that, at the meetings he held, "a hundred souls might be distinctly manifested as converted." What warrant have we in Scripture for such a prayer? It is not in accordance with the teaching of our Lord in the parable of the sower to count as converts all those who profess faith immediately after hearing the Word. If we honour our Lord's teaching we shall patiently wait to see, not which seed springs up, but which bears fruit, for it is to the fruit we are to look for the only true evidence of conversion.

Further, as to pressure being applied to induce immediate testimony to conversion, he says:—

Moreover, I think it most unwise to urge those who are supposed to be saved, after a meeting, immediately to make public profession of their faith in Christ. Many under the impulse of overwrought feelings, and sometimes from a wish to satisfy the friend who presses them so hard, make at such times, in all sincerity, profession of a faith which they do not possess. Others receive Christ into their hearts by faith, but are quite unable to give expression in words to their new experience. It is impossible for us to read the heart, or to distinguish at the outset between faith and feeling in others. Let us not then announce that such and such persons have been converted. Let us rather endeavour to preach, to explain, to warn so clearly that none may deceive themselves, nor be tempted to confess faith in Christ from passing emotion or excitement only, nor profess to enter his service without being prepared to renounce that of Satan. Conversion is not the fruit of passing emotion, but is the result of God's dealing with the heart and conscience by His Spirit through his Word, and we must see that our preaching is addressed to the heart and conscience, and not only or chiefly to the feelings.

The Committee for the conduct of Gospel Services in Theatres, Halls, and Mission Rooms in London have closed their twenty-fourth season. At a recent meeting of friends and helpers many testimonies were given as to the favour with which this movement is regarded by the masses of the people. Mr. Udall, the Secretary, reported that the past winter's work had been marked by very decided cases of conversion. We note with regret that there is a considerable deficit in the exchequer, which we trust a generous and discriminating public will make good.

Our recent notes on the facilities now afforded for evangelising the continent of Europe receive fuller confirmation from a letter in last week's issue of The Nonconformist, by Rev. R. S. Ashton, Secretary of the Evangelical Continental Society:—

M. Hirsch, one of the most devoted Evangelists in France, and a very powerful speaker withal, says that during the three weeks which he spent in the departments of the Corrèze and the Creuse—a region which three or four years ago was destitute of any organised Protestant Church—he felt that the Spirit of God was at work in the hearts of many who attended his meetings. At Brive, where our agent, M. Cremer, is stationed, quite a little church has been gathered, and a Sunday-school is springing up. At Tulle, M. Hirsch says, "Our expectations were surpassed, and our weak faith confounded. Long before the hour the theatre was filled to overflowing. I was listened to for two hours, and not the slightest sign of impatience was shown." We have since heard that Mr. McAll has had his attention directed to this important town, and is about to open a hall there. Before going to the Corrèze, M. Hirsch visited several small towns in the Ardennes district in the North of France, and found the people very hostile to Catholicism, but not to religion. He discovered that the Bible is regularly read by several families in the places he visited.

Pastor Bourgeon, of Caen, and Pastor Moyer, of the Paris Inner Mission, also report similarly of tours made by them in the districts of La Perche and the Oise, stating that on all sides tracts are eagerly received, and large audiences gathered to hear the truth. At Ansauvillers, out of a population of 1000, at least 200 persons attended, some having walked a long distance in order to be present. Speaking of Italy, Mr. Ashton writes:—

Excursions are arranged for in Umbria, Calabria, and in Sicily; and we trust we shall soon have good tidings to report of the labours of our brethren. A tentative journey has been made by Rev. Signor Varnier to some of the towns in the interior of Sicily. He found the people very accessible, and ready to listen, but excessively ignorant. The majority know not that there is such a book as the Bible. Some progress has been made of late in regard to education, but as regards religion, the darkness of the middle ages prevails. This kind of work is somewhat perilous in Italy. Priestly power is still great, and as "the end justifies the means," serious trouble, and even danger to life may arise. The Evangelists, therefore, need the prayers of all their brethren, both for the success of their labours and for their personal protection. They are, in all cases, to travel two and two, one of the number being a colporteur. It is thus hoped that in every place visited some portions of God's Word will be left behind as a seed from which a blessed harvest may arise.

We hail these testimonies with triumphant joy and praise, and feel sure they cannot be read by earnest disciples of Christ without producing deep impressions of thankfulness, and at the same time of deep concern, the more so as labourers and means of support are so greatly needed. We can but re-echo Mr. Ashton's words, "The Mission-fields of Europe call for ever-increasing attention and prayer on the part of English Christians."

The death is announced of Rev. J. E. Salkinson, Missionary to the Jews at Vienna. He is spoken of as the finest writer of Hebrew in his day, and certainly possessed talents of highest order and of special value in the service of Christ, to which he had zealously devoted them. He lived long enough to complete his Hebrew version of the New Testament, on which he had been engaged for twenty years. This work is in course of publication by the Trinitarian Bible Society. Mr. Salkinson, at the time of his death, was connected with the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews.

The Swedes have arranged to celebrate the 400th anniversary of the establishment of a printing press in their country, on the 8th of July. It was first set up by John Snell, a German. Printing has gone on regularly at Stockholm since 1491. The Upsala Press was established in 1510.

Rev. W. B. Doherty, of Bristol, writes to The Record on the importance of Bible-classes, specially held for boys of the upper and middle classes, and instances the success of one he has himself established, on Sunday afternoons, at his own house, for lads from twelve to sixteen. He states that the study of Scripture and Theology proves of great interest to the boys, and that the work is full of promise as to its results. He justly says:—

There is scarcely any class more neglected as to Scriptural knowledge and personal dealing with them, in all love and gentleness, as to the state of their souls.

In most congregations there are numbers of youths to be found who are not reached by Sunday-school instruction; these furnish a field of special importance, and one which should be vigorously worked. Doubtless special adaptation for it is required, but there is no lack of power on the part of the Holy Spirit to qualify those upon whom the matter may be laid. There is never a work to be done for which God cannot provide the worker to do it.

Dr. E. Pressensé, in a letter to the Christian World, calls special attention to the enthusiastic meetings which have been held in Paris, in connection with the jubilee of the French Protestant Mission to the Basutos. The presence of the veteran pioneer of this useful Mission, M. Eugène Casalis, imparted special interest to the gathering; his account of his first entrance to Basutoland fifty years ago, when no Christian had set foot in it, furnishing a striking contrast to the condition of things there now. Large numbers of representatives of all Protestant churches attended the meetings.

Dr. Pressensé thus sums up the results achieved by the Mission as at present seen:—

The missionaries have found that our losses during the late war were less heavy than was supposed, and that the Mission is recovering very satisfactorily. There have been already admitted or re-admitted since the war 396 persons, raising the total number of communicants to 4023. The catechumens are 1070, and others are being daily added. Before the late calamities we had 68 chapels, now we have only 67, so that we have only lost one. We had 122 catechists and teachers; now we have only 105, a serious diminution, but not surprising, since these poor working men were the very ones who had to expose themselves to death for their country. The Normal school and the Scripture school being again fully at work, we may well hope that these gaps in the ranks will soon be filled up.

The death is announced of Dr. Colenso, Bishop of Natal, on the 20th inst. His influence on modern thought in relation to the inspiration of the Word of God has been widely prejudicial to the reverence and respect in which that Book should ever be held. He will always be remembered as one who, by his free handling of sacred themes, did much to promote rationalistic views and ideas. At the same time, he rendered good service in other directions; and among the Zulus at least, his name will be long cherished as that of a friend and benefactor of their race. He was in his seventieth year, and had been thirty years Bishop of Natal.

A Churchman of very different stamp has also passed away during the last few days. We refer to Dr. Irons, Prebendary of St. Paul's, and Rector of St. Mary Woolnoth. He was the son of Rev. Joseph Irons, formerly of Camberwell, a high Calvinistic preacher of great repute in his time. Dr. Irons wrote many controversial works in opposition to modern scepticism and free-thought.

Rev. R. H. Haweis has been preaching in his church at Marylebone on "Unmarried Women." While admitting that marriage was the divinely intended rule, he claimed that under special conditions, and for individuals, an unmarried life had peculiar advantages. He dwelt upon "the beautiful ardour, the gracious enthusiasm, of a woman who had a mission, an interest, a gift, the cultivation of which absorbed her, and noted the new and splendid spheres of activity which the Christian religion had opened out for unmarried women and widows."

His concluding words were of practical value for all. They were to the following effect:—

Sacrifice and affection, these are the two life purifiers, and there is room for both in every state. Soul is, after all, greater than sex. It may be that sex distinction is but an accident of time—one phase in the long spiritual development of the ages—and that "in heaven they shall neither marry nor be given in marriage." Certain it is that the Master, when He comes and calls for you, will not ask were you married or unmarried, but "Are you the children of the Kingdom? Did you love me and keep my commandments? Did you feed My sheep? Did you gather the lambs in your bosom? Did you bind up the broken-hearted?" Then—married or unmarried—enter ye into the joy of your Lord!

It does indeed indicate a turn of the times to read that a stained glass window has been placed in Elstow Church as a memorial of John Bunyan. Few men are more worthy of being remembered than "the immortal dreamer," and certainly few men who have ever lived are less likely to be forgotten. While the language lasts, The Pilgrim's Progress will remain to perpetuate his fame.

Mr. H. E. Davis, Ladymead, Walton by Clevedon, Somerset, sends us the following query, to which, perhaps, some of our readers may be able to reply:—

DEAR SIR,—Do you know of any provident organisation by which domestic servants can secure for themselves some provision for the years when they can no longer earn wages? The Post-office, and I believe other annuities, are deferred to the age of sixty; but this, in the case of women-servants, is at least seven, if not rather ten, years beyond the time up to which they can hope to hold situations and earn wages.

If there be no supply for this need, perhaps this very inquiry may suggest its consideration to some one able and willing to advocate such a provident association for those who spend their strength and health in our service, and to whom we are beholden for so much of the comfort of our own lives, and especially of our declining years.

If, happily, there be supply for this need, you, Sir, or your readers, are certain to be acquainted with it. Will you kindly give me the requisite information?

The symbolism of Scripture includes in a most marked degree the figurative use of various numerals, notably so the number "Seven." Mr. Stevenson Blackwood has just published an interesting little volume giving a résumé of all the instances he has been able to trace of its occurrence in the sacred volume. It is published at this office, and we believe many of our readers will be glad to have their attention called to the fact of its publication. Its suggestiveness to preachers and teachers, as well as to private readers of the Word, will make it a welcome addition to the many Bible hand-books already in use. The book is unique in its method and design, and will lead to much fresh searching of the inspired Word of Truth.

Christians unattached to any organised community of believers may learn a lesson of practical value from the following incident, which we cull from the pages of a contemporary. Church fellowship is regarded very lightly in these days by many, and doubtless there is need of its being made more real and fraternal in many cases, in order to induce greater attention to its importance, and utility in reference to Christian life:—

An old sea captain was riding in a railway carriage, and a young man sat down by his side. He said, "Young man, where are you going?" "I am going to the city to live." "Have you letters of introduction?" "Yes," said the young man, and he pulled some of them out. "Well," said the old sea captain, "have you a church certificate?" "Oh yes," replied the young man; "I did not suppose you desired to look at that." "Yes," said the sea captain, "I want to see that. As soon as you reach the city present that to some Christian church. I am an old sailor, and I have been up and down in the world; and it is my rule, as soon as I get into port, to fasten my ship fore and aft to the wharf, although it may cost a little wharfage, rather than have my ship out in the stream, floating hither and thither with the tide."

HIGHLAND TEMPERANCE LEAGUE.

THE third annual report of this Society shows a great work of Gospel Temperance being done in the Highlands and islands of Scotland. The three agents have addressed meetings, numbering from a handful to thousands of people, in churches, schoolrooms, halls, private houses, and in caves by the sea-shore. During the year nearly 10,000 have either donned the blue ribbon or signed the pledge. The last Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland, in its Temperance report, acknowledges with gratitude the work done. At the last meeting of the Free Synod of Ross, the convener of the Temperance committee said, having referred to the efforts of the various Temperance societies, more especially to those of the Highland Temperance League, and the great success which had attended the labours of its advocates, it was scarcely possible to determine the moral and spiritual results that had accrued from this movement; results which should rejoice the heart of every Christian minister and office-bearer of the churches.

The poverty of the Highlands, the widely-scattered population, difficulty of access in many cases, and the severe storms of winter among the hills, and boating among the islands, render the work most arduous. Yet God has wonderfully blessed it. The Highlanders have nobly helped the cause, but a great proportion of the funds must come from the wealthier Lowlands. Mr. Arthur Robertson, the Gaelic deputy, is now in London pleading this cause; £200 is required this year to prevent the work suffering positive loss. He may be addressed, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

A Gospel service in the Gaelic language was held on a recent Sabbath evening in the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, by Mr. Robertson. The hall was well filled. At the close of the service an unanimous desire was expressed that similar services in Gaelic should be continued. The Rev. Nigel McNeil, who was present, kindly agreed to hold Gaelic services on following Sabbaths, at 6.30 p.m., in the same place. Highlanders in London will rejoice at this arrangement, and will surely gather around Mr. Neil, and encourage him in his service for Christ to his Celtic brethren.

BARNAVE MISSION.—Any one wishing for a copy of the report of this Mission may obtain it from Mr. William L. R. M'Cluer, 49, Newington-green, N.

MR. GEORGE MULLER ON HIS TRAVELS.

ON Monday evening, June 18, at Bethesda Chapel, Bristol, Mr. George Müller gave a lengthened account of his recent labours in Russia, Poland, and various parts of Europe. As so many prayers had ascended from beloved brethren and sisters on behalf of himself and wife, it seemed suitable, he said, that he should give a brief account of the Lord's dealings with them on this ninth missionary tour.

Before giving details of the tour, he briefly enumerated the special objects which he had in view in all his labours in the different countries. One object was, to seek in the most simple, clear, and decided way to preach the Gospel of the grace of God. This he did because so many persons who are truly in earnest about their souls rest on their feelings, and do not see distinctly how, through trust in Christ alone, irrespective of feelings, the blessing is obtained. Another object was, to lead the children of God to the enjoyment of the truth connected with their standing in Christ, because so many, who there is ground to trust have believed in Christ, do not know they are born again, are the children of God, have obtained the forgiveness of sins, and that they stand as justified before God through faith in Christ. Another object was, to do his part in seeking to bring the children of God back to the Scriptures, to try everything by them, to have but one single standard for all their ways in religion and for the affairs of this life. He sought to exhort the children of God everywhere to become lovers of the Word of God, and to encourage them daily, habitually, systematically, prayerfully, to read through the Scriptures, in order that they might be brought to love the Word of God, to make it the man of their counsel, and to become more and more men and women of one Book. God be praised, he knew of some instances during the last eight years of his service in which this had been accomplished.

Another and a principal object was to promote the unity of the children of God. There is too much denominationalism, and too much standing aloof one from the other. In a feeble measure he sought to unite the hearts of the children of God as the heart of one man. For this reason he went among all denominations, provided they were sound in the foundation truths, and he was not required to do anything he could not do with a good conscience. If we stood aloof from one another till we saw eye to eye in every way, we should never be drawn together. He did not say that he had been able to accomplish everything that he desired; for one has to sow in hope and faith, but he had full reason to believe that in many instances this had been greatly owned and blessed. One instance was given of a result which occurred in the United States (at Washington) during his visit there about five years ago. Meetings of pastors of various denominations were held, and proved so blessed, that one of the number proposed such meetings should be continued after his departure, and accordingly meetings of a united character have since been periodically held.

Another object was to lead beloved brethren and sisters to walk in separation from the world, and to aim at real true conformity to the mind of Christ. Lastly, he was anxious to instruct Christians about the true character of this dispensation.

At the commencement of the last tour he preached a few times at Weymouth. While there he did not hear of any particular blessing, but a few days since he received a letter saying how great the blessing had been while he was there.

DUSSELDORF.

He had visited this place six years ago. While there on that occasion, a dear, godly man, a city missionary, came to him in much distress of soul, saying: "I am come to get a little comfort and encouragement from you. I have six sons; they are all grown up. For many years I have been praying for them, but they remain in the same state. They give not the least sign of concern about their souls." He replied, "Go on to pray and pray more earnestly than ever. Expect also answers to your prayers, and you will find that you have to praise God." When he was there this time, this very man came to him, saying: "I have to communicate good news. When I saw you six years ago, I said to myself, how strange that I didn't see that myself before, and that I must go and hear this from you. And I resolved that I would pray more earnestly than ever. Now I have to tell you that two months after I had seen you, five of my sons were brought to the knowledge of the Lord, and all these six years have walked consistently, and the sixth son has some measure of concern about his soul." He (Mr. Müller) mentioned this circumstance especially for the encouragement of those who have unconverted children for whom they have been long praying.

From Düsseldorf he went to a small village, at the special invitation of a minister there. At this place he preached in the parish church and also in a public hall. People came as much as twenty miles to attend the services.

The next place was Mühlheim, in which he found a great deal of spiritual life. There he preached to crowded congregations. Many persons walked fifteen or twenty miles to be present. After this he visited Wiesbaden, Mannheim, Heidelberg, Munich, and Vienna. In all these places he found much spiritual death and popery. In Vienna

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IS VERY RESTRICTED.

For instance, he preached in a Methodist chapel. This was an extra meeting, and hymns were not allowed to be sung. If they had sung, a policeman would have come in and stopped the meeting, and the minister would have been fined or imprisoned. Any stranger wishing to hold meetings has to give notice three days previously, and to announce the subject on which he is going to speak. Christians not belonging to the State Church, such as Methodists or Baptists, are not allowed to bring their children between the ages of seven and fourteen years to their meetings, but they are under the Roman Catholic priest. On account of this, efforts for the relief of Christians have been made by the Evangelical Alliance, and a further memorial to the Emperor is shortly to be presented. Prayer for the success of this effort was requested.

He next visited Pesth (in Hungary), then Prague, Dresden, and Leipsic. After this he went, according to a long-cherished desire, to KROPPENSTAEDT, HIS NATIVE PLACE.

He had long had the desire that God might be pleased to give him the honour before departing this life to preach there. He had opportunities of preaching the Gospel in the simplest way to the people, who were all eyes and ears, for he addressed them as one who was born in the place. He looked back with gratitude to God for permitting him to go to that place and witness for his precious, adorable Lord Jesus.

After this he went to Berlin, where he preached many times. Then to Dantzic, where he had the joy of meeting two of his former university friends, whom he had not seen for forty-six years. They studied at Halle while he was there. These two beloved brethren were both aged men. Both had celebrated their jubilee, having been each of them for more than fifty years pastors of churches. While there he preached by permission of the Commandant in the garrison church, and also preached in the hall of the Moravian Brethren. After this he went to Königsberg, where he preached in one of the churches three times to congregations numbering about three thousand.

From this point, the journey to commenced, which was reached after thirty hours' travelling. From the time he left Dresden, the winter had set in, and for the next five months they were surrounded by deep snow wherever they went. He was in St. Petersburg eleven weeks and three days. He had been advised when in Berlin to provide himself with a good fur coat, but having had experience of Canadian winters, he did not think he should want it. However, he found a great difference between the dry cold of Canada and the States, and the damp, foggy cold of St. Petersburg. Yet God carried him through.

In St. Petersburg he experienced nothing but kindness. God gave him precious open doors for service among the highest classes of the aristocracy, and they were like children, ready to receive the truth. He never had opportunities to such a great degree, for teaching and explaining difficult passages, as he had in St. Petersburg. He preached in the Reformed Church, among the Moravians, in the American and English chapels, to Swedes (with translation), and to Italians, and had a great number of meetings in drawing-rooms, and the breaking of bread in his own room. Altogether he preached 93 times, had three meetings for pastors, and sixteen meetings for Christian workers.

POLAND.

From thence he went to Poland, stopping at Warsaw, where there are 127,500 Jews, and two or three hundred Jewish synagogues. There are also six or seven hundred Talmudic schools. In this place he preached six times. At Lodz he had very encouraging meetings, the people being most eager to hear. Before he had been there a week, a person came to him and brought a letter, written in German, of which this is a translation: "I, and most of the population of this town, entreat you, in the name of the Lord Jesus, that you will have the kindness to remain with us till after next Sunday. In the name of many thousands, we thank you." This person told him of a number of freethinkers who attended some of the meetings, probably to laugh; but they went away in tears. The whole town was alive with regard to the preaching. In all the factories and public-houses, it was the talk of the people. He remained some days longer, having meetings every day, which were crowded, and two meetings on the Lord's Day. He would have been delighted to stay longer, but his arrangements would not permit.

On his way back he preached again at Dantzic, and concluded his work in this tour by preaching ten times in London, and once in the neighbourhood of Ipswich. He commended to the prayers of all present these various services, and the tracts and books which had been distributed. He also asked for prayer, that if God should be pleased to allow him further to serve Him, he might be helped, and that God would be pleased to grant more religious liberty in Russia, Poland, Hungary, Bohemia, and Bavaria.

VILLAGE WORK.—Mr. G. Morrish, of the Evangelisation Society, has been preaching the Gospel the last fortnight in a barn at New Sampford (fitted up by Mr. A. Richardson) with much acceptance and blessing. On the Sunday evenings more than 100 could not get into the barn, which held from 300 to 400, showing again that where the Gospel is preached in simplicity there the people will gather. C. Carter.

BIBLE CARRIAGE WORK.—In a recent circular, issued by Mr. J. Mercer, of 29, Queen's-road, Southport, with respect to this work, we are glad to read: "Through the Lord's goodness, last season, it was our joy and privilege to preach the Gospel to the many thousands of people who frequent this favourite resort. We circulated from the Bible-carriage (kindly lent to us by Mr. P. M. Crane, of Manchester) many thousand Gospel Tracts, about 4000 small Testaments, a large number of Bibles, and hundreds of valuable books. During this time our hearts were frequently rejoiced and encouraged by evidences of the precious seed falling into good ground, and bringing forth fruit unto God, in the salvation of souls. We have again entered upon this blessed work of sowing and reaping for another season. The Lord has graciously given us a carriage, which will be known as the "Lancashire Bible-carriage." We desire to use it for his glory. The carriage at present is stationed on the Sands here, and will remain until the end of September. We affectionately invite the help and co-operation of all Christian workers who may be visitors to the town." Mr. Mercer is associated in this good work with Mr. W. W. Waters, Cambridge-arcade, Southport.

MR. SPURGEON'S BIRTHDAY FESTIVAL.

TUESDAY, last week, was a high day at the Stockwell Orphanages. It would be difficult to say what proportion of the multitude that thronged the grounds, afternoon and evening, was there to do honour to Mr. Spurgeon, and what proportion was mainly attracted by the claims of the good work over which he so worthily and happily presides. The two seem so closely identified that the great preacher is as much a part of the institution as any of the 365 boys and girls who are now receiving its benefits. In his numerous little speeches delivered throughout the day Mr. Spurgeon was, perforce, obliged to refer occasionally to himself, and the fact of it being his forty-ninth birthday; but this was only that he might all the better serve the interests of the orphans. Of the many "love tokens" that had come to him by the morning post, all of them which had any marketable value (amounting to more than £500) went to the cash-box of the Orphanage. Even in his death, as in his life, Mr. Spurgeon wants to assist the widow and the fatherless. He says that if the Home Secretary for the time being will allow it, he desires his mortal remains to find their last resting-place in the grounds of the institution, so that if anyone should visit his grave their attention will be called to the work that he loves so well. No doubt the Home Secretary will be agreeable, but we pray that many a Government may rise and fall before the needful permission has to be craved.

Judging from his appearances on Tuesday week, Mr. Spurgeon is good for many years of active service yet. He seemed to be somewhat troubled with his old and ruthless enemy, the gout, but otherwise he was in splendid "form." He had only to open his lips, and the words of wit and wisdom dropped from them thick and fast. In response to the cheers of the crowd, he said it was "very awkward to feel forty-nine;" but nobody else could have suspected that. He was, in truth, the life and soul of the entire proceedings, though he was ably seconded by the other gentlemen who took part in the engagements of the day. That his bow may long abide in strength, must have been the fervent desire of every praying unit among the many thousands who visited the place last week.

In the afternoon the interest centred around the vacant space to the right of the entrance gates. Here two memorial-stones were "well and truly laid" by Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., and Mr. James Duncan, of Benmore, respectively. The buildings now to be erected are a master's house, board room, &c.; these will almost complete the quadrangle, and the provision of a residence for Mr. Vernon Charlesworth, head master, will enable the entire block of building on the girls' side of the square to be devoted to its proper use. When all the houses are full, the orphans who are under the sheltering wing and fostering care of the institution will number 500—an equal number of boys and girls. Mr. Duncan thinks the number ought to be increased to 1,000, but even the giant faith and large ambition of the Metropolitan Tabernacle pastor are not equal to that. Mr. Morley's address was characteristic of the man, and full of that practical Christianity which he so nobly exemplifies. He urged a point that seems to have impressed him deeply of late, seeing his frequent references to it, viz., that "Belgravia" ought to know more and feel more about "Bethnal Green." A hearty speech from Rev. Burman Cassin, Southwark, wound up the formal proceedings of the afternoon. We may remark that some £500 are yet needed to make up the contracted cost of the new building.

The evening hour brought with it quite a galaxy of orators. There were Baptists, and Methodists, and Independents, and Episcopalians, and we know not what else besides; so that Mr. Spurgeon was justified in describing the gathering on the al fresco platform as a real Evangelical Alliance. Rev. J. Spurgeon gave details of the working of the Orphanage, and the economical way in which the funds are administered. Dr. Parker made what was, perhaps, the most practical contribution to the day's talk, by offering to preach an annual sermon in the City Temple on behalf of the orphans; Canon Hussey was very hearty and sympathetic; Rev. Hugh Price Hughes was all that, and brilliant and witty besides; Mr. Spurgeon's son Charles, of Greenwich, spoke loudly in praise of his illustrious parent; Dr. Barnardo was business-like and urgent in his advocacy of a work so nearly allied to his own. The Doctor shows his interest in the kindred institution by sending the boys' band from the Stepney Home to discourse sweet music to the lieges of Stockwell-road. Not the least attractive feature of the day's doings was the promenade of the orphans round the square, headed by this band of juvenile disciples of Tubal Cain. The neat, smart, and comfortable appearance of these happy, hopeful-looking lads and lasses, was ample proof of the care that is bestowed upon them. Thrice happy are the widowed mothers who are fortunate enough to find a place in Mr. Spurgeon's Home for one or more of their children. The Lord must love to smile on such a work as this; surely his redeemed ones must love to help it on, according to the measure of their ability.

Not content with providing the attractions usual to the occasion, Mr. Spurgeon had placed on view a remarkable collection of pictures which he has made, illustrative of Reformation times. As we scanned these telling representations of stirring events in the bygone centuries, we could not but rejoice that our lot was cast in happier days, when, instead of dragging others to the stake, because they dared to think for themselves, professed Christians are uniting heart and hand in saving and brightening the lives of those who are doomed to eat the bread of sorrow and of poverty.

THE SUNDERLAND CATASTROPHE.

IN a letter dated 21st inst., Mr. J. J. Spraggon, of Sunderland, gives us some details of the sad event that has brought so much sorrow to the city. He says:—

"This week has been the most terrible in the history of our town. The most graphic accounts in the newspapers fall far short of the real reality. I was one of the first to get to the Hall, and helped in the sorrowful work of arranging the mangled little bodies for their parents' recognition. The scenes of anguish were frightful as the mothers came rushing in after the alarm had spread over the town. 'I want my Willie! Oh, tell me where my darling is!' 'My blessed little bairn, he can't be dead!' One big strong man said to me, sobbing as if his heart would break, 'Where's my little Mary? Oh, she was such a bright little thing!'

"I counted 150 corpses, and it seems there are thirty more, which the poor distracted parents, the moment they saw them, picked them up in their arms and ran home with them. One remarkably fine Christian man, a preacher, has lost three, as well as two grandchildren; and you may imagine the desolation of that family; another has lost four; and the families from which two have been taken are very many.

"Words are powerless to comfort such stricken hearts. Let us pray that the calamity may lead thousands to serious thought and decision in regard to their eternal interests."

NORTH WALES.—A very successful Mission was brought to a close on Monday, June 18, at Esclucham Parish Church, near Wrexham. The services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Morris, who has been recently placed on the staff of the Church Parochial Mission Society. Although the Mission lasted over sixteen days, very large congregations attended, and the interest and numbers increased to the end. Dr. Morris is an able, earnest, and very practical preacher; he is singularly powerful in the after-meetings. The results of his visit to the above parish are already visible. Many anxious souls have found peace; backsliders have been reclaimed, and believers edified.

THE HEART'S DESIRE.

OH, draw aside the veil
That hides thy beauties from my longing sight;
Earth's glories then shall pale,
As pale the stars before the morning light.

Oh, show thyself to me!
Then shall the clinging tendrils of my heart
Entwine themselves round Thee,
And find it easy from all else to part.

Oh, show thy love to me!
Then shall this foolish, fluttering, trembling will,
In sweet serenity,
Like babe within its mother's arms, lie still.

Oh, show thyself to me!
Not like the sun in noontide's burning glow,
But calmly, tenderly,
As falls the morn's soft light on all below.

Oh, show thyself to me!
Thy glories shaded in a veil of love;
And say—yes, e'en to me
"How fair, how pleasant art thou, O my dove."

To Faith's anointed eyes
Grow clearer, sweeter, lovelier every hour;
Thus let new beauties rise,
Constraining all my soul with tender power.

Oh, show thyself to me!
Reveal by sweet degrees thy wondrous love;
Until made strong to see
Thy full-orbed glory in the realms above.

* * * * *

Dear, doubting, fearing one,
Whose soul thus "thirsteth for the living God,"
Cheer thee! thou art his own,
Thy heart the chosen place of his abode.

The Lord declares thee blest.
If blessèd, then thy sins are all forgiven;
Here let thy soul find rest,
Thou art a child of God, an heir of heaven.

THE OTHER SIDE.

OUR esteemed brother, Mr. M. H. Hodder, who is now in the United States, sends some interesting items in a letter dated New Haven Conn., June 9: "At Brooklyn and at Boston the Young Men's Christian Associations are entering upon special Gospel Missions for the summer; the former have taken a large tent, capable of holding about 2500 persons, for Lord's days, and a small one for week-evening services. Dr. Pentecost gave the opening address last Lord's day evening.

"Theatre services are to be conducted at Boston, and it is expected that the opening address will be delivered by Mr. Moody. There has been an excellent work going on in the last-named city. It was my privilege to attend Dr. Gordon's church last Lord's day, when twenty-eight members in all were welcomed to church-fellowship, three of the number being quite young.

"Before going to Philadelphia and further on, I was glad to have a day or two's rest with our good friends Dr. Pentecost and Mr. Moody and their families at Northfield. I was greatly interested in Mr. Moody's excellent training-schools for girls and boys. Our friend was specially anxious that I should be introduced to the room intended for the library. It would be a good thing for friends in England to get together a good supply of English books, and make a present of them to Mr. Moody for these admirable institutions. Until I return, I have no doubt Messrs. Morgan and Scott will take charge of any books that may be forwarded to you for this purpose."

BLACKPOOL Y.M.C.A.—During the past three weeks this Association has had the services of Mr. T. W. Gladstone, late of the Liverpool Y.M.C.A. During his stay he has been actively engaged in organising the work. Prayer-meetings, Bible-classes, and evangelistic services have been arranged with every prospect of success, and the general work of the Association put on a good footing. In addition to the usual features of a Y.M.C.A., the Association here has made arrangements to receive and accommodate about twenty young men as boarders, offering them the advantages of a Christian home during their summer holidays. Will young men going to the seaside bear this in mind? John Taylor, OUTWARD BOUND.

ON Thursdayafternoon, May 31, the good ship Sardinian weighed anchor and steamed from Liverpool toward the Great West. On Friday we boarded her at Moville, and soon saw the Irish coast fading from view as the broad Atlantic received us on her heaving bosom. Thirteen hundred and eleven souls, all told, are on board, with a miscellaneous cargo of 1,700 tons. Many nationalities mingle, and we merge for the time into one great family. Hopefulness shines on many a face; youth and strength, old age and childhood are well represented, and the great concern of most is their prospective home in the land of plenty. The Allan Line to which our ship belongs conveyed over 50,000 persons during 1882 to the shores of Canada and the United States.

The Sardinian has long been known as a floating Bethel. From her saloon the voice of prayer ascends on the Lord's Day, and the daily evening worship in the forecastle is not formal exercise. Hymns, prayer, and Bible expositions fill up the half-hour, and the sixty or seventy listeners are thankful for spiritual refreshment. The skipper is bishop in his own ship, but pastors and evangelists are enlisted in the work.

Our present company embrace two bands of rescued children, one under the care of Mrs. Birt and another with Miss Rye. Two hundred girls, some merely babes, are voyaging to homes awaiting them in the Dominion.

Since Miss Macpherson and her co-labourers commenced this humane service for degraded childhood, about ten thousand of them, boys and girls, have been taken from their former fœtid haunts to the broad lands and healthy climate of Canada.

This means something of toil, self-denial, energy, and the giving out of true motherhood. It involves rescue, selection, training, and much-needed legislation; an outlay of brain, heart, time, and money; it includes sleepless nights, anxious watchings, and tears and prayers, lest they should run in vain or labour in vain.

The children on board our ship are not the only bands now at sea. The Grecian, in our wake, has a goodly number, under the care of Miss Bilbrough, from "the land o' cakes," where cakes for them, poor dears! were hard to find. Miss Macpherson, with a company from London, is but one week behind us, and soon (D.V.) the habitués of Spitalfields and Whitechapel will begin to live and thrive where starvation is unknown.

Mrs. Birt has some very interesting cases on board, who would possibly drop out of sight for ever, or be crowded to death in trying to elbow their way to the front, had she not thrown her strong arms around them, and lifted them from the mire. Aye, from a hundred deaths these friends of helpless children have rescued many a life; and, as the wee girls of other days blossom into a pure womanhood, and as they are fast becoming the matrons of their own happy homes, they surely will not cease to bless the hands which were instrumental in shaping their course and guiding their life. But here we are on the St. Lawrence, after a speedy and comfortable passage, for which we praise our God, who doeth all things well.

THE STUDENT'S PORTFOLIO is a useful envelope guard-book, quarto size. Its advantages over the ordinary method of preserving notes on various subjects will be at once seen. It has an index and fifty paper envelopes; linen-lined ones would be an improvement. It is published by Mr. J. E. Hawkins, 36, Baker-street, W. The price, which is 6s., seems to us so high as to be prohibitive in the case of many students.

RICHARD WEAVER IN WALES.—Mr. R. Weaver has had large and successful meetings in Wales during the last few weeks. It is estimated that 10,000 persons listened to the Gospel in the open air in Cardiff, and there were crowded congregations in the different places of worship where he preached. A correspondent says that "hundreds of strong men and women were to be seen weeping and crying to God for mercy, many professing to find pardon and peace." On July 1, Mr. Weaver commences a series of services in Swansea.

THE Y.M.C.A. AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

AN interesting meeting was held in the Lecture Hall, 186, Aldersgate-street, on the 20th inst., to inaugurate a "Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society" in connection with the British Y.M.C. Associations. The objects of the society are, first, to foster a missionary spirit in the hearts of young men; and, second, to make the necessary provision to enable them to enter foreign Mission work in connection with existing societies. From time to time young men have come forward for missionary work, some of whom have entered the foreign field, and are to-day engaged in spreading the Gospel among the heathen; others are doing the same among the heathen at home. Several are already in training for distant lands, and many others have heard the Lord's call to the work, and are merely awaiting the opening of the door.

Mr. George Williams presided at this meeting, and said it was true self-sacrifice for these young men to give themselves to the Lord for the extension of his Kingdom abroad. Those who abide at home must do likewise, so as to take the places of those who are called abroad, or to imitate their example when the opportunity opens.

Mr. Robert Burn, the secretary, said many useful and earnest young men were ready to go into the foreign fields. Shall we not do what we can to help them? From £300 to £500 would be wanted to meet the Society's expenses during the first year; the young men themselves would contribute. Every effort would be put forth to foster a missionary spirit among them.

Lord Radstock suggested that many young men might go out to China, India, and elsewhere as business men. They might continue in their calling, at least for a season; in the meantime they could acquire the language, observe the customs of the people, and do work for the Lord according to their ability. They need not fear if He were with them. When He puts forth his own sheep He goes before them. Difficulties would be removed one by one as they were faced in his strength.

Captain Poulden, R.N., of the South American Missionary Society, said that considerations of climate need not deter them. He had been in nearly every part of the world, and could assure them that the climatic difficulties were small compared with the glorious privilege of spreading the Gospel where multitudes are waiting to receive it.

Thirteen Chinese being present at the meeting, Rev. George Piercy, of China, told them in their own language that the faces of those present were bright with joy at the prospect of sending "good tidings of great joy" to their country. This provoked smiles of gratitude from them. Rev. M. C. Osborn, of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, gave several instances where young men and young women had gone to China, and there maintained themselves at their own cost, for the purpose of preaching the Gospel—an example worthy of imitation. Mr. Jno. V. Farwell, of Chicago, exhorted each young man present to constitute himself a missionary society for the service of the Prince of Peace, and do all they could to stir each other up to the work. Rev. W. H. Penny, of the Universities' Mission to Central Africa, spoke of the progress of African work, and of the necessity of young men having one thing above all others, viz., a burning love for souls.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe spoke of the need of Scandinavia, Finland, and Russia as fields for young men, as well as Central Africa and China. It was a shame that we had neglected the Mission field so long, until God had been obliged to take away Livingstone in order that our hearts might be stirred about Africa.

Rev. C. H. Gollmer, of Lagos, pleaded very earnestly for Africa, and spoke with much animation of the prospect of the missionaries of different societies shaking hands in the centre of that continent. This gentleman here asked a young African orphan girl, whom he and his wife had adopted, to stand up before the audience that they might see what sort of people the West Africans were. Mr. E. H. Glenny in a fervent speech, spoke of the need of Algeria Tunis, and Tripoli in North Africa. It was only three and a half days' journey; there were grand openings for farming, and the people were longing to hear the Gospel.

Several young men gave brief testimonies of the way in which the Lord had led them to devote their future to foreign work.

GLOUCESTER CONFERENCE.

THE three days' conference held at Gloucester in the Shire Hall, under the direction of Rev. J. J. Luce and Mr. Jordan, has proved to be a season of wonderful refreshing and blessing from the presence of the Lord in our midst. Each day was begun by drawing near to God and seeking his special guidance in all things. The two main objects of the conference were to draw near to God and to draw near to one another, and, truly, the expectation of the many who were thus brought together was not disappointed. At each meeting some time was spent in silent prayer, quietly waiting upon God, and many written requests for prayer and praise were also presented to God.

The Bible readings were conducted by Rev. Colin Campbell (Western-super-mare) from 10 to 10-45 a.m. On the afternoon of Wednesday Rev. J. Hudson Taylor gave very interesting accounts of his work and that of his companions in China in connection with the Inland Mission. An earnest desire has been stirred up in the hearts of some who attended this meeting to offer themselves to God for work in this great harvest field, and a meeting for young men was held on the evening of that same day, at which many were present.

On Thursday afternoon a most instructive lecture on the "Dispensations" was given by Mr. E. Ashby, of Southampton, which was clearly illustrated by a large coloured chart. The "blessed hope" of the Church, and the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ for his people was dwelt upon. On Friday afternoon many testimonies were given of definite blessings received through the Conference from the Lord and of much increase of light from the Word of God.

Ministers and others of all denominations have met together, during these three days, on the one ground of love to God and faith in Jesus Christ, and the most striking point has been how each one who spoke brought the people face to face with Christ Himself, urging them to look away from self, and feelings, and experience and to receive Christ in all his fulness, by simple faith, and so to abide in Him. How many blessed results will spring from this time of communion with God and with each other eternity will show, but the feeling often expressed has been, "It was good for us to be there," and "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." God was with us, and we were made full of joy by his presence.

HARVEST DRINKS.—A correspondent sends the following:—(1) Mix 1½lbs. of Epps' cocoa with warm water in a basin; mix 1 lb. finest oatmeal in another basin, with boiling water. Stir all into six gallons of boiling water. Slice in the lemons, add sugar, and boil all together for ten minutes, stirring all the time. Add milk to taste. Cost, about 7d. per gallon. (2) Dr. Parkes' oatmeal drink: Oatmeal ½lb., three quarts of water to be well boiled; then add 1½oz. brown sugar. Shake up before drinking. In winter take it hot, in summer cold.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—The Quarterly Conference was held at the Council-room, 7, Adam-street, Strand, on the 22nd inst. The chair was taken by Colonel Puget, when an address was given by Rev. W. Fuller Gooch on "Personal Union with Christ: its necessity, the blessedness of realising it, and the duty of manifesting it." In the discussion which followed, Revs. C. Graham, C. Skrimand others took part. There was special prayer for the work of the Council generally, and for the success of a memorial just forwarded to the Emperor of Austria on behalf of religious liberty in that country. There was a large attendance

A REST FOR WEARY CHILDREN.

THERE are thousands of our fellow-creatures in the metropolis, who, through badly-ventilated dwellings, close courtways, and an impure atmosphere, greatly suffer in health. Many a bread-winner gradually sinks and dies, and poor others have sickly children who easily fall a prey to disease. Much of the sickness amongst the poor might be prevented, and many a precious life saved, if fresh air, proper rest, and wholesome food were provided in the country.

About two years ago the pale faces of drooping boys and girls made us very sad. We told the Lord all that was on our hearts, and asked him, that if it should be for his glory, that He would provide us with a cottage, where a few poor children might be sent for a fortnight's change. He has answered our prayers. He disposed the heart of one of his people, who being practically acquainted with the difficulties and trials of the poor, and unasked by man, determined to erect the necessary building. Lady Ashburton bade us find a builder, and gave instructions to have a Cottage built on a large piece of land on her ladyship's estate, Stroudgreen, Addiscombe.

The building being completed, and the rooms furnished, between three and four hundred of the East-end poor were invited, on Wednesday week, to spend the day in the grounds surrounding Addiscombe House. They journeyed there by railway, and after spending a short time in the gardens, walked through a shady lane, and soon came to the cottage, where they were joined by Lady Ashburton, Hon. Mary Baring, Rev. W. H. Haslam, and other friends. Here, in the field behind the cottage, the people knelt, and "praised the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works to the children of men." They also sang, with heart and voice, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow." After they had visited each room, they returned to the gardens, where, under a large tent, was spread out a substantial repast. A feast of good things had been prepared for the people, who sat down with grateful hearts, thanking God for the plentiful provision made. Then, gathering under the beautiful trees, they sat listening to God's message, delivered by that beloved servant of the Lord, Rev. W. H. Haslam. Some of the Lord's people gave their testimony, and told how precious Jesus was to them. After a day spent very happily, they returned home, some of them to witness for Christ, in the courts, alleys, and back streets of East London.

The land has been provided for the "Rest for weary children," the cottage erected, and the whole will be sustained (under God) by Lady Ashburton. The first children have been sent down and are now enjoying the benefits of fresh air, good food, and attention. There, too, they will often hear more about Jesus. Whilst writing, hundreds of little lambs are longing to get away, and some are asking, "Am I to go?"

We are so thankful to friends who already have given to the poor children rest and change; their help and assistance is much needed, so that as large a number as possible may receive the benefit of country air and good food.

The Lord has greatly blessed us at George Yard. Hundreds of men, women, young persons, and children come here week by week; the Gospel has attracted them, and attached them to this place. For many years we have experienced the goodness of the Lord. He stands by us, blessing and prospering all we have taken in hand for Him, supplying every want, giving needful grace, and permitting us to know that our labours have not been in vain in the Lord.

GEORGE HOLLAND.

George Yard Ragged Schools,
High-street, Whitechapel.

MR. CHARLES CARTER, for several years connected with the Evangelisation Society, has recently been suffering seriously from nervous prostration, produced by over-work. Under medical advice, he is ordered to take a long voyage, and he would be very thankful for the prayers of God's people for himself, and for his wife and family, during his absence. He proposes to sail in the Carlisle Castle, on July 10, for Melbourne.

ITALIANS IN LONDON.

THE Evangelical Mission to Italians held a meeting on the 19th inst. for the purpose of opening a new room at 2, Frith-street, Soho-square. This is a quiet and earnest effort that has been carried on for some years by Mr. Travers, an Italian missionary, under the auspices of the London City Mission. Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS presided, and in a few kindly words expressed the pleasure he and other friends felt at the progress of this work. The Italians of old had sent us the Gospel, and now we English Christians ought to reciprocate that kindness by doing what we could to make known the Gospel to them.

Mr. W. A. BOULNOIS said a good room had now been provided, and he hoped those present would do all they could to attend and get others to come too.

Mr. TRAVERS remarked that some of those present had been attending the meetings for twelve years. The building in Greek-street being pulled down necessitated the removal to Frith-street. Two Italians present expressed their gratitude for the kindness that English Christians had shown them.

MISS SHARMAN'S ORPHAN HOMES.

ON Monday evening (18th) the annual meeting was held in the Lecture-hall of the above institution, Rev. H. Simon, of Westminster Chapel, presiding. Mr. Bidlake read the report, a document always characterised by Miss Sharman's trust in God, her mother-like sympathy, and her sound good sense. Nearly all the girls who have been sent into service are doing well, and during the past year four more have earned the prize of a watch for keeping their first place seven years. This speaks well for the institution, as well as for the girls, showing that good places are provided for them, as well as good girls for the places. Miss Sharman's first purpose is to do her work well rather than to do a great deal, consequently she keeps the orphans long enough for their strength and their principles to become established, and until they have gained a fair share of experience. There are now 222 children in the Home, West-square, Southwark, and its country branches at Gravesend and Tunbridge Wells. Miss Sharman was enabled by the kindness of friends last year to give all the orphans a change by the sea, or in the country, and hopes to do so this year, if funds come in for that special purpose. A new wing of the Home is waiting to be furnished, and will require £1000 a year of additional income; and there are applications for the admission of fifty children—the circumstances of some are most touching. Miss Sharman, on principle, never appeals for funds, nor collects subscriptions. Her view is that she received her work from the Lord, and that He will supply her need, as He always has done hitherto.

Brief addresses were given by Rev. Canon Hussey, W. Statham, Rev. Newman Hall, and others.

The Chairman, in the name of the meeting, thanked Mr. T. Roper Smith, the honorary architect, for his continued and very valuable services; and also expressed his own interest in the Hastings Home, which was specially for the orphans of formerly well-to-do persons who had left their children unprovided for. This, as well as the other orphan Homes conducted by Christian ladies, deserves the warm and hearty support of all who feel their responsibility to care for helpless female orphan children.

DEAF AND DUMB FEMALES.—The annual meeting and election of free inmates to the British Asylum for Deaf and Dumb Females took place at Clapton, on Friday, 22nd inst. The Bishop of Bedford, who presided, made an earnest appeal on behalf of the charity, the objects of which are: (1) To educate, or continue the education of female deaf mutes upon the best method. (2) To teach some industry or trade. (3) To provide a home for the aged and helpless; and to lead all to a knowledge of God and Jesus Christ whom He has sent. Two inmates are stated in the report to be blind.

THEN AND NOW.

FORTY years ago a public-house, known by the sign of the "Green Man," stood, surrounded by courts and alleys, in a neighbourhood in Westminster, which for generations past had been notorious for depravity, misery, and squalor. Almost adjoining were two other spirit-bars, the "Red Lion" and "Compasses," the latter being famous as the centre of cock-fighting, bear-baiting, dog-fighting, gambling, &c.

It is needless to say the inhabitants of the district were the lowest of the low. An old resident states that the police dared not enter the courts and alleys except in couples; much less could any respectable woman venture unprotected. At length the criminal courts became so familiar with the infamous doings of the neighbourhood that sweeping measures were taken, and amongst them was the withdrawal of the license from the proprietor of the "Green Man."

But while the notice of the authorities was thus turned to the district, the sympathy of the philanthropist was likewise awakened, and it is said that when the "Green Man" was closed as a centre of vice, it was purchased and started as a nucleus for good. About this period Ragged-schools in London were instituted, and it is interesting to know that one of the first was opened in the building of the "Green Man," which was re-named the Pear-street Ragged-school. The founders are unknown to the present committee, but it is understood that the late Mr. Joseph Gurney was one of the earliest workers and supporters of this school.

When the London School Board was formed it was found that the premises were not equal to the standard required by the inspector, and the day-school, which had existed for upwards of thirty years, was therefore closed. In connection, however, with the school, other Christian agencies had been from time to time organised, such as Sunday evening services, Sunday-school, and mothers' meetings. These have been developed and augmented, and there are now Temperance and Band of Hope meetings, girls' sewing classes; the sick and the fallen are also visited by a Bible-woman and a missionary of the London City Mission.

It is for the purpose of extending this work that this brief history is given. Upwards of £400 is wanted to enlarge and improve the premises, of which more than half has been given and promised. The superintendent of the Missions is Mr. W. Middleton Campbell, 23, Rood-lane, E.C. The Hon. Sec. is Mr. Cameron Churchill, Exeter Hall, W.C.

"QUIET RESTING PLACES."—This is the title of a series of illuminated texts, mounted. They are exceedingly well got up and the texts selected are suitable. They are executed from the paintings of one of the ladies of the Deaconess's Home, Mildmay-park, N., and published by Mr. J. E. Hawkins; price 2s. 6d.

ANOTHER SICKLE LAID DOWN.—A much esteemed sister in the Lord passed to her rest on June 15, in the person of Eliza Simpson, of Bristol. For fourteen years she has laboured among factory girls in that city with great success; her gentle manner and personal interest in each of the girls won their affection. Many of them followed her remains to the grave with much sorrow. It is hoped someone will be raised up to take her place.

AFRICAN SETTLEMENT SOCIETY.—We have selected our party of six Christian men and their families to go out and prepare the place for receiving the first party of boys. All is ready, but we have not received all the requisite funds. It is urgent that we should have these within the next twenty days, if we are to take out next December the boys offered to us by Dr. Barnardo, Miss Macpherson, and others. Our party of girls (some from Dr. Barnardo's and other Homes), over fifteen years of age, will leave about the middle of July for Natal, for situations in Christian families in Durban. We are still open to receive a few more girls, but their names should be forwarded at once.

THE FOREIGN AID SOCIETY.

A DEEPLY interesting meeting in connection with this society was held on Tuesday week in the National Club, Whitehall-gardens. Lord Kinnaird took the chair, in place of Lord Shaftesbury, who was engaged at the House of Lords. This Society, whose object is to promote the principles of the Reformation by grants in aid to the evangelical societies on the Continent, is a Church of England Society. It is matter of deep regret that it receives so little support from the large section of that Church which supports so liberally the Church Missionary Society for carrying the Gospel to the heathen. We have to deal with a semi-heathenism across the Channel, and a vigorous support of the existing evangelical societies on the Continent, particularly in France, could not fail to have a powerful influence on Europe and the whole world. For this end, a very large proportion of the Society's funds goes in support of Mission work in France. For the credit of our evangelical brethren in the Episcopal Church, we earnestly hope that a combined effort will be made to strengthen the hands of this excellent Society.

One feature in this meeting was the presence of two men who, more than any others, represent the living Protestantism of France, namely, M. Eugene Reveillaud and Pastor Lorriaux, of the Central Society. Both of them spoke admirably. M. Reveillaud confirmed, in a striking way, from his personal observation as an evangelist, what has been noticed by others, that there is undoubtedly a breath of the Divine Spirit stirring the heart of the nation to feel after the living God as revealed in his Son Jesus Christ; everywhere there is an open door and ready hearers. He referred in particular to Brittany, once the most bigoted part of France, where he had lately a most cordial reception and large audiences to hear the Gospel at Brest, L'Orient, &c. Here is a population of two millions, closely allied in language to our own Welsh-speaking people. After giving some very interesting details, he concluded an eloquent appeal by comparing our French brethren to the disciples, who at their Lord's command launched out into the deep, and, as the result, got such a great multitude of fishes that they beckoned to their partners, which were in the other ship—that is, to ourselves on this side of the Channel—to come and help them. Shall we not do so? M. Reveillaud spoke in French.

Pastor Lorriaux, who spoke in excellent English, charmed the meeting, as, with mingled pathos, naïveté, and touches of quiet humour, he described the preparedness of the French people for something better than the superstition and ignorance and infidelity which are so rampant among them.

Mr. Donald Matheson observed that no country on the Continent more heartily welcomed our co-operation in Mission work than France. The Foreign Aid Society could not do a wiser thing than concentrate its energies, as it is doing, in support of Evangelistic Missions in that country. The Continental countries do not ask us to set up churches by means of bishops and pastors, after a model of our own, but they do need evangelisation, pure and simple, to follow up the work of the colporteur in sowing the seed of the Word, which has been so largely carried on for many years by our Bible and Tract Societies. If the Church of Rome considers England the great prize with which, when gained, she may subdue the world, the Evangelical Church of Christ may well look to France as the key of the position which, when gained, cannot fail to influence not only all Europe, but Africa and the East.

After referring to a successful Mission at Reus, in Catalonia, Spain, carried on by Sgr. Antonio Martinez, who has been helped in the past by the Society, and now needs £1500 for the erection of Mission premises; also, to Italy, Bohemia, and Belgium, Mr. Matheson stated that the 10th of November of this year will be the fourth centenary of the birth of Luther, when it is expected that there will be great demonstrations in Germany and other Protestant countries in commemoration of that event. It is hoped our own country will not forget what we owe, under God, to Luther, so that it may be an occasion for reviving the Protestant spirit in our land.

Bishop Ryan brought the meeting to a close by some reminiscences from his personal experience of the good effect of words spoken in season in the Mauritius and in France.

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.

A NUMBER of friends were invited by Lady Kinnaird to meet at 17, Old Cavendish-street, W., last week, in order to hear about the work done by Moravian missionaries in different parts of the world. From one cause or another only a few responded, but those who did so were more than rewarded by the very interesting statements laid before them. Among the friends who would have attended if other engagements had not prevented, were the Bishops of Antigua and of Victoria (China), Canon Fleming, Baroness Burdett-Coutts, Rev. Daniel Moore, Sir W. and Lady Hill, &c. Admiral Grant had purposed being present, to testify from personal knowledge to the value of the society's operations, but professional duties had called him out of the country.

After the opening exercises, Captain Bedford Pim spoke briefly as to what he had seen of the Moravian missionaries on the Mosquito Coast, and in the Arctic regions, and he had nothing but praise to utter with repect to them. He thought those labouring on the Mosquito Coast were the crême de la crême of the missionary body. The gallant gentleman read extracts from a recent pamphlet he had written, in which he bore the highest testimony to the self-denying character and successful labours of the missionaries on this unhealthy coast.

Rev. S. Hutchinson referred to the service rendered by the agents of this society as the pioneers of Foreign Missions, especially in the work of translation, which had been of inestimable service to those who had come after them and entered into their labours. If there was such a thing as apostolic succesion, he believed these Moravians were entitled to claim it. Although the earth's influences, powers, and potentates has been many a time arrayed against them, their continued preservation has been a wonderful testimony to the fact of their labours being well-pleasing to God. Simple, fervent, Evangelical faith and fervour have been the chief secret of their success. What might be termed their "coat of arms" was an altar, with a plough and an ox on either side, with the motto, "Prepared for either," expressing the thought that they were ready to break up the fallow ground, or to lay down their lives on the altar of God's service as He might appoint.

Dr. Downes, late of the Medical Mission, Cashmere, said he had never before been at a missionary meeting at which there was no missionary present who was connected with the society. The reason of their absence on the present occasion was significant of the spirit that animates Moravian missionaries—they were all at their post. After a description of the work of a medical missionary, as illustrated from his own experiences in Cashmere, Dr. Downes gave some details of the work of one of the devoted Moravian missionaries and his wife, whom he knew very well. The influence of their single-minded efforts and high Christian character was producing a remarkable effect upon all with whom they came in contact. If this worthy couple were —as he had no doubt they were—ordinary specimens of the agents of the society, nothing more Christ-like than the work of these faithful men and women could be imagined.

As clerical secretary of the London Association in aid of the Moravian Missions, Rev. Jas. Henry greatly interested the meeting by a running review of the work being carried on at the various stations. These are planted in Greenland, Labrador, West Indies, South and Central America, South Africa, Australia, and Thibet. The total number of existing stations is ninety-nine; and the united congregations nearly number 77,000. One very remarkable feature of the Missions is the fact that in many cases they are self-supporting. The number of these is increasing, but there are also urgent calls for the opening of new stations, and for this the help of the Christian public is most earnestly desired. The Moravians themselves are a people poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith and zeal; it is a striking fact that about one out of every fifty of the adult members of the Moravian Church give themselves to mission-work among the heathen. The stations in Greenland and Labrador, said Mr. Henry, had proved such centres of spiritual blessing that in some of those northern regions the whole population are professed Christians. It is contemplated to open a new station in North East Greenland, if the exchequer of the society is sufficiently replenished.

Mr. Henry told of the deep and practical interest that had been awakened in various places which he had visited as a deputation, and appealed for an increased support to this good and blessed work.

We would warmly second that appeal. The history of this small and heroic band of evangelists forms one of the brightest and most romantic chapters in the annals of the Christian religion. A competent observer has said that if all Christian churches and missionaries had been as faithful and devoted as the Moravians, not a heathen tribe would now remain unevangelised. The office of the London Association, 42, Berners-street, W.; secretary, Mr. G. E. Roberts.

A farewell meeting was held on board the Moravian Mission ship Harmony, in the West India Docks, on Friday afternoon. There were present two of the Moravian Mission Board from Berthelsdorf, in Germany. Rev. H. E. Shaw presided, and mentioned that this ship was now going on her twenty-second annual voyage. She is taking out a young German lady, who is to be married to a missionary at Hopedale, Labrador. Mr. Connor, of the German Board, said there were special subjects for prayer he would mention: that the difficulties might be cleared away for the establsihment of a Mission at Leh in Ladak, Western Himalayas, and for increased accommodation for the large number of members in Paramaribo in Surinam, South America. Bishop Kuhn addressed the company in German, his words being translated by Mr. Shawe.

Rev. Henry Dowson, who had four children educated in the Moravian schools, said the missionaries of this church had gone to parts of the world the least accessible and the least inviting. With reference also to the work amongst the lepers, he remarked on the self-denial that was required in that work.

BRITISH METHODISM.

THE returns of membership at the forthcoming Hull Conference will show a great addition to the church, all the more marked, as at last Conference the brethren had to rejoice over many won for Christ. The total number of members in church fellowship is 407,085, being an increase (after making allowances for losses by death, emigrations, backslidings) of 13,331. In addition to this there are no less than 35,000 candidates on trial for church fellowship, and 36,219 young people in junior church classes who have been won for Christ. With the exception of paying the regular "class and ticket money" these are to all intents and purposes members of society.

The glorious tide of revival is still flowing over the country. Joyful News, edited by Rev. Thomas Champness, is crowded with the news of aggressive work for Christ; the mother church of Methodism is renewing her youth and girding herself for stern conflict and glorious triumph. The conference at Hull is likely to be memorable for spiritual power and blessing, and is looked forward to with eager interest by many who thank God for the past, and with the shout of Wesley, "Best of all, God is with us," are expecting greater things than these. THE BIBLE: ITS REVELATION, INSPIRATION, AND EVIDENCE. By the Rev. JOHN ROBSON, D.D. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.

This is a very able and interesting book, from the pen of one of no ordinary mind. It deals, however, with the subject from a point of view which is more likely to commend it to a man of the world than to a Christian. The author appears rather to sit in judgment upon the Word of God than to sit at its feet as a learner. He says himself in the preface:—

> The method I have pursued has been, taking the Bible for what it professes to be, to interrogate it as to what it reveals on the questions in hand; what it expressly says, and wherein it is silent, what it implies.

We cannot, however, admit that the Bible when thus interrogated would give the answers which the writer claims to have got from it, at all events as to some of the subjects of his inquiry. As to inspiration, for example, he takes but a low view, of which we could give no clearer proof than his remarks regarding the first chapter of Genesis as "based on older records":—

> There was a primitive account of creation current in the lands in which Moses lived. How it originated we do not know, and we do not need to explain. Moses (assuming that he wrote the chapter) had only this previous record or tradition to go by, corrected at most with his own observation of nature. We have seen that it is against all the rules of evidence to suppose that he received any revelation on the subject.

How it can be against all the rules of evidence to suppose that Moses, being a prophet, spoke or wrote as he was "moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Pet. i. 21) it is hard to understand; and how a prophet thus writing can be said not to have "received any revelation on the subject," is beyond our comprehension.

Dr. Robson's interrogation of Scripture on this point is by no means satisfactory. One would suppose that the first position in evidence on the subject would be given to the teaching of our Lord Himself. How did He treat the writings of Moses? "If ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my words?" (John v. 47.) How uniformly does our Lord appeal to the canon of Scripture as a well-known authority before which all must bow. "Ye do err not knowing the Scriptures." "What saith the Scripture?" "The Scriptures must be fulfilled." These, and such like sayings of our Lord, are some of the witnesses which Dr. Robson has forgotten to call into court. Moreover, it is ridiculous to say that the writer of the first chapter of Genesis did not claim to write a revelation. What "primitive records" could have supplied him with the very words of God, "Let us make man in our image after our likeness," &c., words which are referred to more than once in the New Testament as being words of truth which may be depended upon, which could not be said of traditionary lore. It is worthy of notice, too, that our Lord refers to a passage in the first chapter of Genesis when he says (Mat. xix. 4), "Have ye not read that He which made them at the beginning, made them male and female?" An appeal to the authority usually conveyed by the words "it is written," as to the value of which authority, and as to the light in which He regarded it, our Lord's own teaching is decisive.

This low view of inspiration is the chief defect in this otherwise interesting book. There are other indications, too, of a rationalising tendency. It is well known that writers of the Rationalistic school set aside the very clear testimony of Irenæus concerning the date of the Apocalypse, viz: "that it was seen towards the end of Domitian's reign," because, forsooth, they think that the troublous times of Nero and Vespasian, some twenty or thirty years earlier, are more likely to have suggested the matter of the book, which they thus regard as a reflection only of these troubles, and in truth no revelation at all. This view Dr. Robson advocates, saying oracularly, as if it were a point never disputed, that in the midst of the persecutions of Nero and the destruction of Jerusalem, John wrote the Apocalypse. "It bears the impress of the times in which it was written; it mirrors their bitterness, and deals with their anticipations." This view of the Book of the Revelation must be to every devout believer in the words of inspiration little short of offensive. No book in the Bible proclaims its being a distinct revelation more clearly, and to no book are more solemn words applied, both as to the blessedness of receiving its testimony and as to the danger of rejecting it.

PALMY DAYS (7d. Cassell & Co.) is the Summer number of The Family Magazine, issued monthly by this house. The contents are well suited for recreative and holiday reading.

The "GRAPHIC" SUMMER NUMBER (190, Strand, W.C.) is a genuine work of art, and cannot fail to please old and young by the vivacity and fineness of its illustrations; most of these are beautifully coloured, and are good specimens of the humourous in pictorial art. Price 1s.

IFS AND BUTS. By Miss CLAYTON. 2d. Partridge & Co. This little book tells some pathetic stories of the sorrows of young working women, and pleads that more should be done for the 20,000 young women who are toiling for their daily bread within half a mile of St. Paul's Cathedral. The writer asks that Christian ladies in greater numbers should personally help the work carried on by Mrs. Fisher at "The Welcome," 6, Jewin-street, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

THE MASTER'S SERVICE: A Practical Guide for Girls. Religious Tract Society. Some of the best chapters from the "Girls' Own Paper" are here collected in a portable volume. They are written by Lady Brabazon, Dora Hope, Alice King, and Mary Selwood, and contain practical suggestions concerning every department of Christian work to which thoughtful girls might be drawn. Many older workers might profit by their perusal, but to any girls "longing for a sphere," the book would be a real help. The chapter on "Women's Work in the Mission Field" would alone make the book a valuable one.

AMONG THE MONGOLS. By the Rev. JAMES GILMOUR, M.A., London Mission, Peking. Religious Tract Society. Realistic pictures of life among a race but little known, dwelling in that remote part of the world that lies between Russia and China. The book is, in fact, a compendium of all that relates to Mongolia, written in a graphic and readable manner. Although written by a missionary, it is not a strictly missionary book in the evangelistic sense of that word. That divine enthusiasm for souls which made the records of Moffat and Williams such inspiring reading, is not in this case apparent. The volume is handsomely bound and well illustrated.

THE GREAT ARMY OF LONDON POOR. Sketches of Life and Character in a Thames-side District. By the RIVERSIDE VISITOR. T. Woolmer. It would be difficult to speak too warmly of a book such as this, or to exhibit its true merits in the limited space at our command. The writer presents no exaggerated picture of the poverty and wretchedness that mark many districts of our city. His narratives are the result of personal contact and patient labour among those of whom he writes. While they tell of much that is sad and wretched, they are clothed with an amount of expressive tenderness, and beautified by the grand results of Christian effort and sympathy, that make them intensely interesting, and such as will not readily fade from the memory. It is a book calculated to awaken a much-needed interest in the toiling and suffering masses of the people.

THE RISE AND DECLINE OF ISLAM. By Sir WILLIAM MUIR. 4d. Religious Tract Society. As a history, in a brief space, of the causes that contributed to the triumphs and decay of the Mahometan religion, this contribution to the series of "Present Day Tracts" is beyond all praise; but, after reading it, we have asked ourselves whether the argument on behalf of Christianity is adequate. The first object of this excellently planned series of tracts was to show "the strong, impregnable foundations of the Christian religion," to prove the authenticity of the Bible, and to remove present doubts and difficulties. Nothing could have been more timely, or have been better designed to meet a felt want. But, speaking with all frankness, may there not be a disposition to ask gentlemen to write, who, while able specialists in their own line, are not intimately acquainted with the scope and character of popular scepticism? The Tracts are not merely for the teachers of Christianity to use, but for placing in the hands of imperilled young men. While we gladly admit the learning, we confess to an apprehension that the original object of the series is not always adequately borne in mind.

SOME JULY MAGAZINES.

THE WELCOME (6d., Partridge & Co.) is brimful of interesting articles. The "Men and Women of Mark" continue to be a very attractive feature. "The Congo, or Livingstone River," with its commerce and Christian Missions, cannot fail to interest readers. The history of the Rothschilds and their original house at Frankfort will be a source of wonder as well as instruction. FRIENDLY GREETINGS. (4d., R. T. Society.) This is an excellent magazine, full of short and stirring Gospel articles profusely illustrated. "The Wreck of the 'North Star'" is a well-written poem. "The Trial of Patience" teaches the profitable lesson of not pronouncing a verdict before hearing the evidence. THE BRITISH MESSENGER, GOSPEL TRUMPET, and GOOD NEWS (Drummond Tract Depôt, Stirling) keep up their reputation both as to excellence of matter and illustration. The fact of this depôt having circulated fifty millions of their magazines is a matter of profound thankfulness. THE COTTAGER AND ARTISAN (1d., Religious Tract Society) is good both in type, illustration, and matter. The short story of John Brown's fidelity to Her Majesty is an example of the reward which follows faithful service. THE CHILD'S COMPANION and TRACT Magazine continue to give good reading. The former is a great favourite with the little ones. THE BRITISH WORKMAN (1d., S. W. Partridge & Co.), as usual, is beautifully illustrated. This month it has two excellent articles on "The Bit of Blue." THE BAND OF HOPE REVIEW (½d.), with its bright and well-executed pictures and lively, pointed articles, does splendid service among the young in promoting the Temperance cause.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

SIR,—The annual report of this work about to be issued will show that 228 preventive cases were admitted to the Homes during the past year, and 167 to the Open-all-Night Refuge. Reformatory cases admitted—259 to the Homes and 462 to the Refuge. I visit the Refuge every morning, so that girls admitted there temporarily may be transferred to the Homes best adapted for them.

During the current half-year there have been (up to this date) 715 applications for admission. Very many of these have been on behalf of quite young girls. Happily, a considerable proportion of them are preventive cases. The end sought in every case is the conversion of the soul. Blessed be God! there are many evidences of the power of his grace in individual cases.

Thirty years of service in this department has been followed by great changes. Many of the early and liberal supporters of the Homes have been summoned to their rest, and consequently their aid and co-operation are lost. On the other hand, the institution has, year by year become more widely known, and its help more extensively called for; and, notwithstanding a present dearth of funds, the committee and I are agreed that, to the utmost capacity of the Home, every suitable applicant should be promtly welcomed in the Saviour's name.

I would therefore earnestly appeal to the reader to strengthen our hands in this work. "Pray for us"—that precious souls may be saved in the Homes; further, kindly give of your substance, so that the work may not only be sustained but that still further advances may be made into the enemy's ranks, and that many more of Satan's captives may be rescued from his grasp.

EDWARD W. THOMAS,
200, Euston-road, London, N.W. Secretary.

BANFF, N.B.—Some months ago, God, in his good providence, sent a captain and lieutenant of the Salvation Army to Banff. They rented the old U.P. Church, the building in which the labours of that man of God, the late James Turner, were so greatly blessed in the salvation of souls. The Salvation Army opened on the last day of 1882, and have had meetings every night since and four times on Sunday. God has owned the labours of these young men in an extraordinary manner; hundreds of souls have professed to be saved, some of the worst characters are now living holy lives; besides this, the churches have been stirred up to renewed energy. These young men are much respected and esteemed for their work's sake.

Mission and other Appeals.

HOMES FOR DESTITUTE AND WORKING BOYS, 243, Bradford-street, Birmingham. The Hon. Sec., Mr. A. V. Fordyce, appeals for help in connection with these Homes. A sum of £150 is asked for adding a "Girls' Night Refuge" to the work.

MARYLEBONE MEDICAL MISSION.—The Committee appeal for funds for the erection of a hall, which is greatly needed. Suitable ground can now be obtained. Friends have promised £400, and about £600 more are required. Full particulars on application to Dr. R. CHAMBERS, 43, Carlisle-street, Edgware-road, N.W.

MARINERS' MISSION, DARTMOUTH.—Rev. B. Dinnick who, we are sorry to learn has lately lost his wife, is himself laid aside by sickness. His aggressive effort among the sailors is somewhat crippled for want of funds, and he appeals for help in his endeavours to pay off an old debt in connection with the Mariners' Iron Church. Address as above.

BETHANY, ZEYST, NETHERLANDS.—Miss A. J. T. Deinse, Lady-Superintendent of the Home for Little Ones, appeals to Christian friends for £800, to complete a sum of £2500 towards building a place for these children. The Home thus far has been a hired house, with many inconveniences, and the promoters feel the time has come for supplying the need of this Convalescent Home. Particulars will be given on application.

MR. WHITMORE'S WORK.—A year since, I finished fourteen years' work in Drury-lane, to commence labouring in a ruined and deserted church in Kentish Town. We have re-seated, re-lighted, repaired the building, and have gathered the nucleus of a self-sustaining congregation. There is an old debt of £1400 on the building. We are promised the first £300 and the last £50, on condition the remainder is subscribed. If this debt were removed, there need be no fear of raising a self-sustaining congregation to labour in the crowded locality. My plea for help to remove the debt is based on the fact that I have laboured for more than thirty years among the poorest and roughest in London. Such labour has fed and sheltered over fifty thousand destitute girls and women, and transferred more than a thousand of them to self-support. Scores of thousands of hungry children have been fed; hundreds have been clothed, trained, and sent to work. May I hope that these more than thirty years of hard work with pen, and speech, and hands, will plead successfully for your help in obtaining a sphere of future labour, free of debt.—C. J. WHITMORE, 88, Caversham-road, London, N.W.

BRIXTON ORPHANAGE.

A MEETING was held at the above institution on Saturday, the 16th instant, Mr. Richard Wyatt Coffee in the chair, to open and dedicate the new buildings, which are designed to accommodate fifty children, in addition to the 113 now in the Home. This institution has progressed steadily since its foundation in 1876, when Mrs Montague began the work of rescuing the fatherless by receiving two or three little girls into the Home.

The meeting was opened with prayer by Rev. C. J. R. Cooke, vicar of the parish. Addresses were given by the Chairman, Canon Hussey, Rev. W. Willey, Dr. Concanon, Rev. W. Herbert, and others. After a dedicatory prayer by the Rev. D. A. Herschell, and a collection (generously leaded by the chairman with £50) had been made, the visitors proceeded to view the new buildings, with which they expressed themselves highly pleased. The children looked most healthy and happy, and sung several hymns, &c. The cost of building and furnishing amounts to £2,800. Of this £2,000 has been subscribed and paid. Contributions towards defraying the balance will be gratefully received at the Orphanage, and reports of the work will be sent, free of charge, upon application to the Hon. Secretary, Brixton Orphanage, Barrington-road, Brixton, S.W.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—Mr. George Blaiklock has revisited Tunbridge Wells, and conducted a second week's Blue Ribbon Mission. The meeting were held in the Camden Assembly Rooms, and were crowded each evening. About 230 new pledges were signed.

TROUBLES IN BASUTOLAND.

WE have received the following extracts of a letter from Pastor Coillard, of the French Basuto Mission, Leribé, South Africa, dated May 18:—

"I must let you know in what circumstances we are. Sad, indeed, they are; sadder they could hardly be. Civil war has broken out again. The whole district is laid waste. All the villages are burnt down save very few. The crops are destroyed, and as the winter is setting in we look forward with much anxiety. There are thousands of women and children who wander homeless, and seek shelter under the rocks in the mountains. A dreadful famine stares us in the face, and is already felt. Of eight out-stations in my district, five have been destroyed, and two Evangelists have lost their little all. Some have greatly suffered, and ran great dangers.

"This station itself has not escaped. If the rebels have respected our house, they have not done so to the women and children who sought refuge here. I have bought all the corn I could for nearly £30, and we have given here and there some blankets. I do not know yet what the issue of events will be, but there is no near prospect of peace. I am afraid I shall not be able to leave this place to go to the other stations to rouse the interest of the churches on behalf of the Zambesi Mission. But our hearts are more than ever set upon that new Mission. The circumstances of the lesson ought to impress us more and more with their urgency. Do not forget us in your prayers."

Forthcoming Meetings.

THE EVANGELISATION SOCIETY will send Evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, and Wales on due notice. Apply, Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

THE METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE EVANGELISTS' ASSOCIATION will send lay preachers and evangelists to any chapel or hall of any Evangelical denomination in London. Apply, Hon Sec., 30, Surrey-square, S.E.

THE IRISH EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY will send Evangelists to any part of Ireland on due notice. Apply to Mr. J. Barton, Hon. Sec., Dundalk, Ireland.

REV. W. H. AITKEN: July 1 to 15, Holy Trinity, Scarborough. The Mission at the Martyrs' Memorial Church, Clerkenwell (Mr. Oswald Sharpe's), which was to have been held in July, is postponed till October.

STEPNEY MEETING HOUSE, Spring Garden-place, E.—Mrs. G. S. Reaney will give an address to Men and Women every Sunday at 3 p.m.

KESWICK NINTH ANNUAL CONVENTION will be held (D.V.) July 23 to 28. T. D. Harford Battersby, Keswick; Robert Wilson, Broughton Grange, Carlisle. (For lodgings apply to Mr. Postlethwaite, Eskin-place, Keswick.)

ROME AND CENTRAL ITALY.—An address, illustrated by photographs, by Miss Carruthers (of Pisa), at 81, Mildmay-grove, Mildmay-park, Saturday, June 30, 3.30 p.m. Admiral Fishbourne will preside. Subject, "Signor Capellini's Work in the Italian Army, and the Protestant Schools at Pisa and Cisanello."

THE MERCHANTS' LECTURE.—Tuesdays in July, by Rev. Henry Allon, D.D., Finsbury Chapel, Moorfields, 12 to 1.

Y.M.C.A., The Priory, 198, Upper-street, Islington.—Sunday morning, July 1, 9 o'clock, Rev. G. Kenyon; afternoon, 3.15, Rev. H. J. Berguer.

MISS DE BROEN'S MISSION.—Meeting at Exeter Hall, July 3, 4 p.m. Earl Cairns will preside.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—Mr. E. Salisbury, New Southgate, July 2—7.

ST. GEORGE'S HALL.—Mr. Russell Hurditch during July, Sundays, 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. Wednesdays at Burlington Hall, Savile-row, 8 p.m.

STRANGERS' REST, Ratcliff-highway.—Workers' meeting, Thursday, July 5. Address by Mr. R. C. Morgan, 7 p.m.

SEVENOAKS CONFERENCE.—July 4, 10 a.m. Subject: "Personality, Power, and Work of the Holy Spirit."

"HOW THE POOR LIVE."—Under this title, a series of illustrated articles, by Messrs. G. Sims and F. Barnard, is appearing weekly in the Pictorial World. They are graphic descriptions, by pen and pencil, of poor homes in our great metropolis, visited by these gentlemen, and reveal sad exhibitions of the misery and wilful neglect of parents and the sorrows of the children.

MARGATE.—The summer work of the (London) Evangelistic Mission was opened here on the first Sunday in June, in the large and excellent Foresters' Hall. Excellent congregations have assembled each Sunday, and the Lord is giving manifest blessing with the preaching of the Word by Mr. Russell Hurditch, who is also assisted in these services by Dr. Ziemann and other friends. Interesting services have also been held on the sands and on the green, for children and adults. Christian visitors will be cordially welcomed at all the meetings.

Notices.

The Post-office authorities at Leadville, Colorado, inform us that the copy of THE CHRISTIAN addressed to Mr. K. Turner there has not been called for. Will the sender kindly take note of this?

FIFTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN"

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK

CASE of Miss H. F. WEEKS, of PLYMOUTH—CONSUMPTION.

This case was brought before my notice on the 1st of January of last year. Illness had commenced ten months before with a severe cold; during that period the patient had the advice of five doctors, who reported it to be "Consumption."

Referring to the statement of case sent me at this time: "the expectoration consisted of greenish matter with blood; there were great pains in the left side; the breathing was very short; all the secretions were sadly wrong; the heart was subject to severe palpitations; the legs and feet swelled; the body was wasted; the strength had declined; added to which there was great prostration of the nervous system."

It was at this critical time her friends applied to me, and I sent her medicine with advice.

In one month the improvement was very slight. The weather had been severe, and retarded her progress: moreover, she had suffered much from neuralgia.

In three months she was much better. I prescribed a tonic of steel with glycerine and quassia.

She got quite well, and has continued so. Her uncle, writing me recently, says: "You remember my writing you on the case of my niece, Fanny Weeks, of Plymouth. I am thankful to say she has fully recovered by following your treatment.—RICHARD KELLEY, 14, Chapel-street, Devonport. April 11, 1883."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

TENT SERVICES.

The above Society is now prepared to enter into arrangements with the Parochial Clergy for conducting Tent Missions in country and seaside places during the summer months, and will pay the necessary expenses incurred.

THE ANCHORAGE.

Hebrews vi. 19.

UNDER THE ANCHORAGE MISSION
(Of Hope & Help).

Committee.

GEORGE HANBURY, ESQ., REV. H. E. FOX, COL. STUART-WORTLEY.

For the reception of the more respectable class of young women in trouble, including those about to become mothers. Conversion of heart is most earnestly and prayerfully sought. Thorough training in household duties, cookery, dressmaking, fine laundry work, &c. &c. is given.

Regulations for admission to the "Anchorage House," will be sent on application by letter to Mrs. H. STUART-WORTLEY, Rosslyn House, Grove End Road, N.W. (President of the Ladies' Committee), to whom, or to any member of the Committee, or Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, subscriptions (which, owing to the necessarily expensive character of the work, are much required) may be sent.

Church of England Scripture Readers' Association.

Offices—56, HAYMARKET, S.W.

Patrons—THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY, and the Bishops of London, Winchester, Rochester, and St. Albans.
Vice President—THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G.
Treasurer—Sir WALTER R. FARQUHAR, Bart.

This Society is employing 120 earnest men as Scripture Readers, labouring amongst the Poor of London and the suburbs, by carrying from house to house the Word of God. Funds are very urgently needed to maintain and extend this most necessary religious and social work amongst the masses

THE WHITE FIELDS OF ENGLAND.

An Entreaty to Communicants.
By REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

"What Christian does not long for the Gospel to spread on the Continent of Europe? And who that reflects can fail to observe that the gross state of our large towns arises very much from their being grossly neglected by us communicants. Their sad state is patent to every observing foreigner whom business brings into the midst of us, and he naturally looks with contempt and abhorrence on what he styles our "Christianity."

The NUMBER "SEVEN" in SCRIPTURE

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, Esq., C.B.,
Author of "Shadow and Substance," "Forgiveness, Life, and Glory."

"I do not presume to offer an opinion as to the purpose with which the number seven has been so prominently interwoven with the Scriptures. That there is some purpose, however, I can hardly doubt; for the use of the number is far more than merely mechanical or artificial. It runs through the whole of the Bible, commencing with the institution of the seventh day—or Sabbath—in Eden, and concluding with the various series of "sevens" in the Apocalypse."—Extract from Introduction.

SCRIPTURAL HOLINESS NOT SINLESS PERFECTION.

By CHARLES GRAHAM,

Minister of Avenue-road Church, Shepherd's Bush; Author of "The Highway of Holiness," "The Coming Great Revival," "Memoir of Rev. John Graham," &c., &c.

The Sword and Trowel says:—"So far as we can see, this is a sound book. If this is all that the Holiness people have meant, we cannot make out why there has been so much noise over the matter. To us these new revelations are nothing but the common-places of experimental divinity. With considerable skill and sagacity Mr. GRAHAM has proved his title, and wheeled away much fanatical rubbish. Anything which will promote true holiness has all our heart."

BOOKS FOR ENQUIRERS AND CONVERTS.

Young Converts;

Or, Beginners in Zion's Ways. By Rev. R. BOYD, D.D. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

I have been continually asked by young converts where they could get a book in which they might find advice that would be helpful to them. This book seemed just the thing needed at this time. I have known the author, Rev. Dr. Boyd, for many years as a dear father in Israel. I have read his work carefully, and recommend it to all young Christians for prayerful meditation." D L Moody

The Way of Life.

A Book for Enquirers. By Rev. ROBERT BOYD, D D. Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth Boards, 1s.

"About fifteen years ago this little book attracted my notice. I read it with interest, and felt so much profited that I re-read it several times, and then circulated hundreds of copies among the soldiers during the American war. The number that then seemed blessed through reading the book has induced me to ask Messrs. Morgan & Scott to republish it, hoping that it may be the means of good in this country, as it has been in America." D L Moody

By Rev. DANIEL BAKER. With Preface by D. L. MOODY. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"These discourses were designed to be of an awakening character. They were preached (in substance) in numerous revivals, and were blessed to the hopeful conversion of many precious souls, of whom some fifty or more have become ministers of the Gospel. May He who was pleased to bless these discourses when they came from the pulpit, bless them also now." AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.
Supported by Voluntary Contributions.
President—
The Right Hon. the EARL of SHAFTESBURY, K.G.

Established 1822, for the purpose of employing humble Christian men, well versed in the Scriptures, to visit from house to house throughout the country, and visit all denominations. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required. The work is carried on in a spirit of love.

Subscriptions or Donations will be thankfully received by the Secretary, Capt. KEARNEY WHITE, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin; or at 9, Paternoster-row, London.

The Earl of Shaftesbury says in his last letter to the Secretary:—Many thanks for your kind letter, and many thanks to Almighty God for the good intelligence you give me about your Scripture Readers in Ireland. I wish I could more effectively assist you. Your letter is the best thing that I have seen or heard from Ireland.

I enclose my donation, and only wish it was more.—Yours, SHAFTESBURY

N.B.—Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

THE HOPELESSLY INCURABLE, The Unsuccessful Candidates.—The Committee of the Ladies' Samaritan Society of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, 25, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, earnestly plead for Contributions in aid of a collection they are making for the unsuccessful candidates at the recent election of pensioners. There were 44 candidates and only 5 pensions to bestow; 39 poor sufferers were consequently disappointed. To each of these the Committee desire to send a gift of money, and they confidently commend them to the sympathy of the kind friends who have assisted at previous elections, and to the public generally. The smallest donations will be thankfully acknowledged by the Committee.

GREAT COLEMAN'S, near Ongar, is now opened by Dr. and Mrs. S. C. GRIFFITH to give change of air and rest to educated people of limited means.—For particulars, apply to 45, Finsbury-square E.C.

MRS. WILKES proposes to be at home every Wednesday from Two till Five o'clock, for the purpose of seeing friends of Rescue Work. Trains from Liverpool-street to St. James-street Station, Walthamstow, every half-hour. "The Elms" is within five minutes' walk of the station. The Elms, Coppermill-lane, Walthamstow, Essex.

DAY IN THE COUNTRY.—Mrs. DAY, London Hospital, Whitechapel-road, E., earnestly solicits help towards providing a day in the country for her poor East-end Mothers.

KESWICK.—Ninth Annual Convention will be held (D.V.) July 23 to 28.—T. D. HARFORD BATTERSBY, Keswick; ROBERT WILSON, Broughton Grange, Carlisle.—For lodgings apply to MR. POSTLETHWAITE, Eskin Place, Keswick.

DAY IN THE COUNTRY for Foreigners.—The Pasteur DU PONTET DE LA HARPE would feel grateful for contributions to enable him to give the benefit of a Day in the Country to 300 Foreigners—children of his Schools, and patients of his Dispensary.
French Parsonage, Bayswater.

ASHLEY MISSION, Peel-grove, Bethnal-green.—Funds are urgently needed to take 300 poor mothers, 100 factory girls, and 200 Sunday-school children, from the heart of the East-end, for a day in the country. Contributions thankfully received by Miss BONTAIN, 47, Weymouth-street, W.

A DAY IN THE COUNTRY would greatly rejoice the Poor of the Gee-street Christian Mission, Goswell-road. Please send subscriptions towards it, and for rent of Chapel, addressed to HENRY RUDGLEY, Hon. Secretary, 82, Wood-street, Cheapside; or to ROBERT BAXTER, Esq., Treasurer, 6, Victoria-street, Westminster; or Messrs. Barclay, Bevan, Tritton & Co., Bankers.

Educational.

THE OLD HALL SCHOOL,

Full particulars on application to the PRINCIPAL. Dr. CRANAGE has recently greatly enlarged and improved his School premises.

TO GODLY PARENTS.—The undermentioned (who is in no way connected with the school) is desirous of recommending an old-established YOUNG GENTLEMEN'S BOARDING SCHOOL, DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED FACING THE SEA on the South Coast, a short run from London, in which a thorough and first-class Education is given, based upon the teaching of the Holy Scriptures.

It is one of the few remaining schools in which the power of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ influences the hearts and conduct of the pupils.

The success, happiness, and training of the Boys have been so remarkable in this School that a BOOK OF TESTIMONIALS GIVEN BY THE PARENTS should be read to appreciate results so unusual. Two Vice-Chancellors have placed their wards as pupils in the school. Reference kindly permitted to Dr. THORN, Paddington, London.

BELMONT COLLEGIATE SCHOOL for Girls, 13 and 14, Belmont, Bath.—A thorough, English education, with Latin, mathematics French, German, &c., on inclusive and moderate terms. The School is arranged on the best modern lines, and the utmost care taken that the whole tone and atmosphere be decidedly Christian. A few boarders received in the house of the Principals.

For Delicate or Backward Youths.

PRIVATE TUITION

must always be far preferable to ordinary school life, where such boys are usually left to the care and tuition of inexperienced and often uninterested Assistant Masters, and to the rough treatment of hardier Schoolmates.

MR. WILLIAM PENN

devotes his personal attention, care, and tuition to such Pupils, of whom he takes only a few, as he desires to preserve the strictly family tone of his home. In the fear and love of God it is sought to train this family, great attention being given to the development of a manly Christian character and moral training is regarded as more important than mere intellectual acquirements. The House is admirably situated on one of the loveliest spots of the Northern Suburbs of London, and commanding an uninterrupted view of many miles. Abundant opportunity for close by. A Carpenter's Shop is fitted up on the Premises, and Pupils are taught Carpentry and Joinery by a competent Tutor. Drawing, Painting, and Shorthand are included in the curriculum. Full particulars on application with References, to parents of Pupils.

BOATING, BATHING, CRICKETING, NATURALISING, &c.

MAGNETIC TREATMENT.

We have advocated the claims of Magnetic Treatment in these columns by such arguments as are always unanswerable where the subject advocated has passed beyond the theoretical into the proved and practical. We have endeavoured to put the arguments in intelligible language, such as any reflecting reader could comprehend; and we are encouraged by the fact that our labour has not been in vain; but there is yet a class of readers who are not to be convinced by argument or converted by statements of our patients unless made by persons known to them. For the satisfaction of this class of inquirers we have arranged to append a list of 1000 names, some of whom are readers of The Christian, and may be known to other subscribers; these have endorsed the following general statement, and have expressed themselves willing to confirm it by letter or personal interview.

AMONG the MONGOLS. By the Rev. James Gilmour, M.A., of Peking. With Map and numerous Engravings from Photographs and Native Sketches. This book gives a most interesting account of the home life, manners and customs, occupations, and religious beliefs and practices of the Mongol Tribes of Central Asia. Mr. Gilmour has spent a large part of the last twelve years among these people, and the facts stated in his work are the result of long and careful observation.
"There has been, if our experience serves us at all, no book quite like this since 'Robinson Crusoe;' and 'Robinson Crusoe' is not better, does not tell a story more directly, or produce more instantaneous and final conviction. No one who begins this book will leave it till the narrative ends, or doubt for an instant, whether he knows Defoe or not, that he has been enchained by something separate and distinct in literature, something almost uncanny in the way it has gripped him, and made him see for ever a scene he never expected to see." Spectator.

THE MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

ONCE more it has come and gone. Although this has been the twenty-seventh ear of its assembling, there has been no gn of diminished interest or lessened power. oth in point of numbers attending, and neral interest in the proceedings, advance ther than retrogression has been the anifest fact.

We may profitably inquire into the cause this continued life and prosperity in a ovement so unostentatiously and quietly mmenced and carried on. It sprang out deep desire for the glory of God in the oser fellowship of his people, and for their ore perfect conformity to his will, and it was arted in a spirit of faith and prayer which ve abundant promise of the blessing that ould rest upon it. In no way did human ory enter into its purpose or plan. mple dependence upon God, entire conseation to his work, alone animated and rected its first promoters. In the same irit, and with the same objects, it has ne on from year to year. The numbers awn together, as well as the influence erted upon the assemblies, can only be aced to the force of attraction which there in Christian fellowship, and in sacred mmunion with God and his Word. The oly Spirit is sure to exert his gracious ower in connection with means employed olely for the glory of Christ; hence his ntinued blessing on the Conference.

It is not human names which draw tother the thousands who annually throng e large hall, for these are studiously ithheld, and until the very moment of eir rising it is unknown whose voices ill be heard unfolding the truth. It not any denominational enthusiasm, for ere is no recognition of denominations any kind as such. It is not the expectaon of anything novel or exciting, for it is e old, old story which is proclaimed from ar to year, and the same unchanged and nchanging Word of God which exercises all e thought which is there awakened and ergised. The great secret of Mildmay ccess is that in its annual convention e one Father is worshipped and adored, the e Christ is proclaimed and lifted up, the one dy alone is recognised, and the one Spirit relied on, and sought after, as the animatg source of all life and blessing. There ct is forgotten, party is for the time at least nored, and as fellow disciples all sit at the aster's feet and learn of Him. "We ould see Jesus," is the one desire which rvades all hearts. What wonder if Jesus erefore manifests Himself in special gree.

As we glanced round the assembly on the rst morning of the Conference, we thought e saw a larger number of brethren than e have ever seen before; the air of earnest xpectation and holy purpose which seemed to pervade the large multitude at the time of silent prayer moved us deeply. It was impossible to avoid the conviction, "Surely the Lord is in this place. . . . .This is none other than the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven." The opening prayer of the venerable Prebendary Wilson, vicar of Islington, struck the keynote of praise and of humble waiting upon God in a way that drew all hearts to the throne of grace, and caused the assembly to feel how truly they were gathered unto Him who is ever in the midst of those who call upon his name.

We missed from the platform some familiar faces, and could but think of them as now among the hosts on high, waiting with us, although in nobler spheres, the blessed consummation which shall be reached when the Master comes to gather all his saints together, that He may be eternally glorified in them. Others struck us as manifestly ripening for heaven, their growing feebleness and more deeply silvered locks telling how soon for them, too, the summons must come to cross the river, and go over to the other side. Mr. Blackwood was in his old place. and with his wonted calmness and spirituality of tone led the meetings from day to day.

The subjects chosen were eminently practical as well as experimental, and led us away from mere secondary causes to the one great and essential source of life and power, "Union with Christ." It is sometimes said that at Mildmay and at similar meetings, there is always plenty of talk and but little work. Indeed, two of the speakers said they had heard remarks made of the want of practical purpose which the choice of themes displayed. But this is a mistake; work cannot be done apart from union with Christ, and to withdraw awhile from the busy spheres of our accustomed toil in order to examine and afresh consider our relation to the Master we serve, is calculated to lead to service of the purest, wisest, and best kind. Mildmay itself is as busy a centre of consecrated Christian toil as can be anywhere met with, and among those who frequent its annual festival of joy and praise are to be found some at least of the most eminent and zealous workers in the vineyard of Christ.

To many who gather there, the invitation is as the Master's voice saying "Come ye yourselves apart and rest awhile," but it is not the rest of inaction, or of casting away the sword and shield, but simply that of communing with the Lord, and gaining fresh inspiration and light, wherewith to go forth anew at his bidding. The subjects do not savour of controversy, or refer to the more mechanical aspects of the Church's work, they intentionally call us away from the noise and din of strife, that we may drink deeper draughts from the well-spring, and refresh our spirits at the fountain head.

The speakers this year were evidently full of their theme, and with scarcely any exception their utterances were admirably adapted to secure the end in view—viz., the enlightenment of the mind on sacred truth, and the inflaming the heart in its desire for closer practical union with our ascended Lord. We have no desire to make comparisons where all so earnestly sought the glory of the Master in the edification of his servants; but we may nevertheless express the universal feeling of thankfulness and pleasure with which Pastor Theodore Monod, from France, and Herr von Schluembach, from Germany, were welcomed, Their words were specially weighty and appropriate, while, as representatives of the churches of other lands, they seemed to afford links of fellowship which helped much to a realisation of the unity which marks the true Church of God. The presence also of the Rev. Norman McNeile, son of the late Dr. McNeile, of Liverpool, was an interesting feature in the proceedings, his address being so replete with Bible truth as to excite the wonder of all, remembering the fact of his having been blind from his birth.

It was feared by some that the change of programme in reference to the afternoon meetings would prove disastrous rather than otherwise. We are glad to find that this was by no means the case; indeed, the change was generally felt to be an improvement. It is pleasing to know that the alteration was cheerfully acquiesced in by the friends of the various Missions which had formerly been introduced and pleaded for, so that harmony was undisturbed, and there is reason to think the profit of the Conference enhanced. The afternoon meetings in the large hall were greatly enjoyed. That in connection with Jewish Missions was deeply interesting and also instructive; on the Scriptural and prophetic aspects of the exposition of Isaiah by Dr. Bonar being particularly valuable in that direction of the question. That of Thursday on general Mission work was also largely attended, and calculated to stir the hearts of all to warmer sympathy with the claims of a perishing world. The attendance at them indicated a great advance of interest and concern in the Christian mind both in reference to the present condition of the Jews, and in the work of Foreign Missions.

The Lord's Supper service of Friday was a memorable season. It was truly a feast of fat things, a time of abiding under the shadow of the Almighty and of spiritual refreshing. "The King brought us into his banqueting-house, and his banner over us was love." The sheep were led beside the still waters, and caused to lie down in the green pastures. The result was seen and felt in the meetings for prayer which followed.

Never do we remember to have heard more direct or more fervent pleadings at the footstool of Divine grace than at the two gatherings of parents to pray for their children. More than twenty prayers were presented within the hour at the meeting held under the shade of the mulberry tree, one friend after another lifting up the voice of prayer and praise, as those who felt they had "boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus."

One of the speakers at the closing meeting of Friday evening said the friends who had attended the Conference had come to see the face of God, to hear his voice, to feel the touch of his hand, and they had not been disappointed. In this expression few who were present we imagine would fail to join. There are many to whom Mildmay Park presents no attractions; its type of religious life and experience is distasteful to them; they speak of it as though it were to be despised rather than honoured or commended. But for thorough devotion to the Word and work of Christ, and for realised blessing and blessedness through the Divine presence and power, those who have known them longest and best can testify that these Conferences have, through all the years, been eminently successful and practical, and none more so than that of 1883. There can be no doubt that all over the land spiritual life will have been quickened, and workers in varied spheres stimulated and encouraged by its means. To God alone be all the glory and praise.

"CIVIL AND RELIGIOUS LIBERTY."

IT is gratifying to learn, from testimonies received from time to time, that the views put forth in this journal are those of a large number of laymen, as well as ministers throughout the land. We have been favoured with the sight of a letter written by Mr. G. F. Muntz, of Umberslade, near Birmingham, a near relative of Mr. Bright's former colleague in the Parliamentary representation of that town. He is a gentleman well-known for his attachment to Liberal principles, and who, on those principles, has thrice contested the Division of the County in which he resides, being desirous of serving his country as one of its representatives in Parliament.

The letter in question was addressed to a friend in the same religious association as himself, and who recently made a public protest against a Resolution, whereby the body to which they both belong was committed to an approval of the Affirmation Bill, then before the House of Commons. We cannot but sympathise with such sentiments as the following, and most earnestly do we wish that they prevailed more influentially, and, as a consequence, were more fearlessly expressed amongst all who bear the Christian name:—

"There are, I am convinced," writes Mr. Muntz, "many earnestly devoted members in our churches more retiring than those who have taken the prominent part in this matter, who, like myself, are sadly grieved by the recently published resolution approving of the Affirmation Bill. However much we desire that a form of affirmation may be substituted for an oath, and deeply as we reverence the name of 'Civil and Religious Liberty,' we are prepared to forego these until the time arrives when we might ask for liberty without dishonouring God. Our forefathers have suffered more than this in his cause, while many of us have borne the loss of social privileges for conscience sake, and shall we now dishonour God in order to confer political freedom on man? No one can fail to do so who strives to give increased power to his declared enemy—the man who ignores and insults his holy name.

"I am greatly perplexed when I see the names of conscientious, godly men supporting such a Resolution. I can only believe that they had not sufficient time to consider prayerfully the very serious responsibility attending the action in which they engaged, before committing themselves to it. It seems to me that all who think with us should hasten to declare themselves on the Lord's side. I have much reason to believe, from several letters which I have seen, together with what has also been communicated to me personally, that many of our brethren would be only too glad of some opportunity, if such were possible, of expressing their deep concern that such support should have been given to the proposed change in the law, which at the present time would be an act favouring an avowed unbeliever in dishonouring God."

We would only add: Is not the time come, when, not as representatives of this or that denomination, but as members of that "Church, which is his Body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all," those who feel it laid upon them to strive to maintain a distinct recognition of God on the part of our law makers, not necessarily in the form of an oath, should unite, and by prayer, by effort, by a free use of the platform and the Press, if not of the Pulpit, by only supporting such candidates, at the time of election, as will pledge themselves to the great principle involved, and by every possible means in harmony with the Word of God and the spirit of the Master, seek to avert the threatened evil, which would be, in fact, the triumph of Infidelity. This question may force to the front many who have hitherto shrunk from public action in connection with politics and with parties, but, "Is there not a cause?" The highest interests are at stake, and the responsibility resting upon every Christian man must be recognised, and in God's strength discharged. The struggle is not over. Let us seek to be well prepared for the renewal of the fight.

KEEPING A COW.

By Mr. C. H. SPURGEON.

"OUR little boys and girls who live in the City will all see the wit of this. Little six-year-old Dan went into the country visiting, and for his supper he was given a big bowl of bread and milk. He tasted it, and then stopped as if thinking. 'Don't you like it?' asked mamma. Smacking his lips as only a small boy can, he said, 'Yes, mamma. I do like it very much. I was only wishing our milkman in the City would keep a cow.'"

This little slip, from a newspaper, has its moral. After hearing a sermon full of precious doctrine, and rich with the truth of Christ Jesus, the hearer is apt to wish that all discourses were of like quality. If this is the unadulterated milk of the Word, oh, that all preachers kept a cow; or rather, in plain English, that they went to the one great source of supply! To us it is a growing marvel that so many must needs labour, and tug, and toil, to produce poor marrowless essays, when the rich, plain, soul-filling Gospel lies so close at hand. They cannot stay at the true house of bread, but must needs go farther and fare worse.

"Milk-and-water" is far too abundant in the world. We might not think so badly of it, if it were not so often palmed off for pure milk. Quimby perceived one morning that the milk that he was pouring into his coffee-cup was none of the richest. On this he said to his hostess, "Haven't you any milk that is more cheerful than this?" "What do you mean by that?" asked she. "Why this milk seems to have the blues," was the ready retort. We think we know a good deal of Sunday teaching which has the blues too, and we would gladly see it wear a more creamy appearance. A person once asked his friend why the preacher cried so much when for the life of him he could see nothing to call for tears. "You would cry, too," was the reply, "if you had to talk for near an hour, and had so little to say." Preachers might afford to be happier if their sermons were fuller of the Gospel: the blues would vanish if the cream were visible.

Some preachers seem to be afraid lest their sermons should be too rich in doctrine and so injure the spiritual digestions of their hearers. The fear is superfluous. The fancy that if they put too much divinity into their discourses people might hanker after more. What if they did? Is there no more to be had? Perhaps the sermoniser has no very large supply, and is not himself very familiar with the fount of truth. Then let him go to the Great Teacher above, and learn of Him. Possibly the preacher himself has no great love for the undiluted Gospel. The more's the pity! We shall never evangelise the masses till the preachers are more evangelical. May the Lord restore to us old-fashioned divines like Boston and the Erskines, and they will never lack for hearers. If Puritanic preaching filled the pulpits, it would soon fill the pews. The people are losing all desire to attend our services because the one grand attraction has been too often thrown into the shade. Oh that all preachers and teachers would, for one twelvemonth, try what the Gospel by itself would do! Even if they doomed us to partake of nothing but the diluting element for the next six months afterwards, we would like the experiment to be tried, for we could stop away when the diluting tap was turned on. We remember once in our lives hearing a complaint that the milk which came from a certain dairy was too rich. We heard that complaint once, and only once. It was no difficult to suggest that the purchaser could water the milk himself till it fell to his own standard. If men heard the Gospel in its essence they could dilute it at home if they wished to do so. We should like to get the article in such a pure condition that we could exercise our own discrimination as to how much we should mingle with it; but we do not care to have our adulteration done for us without our assent and consent. In our present state of mind we should prefer to receive the Gospel in all its richness, as we find it in the Word. Do not our readers sympathise with our preference? This is not a theological age, and therefore it rails at sound doctrinal teaching, on the principle that ignorance despises wisdom. The glorious giants of the Puritan age fed on something better than the whipped creams and pastries which are now so much in vogue. They did not need flashy metaphors, rounded periods, and philosophical theories; they wanted the doctrines of grace, and they took care to have them. Hence their force of character, their unbending integrity, their awe-struck fear of God and their fearlessness of man. What food they fed upon was seen in their countenances. Alas, what food many professors feed on is seen in their worldliness, pulpiness, and general debility.

We sigh for preachers who will give us the unadulterated milk of the Word, even as the child longed that the City milkman would keep a cow. When the churches will have nothing but the Truth it will be forthcoming; the demand will find its supply. If, in choosing ministers, more regard were had to solidity than to cleverness, if grace were preferred to gift, and orthodoxy to intellect, we should soon see a change pass over the spirit of the scene. So may the Lord make it to be.—Sword and Trowel.

LADY MISSIONARIES' TRAINING SCHOOL.—The Zenana and Medical Mission in Vincent-square has acquired more commodious premises at 58, St. George's-road, S.W. To meet the expense of a larger number of pupils they purpose holding a sale of useful and fancy work at the end of October or beginning of November. Contributions of saleable goods towards this will be thankfully received by the Lady Superintendent, or by Mrs. Bradley, the Deanery, Westminster.

By Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE.

OW CHRIST COMES TO DWELL IN THE HEART.

VE have seen that only Christ by his own coming into the Temple can set it ght; and that only Christ himself by velling there can keep it right. Then llows the great question: How can we cure his coming?

There are two passages that will help us. ie first is St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephe-ns, the third chapter and fourteenth verse: For this cause I bow my knees unto the ather of our Lord Jesus Christ . . . that e would grant you according to the riches his glory, to be strengthened with might his Spirit in the inner man; that CHRIST AY DWELL IN YOUR HEARTS BY FAITH."

These Ephesians had been ignorant of self, sin, of Christ; without God, and without pe in the world—dead in trespasses. But e Holy Spirit had shown them their need, e had wrought within them a sorrow for n; He had lit up the word of truth, and vealed Christ to their hearts. They had isted in Christ, and in Him they had ceived the witness of the Spirit: "In whom io after that ye believed, ye were sealed th that Holy Spirit of promise" (i. 13).

The Apostle makes much, very much, of ese great spiritual blessings; and no words out Holiness should ever lead us in any se to think lightly of these unspeakable fts. Let us remember with adoring ankfulness what our forgiveness has cost; at it has come to us through nothing less an the dreadful shame and agony and death the glorious Son of God. In the very fore-nt of our greatest mercies, let us set this, er thanking God above all for the redemp-n of the world by our Lord Jesus Christ; r the means of grace, and for the hope of ory.

But whilst we make much of forgiveness is not meant that we should rest in it. hilst we hold fast to that which we have, t because we have so much let us expect uch more. Because forgiveness is already rs, there comes the longing of this prayer. at gracious Spirit who has led us to Christ w puts forth his energy within us for nother and fuller blessedness, and we are be strengthened with might in the inner an that Christ may dwell in our hearts.

It is pitiable, almost the pitiablest thing nder Heaven, this contented blindness to e glory of the great salvation which might ours; so poor and needy as we are, and thin reach of such wealth, yet scarcely tting forth a hand to feel after it! What, en, do we want? This, surely,—first and ove everything—a full, clear, abiding vision the greatness of the salvation that there is r us in Christ Jesus. And so the Apostle ays for this first: "That the God of our ord Jesus Christ may give unto you the irit of wisdom and revelation in the know-dge of Him: The eyes of your understanding ING ENLIGHTENED; THAT YE MAY KNOW HAT IS THE HOPE OF HIS CALLING, AND WHAT IE RICHES OF THE GLORY OF HIS INHERIT-NCE IN THE SAINTS; AND WHAT IS THE EXCEED-G GREATNESS OF HIS POWER TO US-WARD WHO LIEVE." We need take up this prayer and ake it our own, "labouring fervently" ntil it be fulfilled in us. Only such a glow-g revelation of God's purpose in our salva-n can check the world's pretensions and lift us from our dulness and gloom. We want such visions of his power to inspire our hope, and fire our desire, and rouse us to effort. There is a kind of religion that seems to have to go down into the world to get its glow and excitement; life's dull existence finds there that which quickens and gilds it. Surely he that lacketh those things is blind and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his sins? We cannot afford to live without looking out upon the height and depth, the length and breadth, of our possibilities in Christ. Think how it should rebuke the fever of our worldliness; how it should gather to a sustained intensity our pursuit of holiness; how it should lead us into a spiritual nobility and greatness if we lived further up the mount of God, in view of the revelation that the Holy Spirit would make to us. Ah, what opportunities for blessing and for service lie about us if we had but eyes to see them.

We were coming down a mountain in Switzerland one evening, when a black thunderstorm blotted out the day and all things were suddenly plunged into darkness. We could only dimly see the narrow, dusty footpaths, and the gloomy sides that were swallowed up in deeper gloom. What, then, of the majesty all about us! heights and depths and wonders! all was darkness. Then came the lightning—not flashes, but the blazing of the whole sky, incessant, and on every side. What recesses of glory we gazed into! What marvels of splendour shone out of the darkness! Think how with us, in us, is One who comes to make the common dusty ways of life resplendent, illuminating our dull thoughts by the light of the glory of God; clearing the vision of the soul, and then revealing the greatness of the salvation that is ours in Christ.

Let this prayer go up in earnest longing every day: "Holy Spirit, enlighten the eyes of my understanding that I may know what is the hope of his calling."

Then the Holy Spirit puts forth his energy within us to strengthen our desires.

It is pitiable, indeed, that we have so much within reach and see it not. Yet surely it is more pitiable still that we should see so much and yet scarce desire it. Desire! why, it is almost a deception to use that word to express our languid concern for Divine things. A mere passing thought that stirs a superficial sigh. Ah, how often the stream of our desire is dried up in the world's fierce heat. Thank God that He is willing to give us the Holy Spirit to be as floods upon the dry ground, and by his coming He fills us again with desires that burst the barriers and go surging out to God. We need sometimes to be wrapt with a fire of ardent longing after God, a great sense of want and desire consuming us, perishing with very want of God, as David felt: "As the hart panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after Thee, O God,—my soul thirsteth for God, for the living God." For this the Holy Spirit is given—to put his mighty energy into our desires, to draw out our souls in longings that stir and throb with the pulses of a divine person. It may be ours to take hold of the Almighty with his own omnipotence. Be this, too, our prayer: "Give me, O God, thy Holy Spirit, that in his strength my heart may long after Thee!"

Then the Holy Spirit puts a Divine energy into our faith. Doubts are lost, dissolved in the light of his clear shining. Christ is no more One of whom we have but vacant memories and vague thoughts; we know Him as real and present. We claim Him as our own. There bursts from the heart a triumphant assurance, an exultant possession, which cries, my Lord and my God. We put a bold constraint upon our King and compel Him by our importunity to abide with us.

Then, too, there is given to us by the Holy Spirit a gracious and tender sensitiveness. We are no more as the horse or as the mule, which have no understanding; our Master can guide us by his eye. We hear his whispered will and gladly do it. We find in the Holy Spirit, help and power to stand and wait upon the King in the busiest moment of our life, setting the aim in all things to this end, to please Him. It is as if God's own hand held the helm of our lives, and guided us; we waiting on his will.

Do you begin to sigh over this, good reader, thinking of a host of weaknesses and hindrances? Or will you exult in this as your possibility, purposed and promised for you? "Blessed Spirit, if this is what thou art come to do I thank thee. It may be mine as freely as any other's. I and my weakness and my hindrances cannot hinder Thee; my needs are but my claim upon thy help. O strengthen me with thy might that Christ may dwell in my heart by faith." And further, the Holy Spirit puts forth his grace within us for consecration to the Lord and for receiving Him.

As in the dedication of the Tabernacle—God had planned it all; it was all according to the pattern seen in the mount. Throughout it all the Holy Spirit had wrought in every worker, even in those that made the garments of the priest as well as in those who wrought the fine gold and precious stones. Now it was complete. Aaron stood in his robes of beauty and glory; the burnt-offering was ascending to heaven, and the incense filled the court. But God had not yet taken up his abode within the Holy of Holies; and till He came its end was all unanswered—the finished work was still unfinished. What now was needed? The blood had to touch it all and hallow it; and then the anointing oil had to rest upon all for consecration. Till then the inner chamber was but a place of empty darkness.

So is our salvation planned of God; and so from first to last is it wrought within us by the Holy Ghost. And so is it all to lead up to the Divine indwelling—that Christ may dwell in your hearts. Till He come and take up his abode within us the great purpose of all else still waits to be fulfilled. For this the gracious Spirit applies the cleansing blood. He is Himself the anointing; He purges and hallows and consecrates every desire and aim; all the round of business and pleasure and friendship, making us willing to yield all things to the Lord for his will, and to receive Him as the King who shall sit enthroned upon the heart, on whom our thoughts wait in loving steadfastness, and to whom every power may minister in glad service. And not willing only—the Holy Spirit puts forth his energy for the actual and formal surrender of ourselves to Christ; for purpose and desire sometimes fail because we stop short of the act of transfer. The blessed Spirit leads us forth to greet the Lord, and give him up the keys, and bid Him welcome.

So then, in our pursuit of holiness, alike for thought, for desire, for effort, we are dependent upon the gift of the Holy Ghost; and so for our thought and desire and effort his light and love and power are given. This gift divine, the beginning and pledge of all gifts, is ours for the asking. Let us draw near with the Apostle, bowing our knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, that he would grant us, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man, that Christ may dwell in our hearts by faith.

"I DREADS DE PROCESS."

By Dr. GEO. F. PENTECOST, Brooklyn.

COMING from Chicago, a while ago, I chanced to be in a palace-car, in which there were few passengers besides myself. The coloured porter was a very clever body, and I had frequent chats with him. He was fairly well informed, and I gathered from several things that he was, on principle and in practice, a moralist. So one time, during conversation, I said:

"Johnson, are you a Christian?"

"No sar!" he replied. "I ha'int no Christian; but I b'leves in it."

"Then," said I, "if you believe in it, why don't you become one?"

"Oh, sar! I gwine to be a Christian some time. I done fully made up my mine to dat long 'go," said he.

"But when?" I inquired.

"Oh! some time 'fore I die. I ain't one dese yer careless pussons dat don't think 'bout dem things. I don't let no day go ober my head 'thout thinking 'bout it; and I often tells de Lord dat I knows I'se a great sinner, and that in his own good time I'spects him to convart me. I don't want you to set me down for a careless, worldly-minded pusson; for I ain't dat. When I'se at home I allers go to church, and sometimes to de praah meetens; tho' I'se willin' to 'low I don't like de praah meetens so well as de preechin' ones. 'Cause why? When dem Christian people gits goin' in dare praah—'specially my old mudder—she jes' gits to talkin' to de Lord just 's if he was right dar by her, and it makes me feel dat I was jus' nowhar; kinder out in de cole like. Now, I don't never hab no such feelin's when I gos to preechin' meetens. De preechin' makes me feel dat I was not jes' all right; but it make me 'termine dat I'se gwine to git right, an' dat kind 'er evens it up and I feels better. An' I means it, Boss. I'se gwine to git right. I'se fully 'termined on dat."

"Well, Johnson," I replied to this somewhat detailed account of his church experience, "how long since you made up your mind to get right?"

"Oh! hits mose two years since, one night in one dese yer revival meetens, a feeling come over me dat I was a mighty big sinner and ef I didn't men' my ways I was gwine to lose my soul; and I resolved right dar and den to change."

"Well," said I, "did you change then?"

"Well, I knocked off lots o' my ole ways dat I used to have; quit swahrin and give up knocking 'bout wid dese yer fellers that go browsin 'round nights into policy shops and bar rooms, and udder wus places dan dem even."

"Well! You say you have changed your ways for the last two years. Have you got right, yet?"

"Oh, no sar! I hain't got what my old mudder got, yit."

"What do you mean by that?"

"Why, I means what you call gettin' a change; dat is, gettin borned agin."

"Then you don't think mending your ways is quite enough to make you a Christian?"

"Oh, no sar! I know better'n dat. I knows dat doing better ain't de same thing as bein' convarted; and my ole mudder tole me ever since I been a child dat I had to be borned agin. Dat's what makes her so familious like wid de Lord. You see, when you git borned agin den you's de Lord's chile, and you don hat'ter stan off and pray like a sinner dats beggin for suthin' dat he ain't got no right ter, but you just cum right up to him, like you was gwine to ax your mudder for suthin, and He gives it to you. Boss, I ain't one dese yer ignorant pussons. I been well raised. No man never had better raisin' dan I had; 'cause since I been big 'nuff to walk, my mudder done drilled dese things into me. And many time I hearn her a prayin' to de Lord to give me a new heart. Dat what she calls bein' borned agin sometimes."

"Well, Johnson, if, as you say, all your trying to do better, and all your leaving off of your old sins and your going to meetings is not sufficient to make you a Christian without being born again, why do you keep it up?"

"Oh! you see, I means to get borned again some time, as I tole you. I done made up my mind to dat; and, while I know dese yer good works, as dey calls 'em, ain't goin' to save me, I jis think maybe dey kinder keep me long till I does get convarted. Dats hit."

"Well, Johnson, with all your good intentions and all your good works, which you admit will not save you, suppose you should die; for instance, get 'smashed up' on the train some time before you 'get born again.' What do you think would become of you?"

"I done thought about dat, too; and sometimes when de khars go racking 'round dese yer curves so dat you 'most think nothin' can keep 'em on de track, den I think I'll not let 'nother trip go by without goin' to meetin' and just give up and get convarted. But, then, you knows how it is, Boss; when you's in danger, den you think you'll ten' to things right away, and den when you gets out de danger you jes' grow khareless like. Leastwise, dats me."

"Now, look here, Johnson. You seem to have pretty clear ideas about the necessity of being born again and what it is to be a Christian, and you say you have fully made up your mind to be a Christian, and you say that, if you should die as you are, you would be lost. Why don't you become a Christian now?"

Then, with a look on his sable face as much as to say, "I have never confessed before the real reason for my delay, but I guess I will just out with it," he paused a moment, and finally said:—

"Well now, Boss, I'se been talkin' pretty free wid you, mor'n I ever done befo'; so I specs I might just as well tell you fust as las'. De only reason I don't become a Christian right now—I mean as soon I git home again—is dat I dreads de process."

"You dread the process! Why, what do you mean by that?"

"Oh!" said he, with a knowing shake of the head, "hits no small matter to git borned again. It's a hard road to trabel to git into the Kingdom, and, much's I'd like to be in, I tells you I dread de startin' and dreads de travellin'."

"But," said I, "I don't understand. There is 'no process' in becoming a Christian. I wish you would tell me what it is that you dread."

"Well, fust of all, you got to git convicted; and dat makes you very uneasy in your min', and you feel like the wust sinner in the world, and dat you gwine right strate to hell, and dat you oughter go dar, and dat, if the Lord sarve you right, you will go dar. Now I hain't no doubt dat's true; but, Boss, dey's got to be a mighty big change in my feelin's 'fore I can be reconciled to dat. Den, how you gwine to know when you got convicted enough? Now, Boss, dat's what I mean when I says dat I dread the process."

Wishing to draw him out still further, I asked him: "Well, after you have been sufficiently convicted, what is the next step?"

"Well, den, arter you got convicted, de you got to 'pent of you' sins what you g convicted for; and, from all I can see ar heah, dat's a wusser 'sperience than t conviction. Boss, I 'specs 'pentence is aw awful."

"What makes you think so?"

"Why, hits jist this way in my mind. you got to git convicted so deep dat you ca say honest dat you feel as tho' you desar to go to Hell and you oughter, why yo have to 'pent awful hard and deep to get r dem sins. So, how's anybody to know ho long dey ought to 'pent and ef dey do 'pented deep 'nuff for de Lord to 'cept dem Dat's what's bodderin' me. Ef I could je git convicted, and den 'pent and git do wid it, I wouldn't dread it so much. But seed some folks going whole week sunder co viction and 'pentance 'fore dey got de t evidence dat dey was shore 'nuff converte I hearn my old mudder say she more'n whole year under conviction and 'penten for' de light broke in on her min'."

"Well," I said, "is that all?"

"Well," he said, "I 'low dat's the wu on it. But I's kinder confused about 'spe ence in de conversion. Cause how's an body to get de joy and de happiness wh dey is so busy wid conviction and 'pentence Dat's what I like to know."

Here I stopped him and told him simply as I could and as kindly that he w all wrong in his notions; that there was process about it; that there was convictio and repentance, but these were states mind that did not depend on emotion agony, but upon the testimony contained God's word; that the word of God fully a entirely set forth our simple condition a our danger. If we believed that to be tru and honestly took our places before God guilty sinners, that was conviction. other words, I tried to explain to him th convictiou was the full persuasion of t mind that God's word concerning sin a sinners was true. That the deep agony a painful processes he had described we rather the result of flesh or carnal mi struggling with itself. And so of repentanc It was just changing one's mind with r ference to sin and God; taking God's si against oneself and God's thoughts inste of our own, which must and would lea without the dreadful process he so dreade to abandonment of the old life which th now saw to be wrong and hateful in Go sight. And so of faith. I told him it w taking God at his word concerning Jesus a his work. Saying "yes" to the Gospel a cordially accepting it. "God so loved t world that he gave his only begotten son," & "Do you believe that?" "Yes." "He di for sinners?" "Yes." "For you?" "Yes "He bore their sins in his own body on t tree?" "Yes." "Your sins?" "Yes." offers you, as a free gift, eternal life, which in Christ?" "Yes." "Do you want it? "Yes." "Will you take it from God his word that it is for you, just as y would take a gift from any human being their word?" "Yes." "And hencefor trust him as your Saviour and obey him your Lord?" "Yes." Well, I told hi that was faith, and just when he would gi up his processes and stop looking at the old flesh struggles and deal with God on h word, just so soon would he be a Christian

I fear he did not quite see it all, but said it was a new way of putting it, a that he would think about it; but that w not the way his "ole mudder was co varted," and he knew she was right. I fe that there are thousands of others who, to certain extent, accept God's word agai themselves and would desire and do des be Christians; but they "dread the pro-ss." The truth is, that Jesus underwent l the dreadfulness of the process of human demption, that eternal life might come to with the whole train of unspeakable essings that go with it, as a gift; some-ing to be received, and not achieved. he work of the Holy Spirit, in conviction d regeneration, is not necessarily with mult and confusion. It is through the ord, persuading us of its truth and lead-g us to believe, trust God in Christ for our lvation. These things are written that Ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, e Son of God, and that ye might have life rough his name." (Jno. xx. 31).—New ork Independent.

TWO RICH MEN.

TWO men have lately passed away from life among us (says the New York Cen-ry Magazine) whom we should have been ad to make immortal. William E. Dodge d Peter Cooper were conspicuous examples men of wealth using their wealth in pro-oting the wealth of others. They, in their vn manner of living, solved the problem of pital and labour. If all rich men followed eir example, and found riches to be only a eans of doing good, all envy, jealousy, and tred of the rich would fade from the hearts the poor, and society would be freed from e of its most vexatious annoyances and reatening dangers. But where one rich an appreciates the true use of wealth, a ndred regard it only as an instrument r luxurious indulgence and vulgar display, for miserly and meaningless hoarding. is this false use of wealth that loosens all e joints of society, and makes our future certain.

The reason why the two men we have med were fountains of blessing is to be nd, not in demagogism, by which a Tweed New York "politician") gives coal to the or, as a means to secure votes, but in a nevolence which seeks the welfare of others its end. Dodge and Cooper sought no ice nor worldly honours. They were too ble to be receivers. They lived on the gher plan of giving. They understood the aster's words, "It is more blessed to give an to receive." They had an exquisite light (such as the miser or spendthrift ver knew) in an economy of benevolence, d made it the business of their lives to inister to the wants of men. What to the ass of men would be self-denial, was to em the healthy outflow of a generous irit. To have these streams dried up is a lamity not only to those who were imme-ately benefited, but to the whole city, hich loses the force of these living examples virtue.

The great greedy crowd of money-getters re rebuked and bewildered when they saw e venerable man of fourscore and ten plan-ng how best to help the deserving poor. he weak creatures who make up fashionable ciety could not but get a glimpse of an idea at there were higher prizes than dog-carts d yachts, and all the paraphernalia of cial distinction.

Peter Cooper's energy was antipodal to at of certain other rich men in our com-unity, dead and living. The one energy me from heaven; the other came from a ry different place. The one infuses health to the community; the other poisons every-ing it touches. The one energy is modest d loving; the other is brass-browed as tan, and stirs up the fires of hell in the man breast.

To the youth of our city and country, the two benevolent lives to which we have referred have been a useful lesson. How many of these may have been brought over to the practice of virtue by these honoured names! How many young men, ready to start in the selfish life of the multitude, may have been checked by the discovery in these examples of a truer happiness to be pursued by a holier road!

The best sermon that can be preached on the subject of riches and their use is to point to these noble lives. They are facts, and not theories. They cannot be doubted or denied. They lived among us, and left the truth established concretely for the examination and admiration of all. They have made more glowing and striking the contrast between the pure joys of beneficence and the feverish excitements, jealousies, trickeries, dishonesties, and cruelties of the grasp for gain. Many theoretic nostrums are recommended for diseased society, but lives like those of Dodge and Cooper give health wherever their influence extends.

REMINISCENCES OF RAILWAY TRAVEL.

II.

ONE of the great privileges often enjoyed in railway travel is the sudden and generally unexpected discovery that you are travelling with a fellow-believer in the Lord Jesus. There is something very sweet in the rapprochement that at once takes place, and which is intensified by the thought that your intercourse is short and may never be renewed till "the coming of our Lord and our gathering together unto Him."

I had this happy experience in a journey to Liverpool some time ago. In the middle of the journey a man got in the carriage, of rough and weather-beaten appearance, but on looking closely at him, I discovered something in his expression that encouraged me at once to address him on the best things, to which he responded most heartily, and told me that he was a Sunday-school teacher, although a few years ago he had been, as he described it, "a drunken, swearing reprobate." This made me anxious to have an account of a conversion in which the grace of God had gained such a manifest victory, and he willingly gratified me, and I will give his narrative, as near as I can, in his own hearty words:—

"I am the captain," he said, "of a small vessel engaged in the salt trade, and I was on the Mersey when the dreadful storm occurred in January" (which I well remembered). "I was not far from the docks when I saw that my vessel had shipped so much water that it must go down, so hastily lashing myself to some spars, I stood at the helm as the vessel's head settled to go down, and in a few minutes was battling with the waves, till I laid hold of a rope which was thrown to me from shore, and was dragged out of the sea. Now I tell you, sir, it would take hundreds of volumes to record what passed through my mind in those few minutes; all my life came up before me, and I was obliged to pass the judgment upon myself that I knew God would pass. As soon as I got on shore I took the first opportunity of going to a place of worship, and there I heard of a Saviour who could save a poor lost sinner like me, and whenever I am at my home on the Sunday, I like to go into the Sunday-school and tell the children about Him." As long as our journey lasted, we continued to talk of Jesus and his precious blood, which could give peace to such a heavily burdened conscience.

This interesting fact of the suddenly awakened conscience, and its wonderful revelation of the sinner to himself, was again illustrated to me in a railway journey from London. I had spoken to a working man seated opposite, and finding him willing to converse, I related the above incident to show how surely we shall know ourselves as sinners, sooner or later, in this world or the next. "Well," said he, "I can confirm that man's story. I am a house painter by trade, and once fell from a scaffolding three stories high; when near the ground my clothes were caught by a large nail that was sticking out, and my life was saved, but while I was falling, my past life opened out, and I seemed to have a vision of all I had done." As the carriage was full of passengers, I could not enter freely into conversation, but I feared there had not been such a happy result as in the former case. I trusted, however, the revival of it would be blessed to him, as I found him very quiet and thoughtful for the remainder of the journey.

I trust the narrative of these incidents may be useful to evangelists and others, who are seeking the salvation of their fellow-men by leading them to recognise and appeal to the conscience, as well as tell the good news. Too often the conscience is slumbering even where it is not seared, and some appeal may be blessed to its awakening, as we see in the case of the Samaritan woman, who could only understand our Lord's gracious words in the light of a deep conviction of her own sinfulness.

STRANGERS' REST, MARSEILLES.

THE work carried on here by Mr. C. Faithfull is well known to many of your readers. Large numbers of men constantly flock into Marseilles from the various coasts of the Mediterranean in search of employment, and their means are soon exhausted; without food or shelter their condition would be most miserable, were it not for the friendly shelter of the Rest. Here, from nine in the morning to nine at night, these unfortunates can sit quietly, and seek the knowledge of salvation from the large supply of Bibles and instructive books in various languages always on the large table. There I have seen, at various times, an ex-rabbi, two ex-priests, an artist, an interpreter, a seal-fisher, speaking; these, and innumerable poor labourers and mechanics, are most thankful to find a quiet shelter other than the wine-shops. This is the very place for Christian workers to look for poor lost ones; so many, reduced almost to despair as to this life, find here the open door to the Heavenly Home.

Mr. Faithfull's health having for some time obliged him to reside at Nice, he has recently felt it needful to propose that some Christian friends at Marseilles should form a committee to carry on the work more effectually, and to visit it regularly, and it is also desired to make some provision to prevent such a painful degree of starvation as occurs in some cases. A little money would sometimes enable a good workman to get employment elsewhere, and a fund to help in boat or railway fares, as well as for food, would be a great mercy for them. There are rooms and beds for those who can pay for them, and it is proposed to considerably increase this accommodation. Great numbers have to sleep in the open-air though there is a large hotel where 500 are received every night, and are not allowed to remain there beyond two or three weeks, so that others may take their places. I mention these particulars in order to show the peculiar need there is for the upholding and extension of such a work of mercy as this "Rest."

A Visitor.

CONVERTS AT EXETER.—During the last seven months, Mr. H. Wreford, a young Christian, has been holding Gospel services at the Royal Public Rooms here. The services have been well attended, especially during the last three months. Great blessing has attended the preaching, and large numbers have been brought to God.

Notes and Comments.

OUR London readers will observe that a party of young emigrants from Dr. Barnardo's Homes will be present at the Central Noon prayer-meeting, Aldersgate-street, on Tuesday next. The Doctor will give some account of the emigration department of the work, which is being rapidly developed.

Mr. Henry Varley has rendered good service to the cause of morals by his "Lecture to Men," delivered in January last in Exeter Hall, and since then in many towns and cities of the land. It has been published, and we are glad to note that a second edition has been called for, and is now ready, carefully revised. Young men should read its plain and practical statements on a subject upon which it is important they should be well informed, as deeply affecting their present and eternal welfare.

The result of the Dean of Westminster's appeal for money to purchase the site of a public-house has been the raising of upwards of £6000 in about three weeks. One donor has contributed the cost of the site, and the remainder of the amount raised has been placed in the hands of trustees for the erection of a coffee-palace and lodging-house for the poor of the district. For this purpose it is hoped further donations will be obtained. The site is in Great Peter-street, Westminster, where such a provision is sorely needed.

Miss Ellice Hopkins has been taking an eminently practical step by pointing out to a large and influential meeting of men at Plymouth, under the presidency of the Mayor, the advantages of securing legislation (for dealing with vice) similar to the Glasgow Police Act, to replace, in Plymouth and some other towns, Acts which there can be little doubt will be shortly repealed. Many of our readers are aware that the Glasgow Act is based upon the principle that vice should be suppressed, not regulated, and that the Act has been worked with highly beneficial results to that city. Miss Hopkins was received with much sympathy, and a representative committee was formed, comprising the Rev. Prebendary Wilkinson and other clergymen, a number of Nonconformist ministers, and some leading laymen of Plymouth. If action be taken on the lines suggested by Miss Hopkins, it will be a practical step towards the solution of a difficult and painful question.

The effect produced by the outbreak of cholera at Damietta upon the Money Markets of the world, and the complications to which it may give rise, furnish a striking illustration of the absolute dependence of human governments and arrangements upon a higher power. The wisest and most effective designs of men, involving the welfare of many nations, may be in a moment upset by occurrences over which man has no sort of control. It is well to calculate upon this when we are told, as we often are, that events predicted in the Word of God cannot possibly come to pass, or at least must take long ages yet to reach their fulfilment. The Eastern Question, so puzzling to statesmen and diplomatists, and upon which so many prophetic facts depend, would be easy of solution were He who orders all things according to the counsel of his own will, to take it into his own hands. It is certainly instructive to note the sense of insecurity, and general anxiety, which the epidemic just now manifesting itself in Egypt has produced.

What may justly be regarded as a public loss in the literary and scientific world, has occurred in the death of Mr. William Spottiswoode, President of the Royal Society, and head of the well-known firm of Queen's Printers. He was an eminent linguist, mathematician, and Oriental scholar, as well as scientist, and will be greatly missed from the Society over which he presided, as well as by the numerous employés connected with his business establishment, his relations with whom were of the friendliest and best. He was but fifty-nine years of age, but succumbed to an attack of typhoid-fever, by which he was attacked some three weeks ago.

In accordance with the desire of many eminent men of science, as well as a request preferred by a number of working men, the Dean of Westminster has consented to Mr. Spottiswoode's remains being interred in Westminster Abbey.

Only the day before, another distinguished member of the Royal Society also passed away, General Sir Edward Sabine. He, however, had reached the ripe old age of ninety-five years. The Times says of him that he holds high rank as a scientific worker, and his name will ever occupy a large place in the annals of science and the history of navigation. He was astronomer of the first expedition in search of the North-West passage, under Sir John Ross in 1818, and also of the second, under Sir Edward Parry in 1819—20.

According to Professor Sattler, of Munich, who has just published an essay on the chronology of our Lord's birth, we are five years behind the real date of the Christian era, and should write 1888 instead of 1883 for the current year. He has been examining some newly-discovered coins struck in the reign of Herod Antipas, and concludes that Christ must have been born in the 749 year A.U.C., instead of 754. This conclusion he tries to establish from the testimony of the Evangelists.

The treatment of the Criminal Law Amendment Bill by the House of Lords on Friday is not calculated to increase the confidence of right-minded members of society in the fitness of the House to deal with the subject. It is scarcely credible that one occupying such a position as the Marquis of Salisbury should support any amendments of the Bill calculated to lessen its power to deal effectively with the enormous evils it is intended to remedy. And yet his acquiescence in Lord Fitzgerald's proposal to reduce the age at which the law of England should protect young girls, unquestionably points in that direction. So also in the case of the Marquis of Bath, who moved the rejection of clauses dealing with the repression of houses of ill-fame, on the ground that they interfered too much with personal liberty; we should have thought that personal liberty to uphold and increase vice would have been a cause unworthy of so influential a personage.

The fairness of Lord Shaftesbury's proposal to make it as criminal an act for men to importune women and girls in the streets as the reverse would appear to be self-evident, but it was rejected by a majority of twenty-eight to eleven. Clearly it is not to our high places we must chiefly look for the redress of social wrongs. Culture, refinement, and rank are not in themselves to be relied on as aids in the work of repressing evil and establishing virtue in the land.

An American paper gives the followi recipe for killing a prayer-meeting. It worth notice by some of those to whom personal application will not be very difficu The spirit of dulness and paucity of atten ance which marks many church praye meetings is a fact calling for deep concer The practical cause may be frequently trac to such points as are here referred to; th are but too often exemplified:—

1. Forget all about it until the bell rings.
2. Come ten minutes late, and sit near the do
3. Drag the music. Slow, painfully slow sing is so appropriate for a dead prayer-meeting.
4. When the meeting is begun, wait for others speak and pray.
5. When you do take part, occupy about twen minutes.
6. Be sure and bewail the low spiritual condit of the church.
7. When the meeting closes, go out as fro funeral. You can speak with your brethren or stranger at some other time and place.
8. If you mention the meeting during the we tell how dull it was.

If this does not kill the prayer-meeting, s away entirely for six months or a year.

Lack of genuine interest and concern reference to the things of Christ lies at root of the depression and monotony by wh so many meetings for prayer are char terised. Earnestness in the Master's serv would soon cure the evils there is so mu reason to deplore. The Apostle's cha against some of those with whom he had do applies to many now, they "all seek th own, not the things of Jesus Christ." need to have our hearts and minds brou into closer union with Him, who when saw the woful condition of men, "wonde that there was no intercessor," and w loving heart Himself stood in the brea Were all Christians to "walk in love, Christ also hath loved us, and given Him for us," the spirit of prayer would s manifest itself, and prayer-meetings wo be the liveliest and most frequented of all assemblies.

There was no dulness in the Pare Prayer-meeting held in the garden at M may Park on Friday afternoon. Within hour more than twenty prayers were offe one after another requesting special sup cation for those dear to them. Joy praise mingled with earnest entreaty, as hearts were drawn with one consent to m their requests known unto God. Such m ings might be much more frequently with if there was but more directness freedom of expression aimed at in s assemblies. In many cases the metho conducting the meetings is so stereotype in itself to tend to the repression of all vig and warmth of heart.

The Monthly Letter of the Protes Alliance for last month calls attention book published in Dublin in 1879, under auspices and with the express sanction of Romish Archbishops and Bishops of Irel It is a translation of a work by the Rev Maurel, S.J., entitled, "The Church and Sovereign Pontiff." Its political influe may be judged of from the following cepts, which it lays down;—

(1) Kings are subject to the Ecclesiastical p in "temporal things;" (2) Popes have a dire well as indirect power to depose kings; (3) have a right to withdraw subjects from the "su sion and obedience which they owe" to their ru (4) Popes may absolve subjects "from their oa fidelity;" and (5) that faithful Roman Cath are forbidden to "have any connection wit excommunicated person denounced by na either in conversation, letters, business, or ha tion.

Dr. Croke said of this book, he "should like to see a copy in every house in Ireland." In the light of such teaching, who can wonder that priest-ridden Irishmen are disaffected, and constantly resorting to lawless agitation? What becomes, moreover, of papal assurances that Irish anarchy is not regarded with favour at the Vatican? The assurance comes too late, and is too much opposed to facts to have weight with Protestants whose eyes are open. Papal meddling with political affairs has been the source of untold misery in the world from the first of its introduction, and we do well to jealously guard against recognition of it in any form. The serpent has not lost its sting, nor the fox its cunning.

The French correspondent of Evangelical Christendom, always bright and hopeful, gives cheering news of the "Inner Mission," and other Evangelistic agencies in France. Speaking of the "McAll Mission," it says:—

The Church of the Oratoire, in Paris, was crowded on May 28 to hear M. Saillens give an account of his reception in America as Mr. McAll's colleague. Three new auxiliary committees have been formed in Baltimore, New York, and Boston, uniting with others already existing to form the national committee to help Mr. McAll, and having for President Mrs. Hayes, and Vice-President, Mrs. Garfield. A resolution of thanks to the Christian friends in America was passed.

The same correspondent, sympathising with the Salvation Army, reports a visit of that body to a small town in France, where the Christians had been for years complaining of the deadness of the Church and the increase of sin, and praying for a revival. When the news came of a threatened invasion of the Salvation Army, prayers went up that such a disaster might be averted. But they came. The Mayor granted the theatre, and the Sub-Prefect declared that if other meetings of the kind were held he would certainly be there, for it did him good. Our contemporary says that in Paris the meetings at Quai Valmy are numerous and quiet, and adds, what all our readers will be glad to read:—

All is done with order and sprightly propriety. If the Salvationists continue in this gradual adaptation of means to the aim they have in view—viz., the salvation of souls—instead of the importation of unnecessary foreign ways and means, they will succeed even as Mr. McAll has succeeded. Both have had to feel their way; and there is room for all, and a thousand more.

Miss Booth writes to us:—"Every step we have taken forward has been in the face of much opposition and the greatest difficulty; but the work is more encouraging than ever." She gives a case of a Parisian who had been a hard drinker and living the wildest life, who came with his companions to mock, but has "become one of the brightest lights" in that dark city, and is but one of many such instances.

"At no period," Miss Booth adds, "had we brighter prospects spiritually, but financially it is a most critical moment. £500 will help us to turn this difficult corner, and I cannot help feeling that if friends could only see what we are doing, and in the most economical way possible, they would gladly relieve us of this heavy burden."

Among the contributions to the fund raised for the relief of needy sufferers from the recent terrible calamity at Sunderland the Queen sent £50, and the Primitive Methodist Conference forwarded from South Shields, during its session there, the sum of £143, as a mark of sympathy with the bereaved.

Some of the American States continue to wage valiant warfare against the drink traffic. The State Senate of Illinois have just passed a bill to raise the price of liquor licences to five hundred dollars each. The promotion of temperance legislation in our own country is an object which cannot be too warmly supported. If agitation in this direction is wisely and strenuously maintained, the rapid advance of temperance principles in the land should exert a powerful influence whenever the next general election takes place.

A somewhat unusual act of Christian courtesy and fraternity was performed the other day by Rev. W. Sinclair, Vicar of St. Stephen's Church, Rochester-row, at the celebration of the first anniversary of his church, which was built by the Baroness Burdett-Coutts. At the luncheon, the Vicar had invited the Nonconformist ministers of the district to be present, and "the Church and ministers of all denominations" being proposed by Mr. Bartlett-Burdett-Coutts, Revs. Dr. Rigg, Dr. Hiles Hitchens, and Henry Simon responded. Such interchanges of sympathy and co-operation on the part of Churchmen and Dissenters cannot fail to be beneficial to the influence and work of both in their respective spheres.

It was a noble resolution to which David Livingstone came when he said:—

I will place no value on anything I have or may possess, except in relation to the kingdom of Christ. If anything will advance the interests of that kingdom, it shall be given away, or kept only as by the giving or keeping of it I shall most promote the glory of Him to whom I owe all my hopes in time and eternity. May grace and strength sufficient to enable me to adhere faithfully to this resolution be imparted to me, so that, not in name only, all my interests and those of my children may be identified with his cause!

By such words as these "he being dead yet speaketh," his life having so abundantly confirmed their sincerity. Has every reader of this extract taken the same position? It is only what our Saviour asks of each one of his followers, and on the ground of his love to us, deserves as well as claims: "Ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price."

At a meeting held at Lord Granville's house the other day, a statement was made with regard to the Archbishop Tait Memorial Fund, which had reached the sum of £9800. Of this, £5000 has been set aside for a monument, £1000 has been absorbed by expenses of advertising, &c., leaving a surplus of £3800 for mission purposes. Of this, however, £1000 has been specially given in connection with the Bishop of London's Fund, so that less than £3000 remains for benevolent application. The object of the meeting was to hear the details of a plan proposed by the present Archbishop for increasing this amount, and employing it in establishing a staff of missioners, whose office it should be to penetrate the most Godless districts in every diocese, and by preaching, visiting, and arousing knots of people to work with them, seek to raise the masses from their spiritual destitution. His Grace said he believed this would be a true commemoration and pursuance of the aims of his revered predecessor. Earl Granville moved a resolution endorsing and commending this plan, which was unanimously adopted. It certainly appears to have in it the elements of great usefulness and adaptation to a desired end.

It is satisfactory and encouraging to learn that Sunday-school work is progressing rapidly in the East of Europe. The following facts remind us in how many ways the work of God is being carried on where we may least expect, and by instrumentalities raised up independently of the usual organisations for carrying on his cause:—

Sclavonia is an entirely new field, in which there is not a single church which the thousands of Bohemians scattered through the province can attend. There are no schools, pastors, or teachers; and such Christians as desire to hold on to their faith have been wont to assemble in the one room—study, dining, and sleeping room—of Mr. Horkey, at Ul Janik. This gentleman has for some time carried on a Sunday-school in the same place, and he sends many encouraging incidents of the offered and answered prayers of some of the children. The school has been temporarily discontinued on account of the terrible floods, which have rendered the country almost impassable.

"There are diversities of operations, but it is the same God who worketh all in all."

The Editor of the Philadelphia Sunday-school Times also says:—

Pastor Schubert reports great and rapid progress in Sunday-school work in Bohemia, giving detailed accounts of ten schools. That of Kraubschitz is divided into classes, and has eighty-six scholars, with twenty-two teachers, who are gathered into a preparatory class and instructed by the pastor, while the children read together the lesson they are to recite. The school of Roudnice has sixteen scholars and four teachers. There is a school at Turnu-Severin, Roumania, consisting of thirteen scholars and three teachers, in which four denominations are represented and six languages spoken—in some instances by the same children. The congregation numbers 150, and the school recently presented four candidates for confirmation. At Philippopolis there is an orphanage containing 100 of the children whose parents were murdered by the Bashi Bazouks; to these, copies of "Christie's Old Organ" were recently presented, and the next Sunday they marched in a body to the Sunday-school, which already contained 120 children, divided into regular classes.

The tendencies of French Republicanism in reference to God and godliness are by no means altered from what they were, though to some extent at present held in check. This is evidenced by the fact that the Prefect of the Seine, by an order dated the 23rd ult., abolishes the Hospital Chaplaincies from 1st July. The Archbishop of Paris, in a letter he has just issued, says, "This measure has been taken at the instance of the Paris Municipality, a body which makes a parade of its hostility to religion." He justly complains that while enormous sums are voted for the embellishment of theatres and fêtes, the modest sums which ensure consolation to the aged and afflicted should be thus withheld.

There is more life and activity in French Protestantism than many English Christians are aware of. It may interest some of our readers, who are not closely acquainted with such facts, to know that, independent of a number of good works initiated and carried on by individual effort, there are 119 religious or philanthropic societies in France connected with Protestant Christianity. These include, for instance, such as the Société Biblique de France, spending annually about £1600, and distributing several thousand copies of the Scriptures; the Société Biblique de Paris, with an income of £1100; the Société des Missions Evangeliques, with Missions in the Tahitian and Loyalty Islands, and in Zambesi, with an income of £12,000; the Société Centrale d'Evangelisation en France, supporting 360 evangelistic stations and two theological schools; and the Société Evangelique de France, which has just celebrated its jubilee. Let prayer be fervent for the Divine power to increasingly energise these and similar institutions, and crown their instrumentality with success.

THREE WAYS OF FILLING A COLLECTING BOX.

I.

I KNOW a little nurse who is full of pity for the poor children who are growing up like heathen in the streets of our large towns, and so she took a missionary box to collect money for them. She wants to send good men to see their parents and persuade them not to drive the children out into the streets, where they learn to lie and swear and steal, but to send them to Sunday-school, where these good men will teach them something better, and train them up to be God's dear children. In the summer-time, nurse is sent out to the farm-houses to get eggs and butter and such things for the house, and she takes her box with her always, and gets many a penny or threepenny-piece from the farmers' wives. When the squire comes down for the shooting, with a house full of servants as well as company, the box is taken up to his house and sent round. Other people could do something of the same kind if they had the same love for Jesus, and the same wish to save poor friendless children, that nurse has.

II.

I have a little girl who persuaded her father to let her call one of the fowls in the poultry-yard her own, and the eggs which this hen lays are sold for Missions. Suppose the hen lays ninety eggs a year, this would be 7s. 6d. for the missionary box. Last year Truey had 12s. 3d. in her box collected in this and other ways.

III.

I know a young groom whose master is a clergyman, and when they had a meeting for Home Missions the groom thought he must do something for such a good cause.

So he sat down and thought the matter over, and at last he went to his master and said, "If you please, sir, I want to take a missionary box."

"Very well, John," said his master, "how are you going to fill it?"

"Why, sir, I've been thinking that the men in the village go four or five miles into town on Saturdays to get shaved, and if you will give me an old razor, sir, and let me have the use of the saddle-room on Saturday evenings, I'll shave them all at twopence a chin and put the money in my box."

Of course the clergyman was delighted, and gave his consent as well as the razor; and so John shaves the twopences into his missionary box off the faces of his master's parishioners. Where there's a will there's a way.—Our Highways and Byways.

GOSPEL WORK IN FRANCE.—In the spirit of your article in your issue of the 21st, in which you suggest that Christians might usefully employ their holidays, I would acquaint any whom it might interest that I start on my annual tour among Gospel-workers in France early in July. I hope to visit Paris in time for the National Fête, and the great Breton Fête held at Auray St. Anne. In the interval I shall visit Orleans, Blois, Tours, Angiers, and Nantes; all of them of interest to Englishmen from their historic associations. The trip will close up by a visit to the Breton Mission and its workers, staying at their houses. I have no pecuniary aim, I share expenses with the rest; only to see these workers at their posts I am sure will enlist for them and the Lord's cause much sympathy. W. L. Lang, F.R.G.S.

COLPORTAGE IN IRELAND.

A LITTLE company of friends met last week, by the kind invitation of Miss Tod, of Belfast, at 1, Lower Phillimore-place, Kensington, to hear details of the work of Christian Colportage in Ireland. Sir Thomas McCluer, M.P., who presided, said he could speak from personal knowledge of the good work that is being done by the Bible and Colportage Society. In these days, when so much evil literature is being scattered about, he thought such a work was of the utmost importance.

Miss Tod said she was glad to know that much sympathy was now felt by English people for the needs of Ireland; yet little is known of the real condition of the country. Education has spread largely over the island, but through the poverty of the people, many considerable places in remote parts are not able to support a book-selling establishment. An appalling account has lately been given of the spread of evil literature in London, and it has been stated that bales of papers and periodicals of the same pernicious and corrupting kind are regularly despatched to Ireland. To counteract this, and also to supply good reading to the people, religious and secular, the work of this Bible and Colportage Society is of incalculable value.

As one of the honorary secretaries of the Society, Rev. John Elliot, of Armagh, said the agents of the Society combined the offices of both the Scripture reader and the book hawker. None but those who have known Ireland in the past and know it now, can have any idea of the great strides that have been made in educational advantages amongst the poor within fifty years. Being now able to read, and having a taste for it, the people must have something good with which to gratify that taste. Mr. Elliot made the extraordinary statement that, taking the whole of Ireland, there are only about 530 persons engaged as publishers or booksellers or librarians, so great is the scarcity of books in many places. Many suitable men were willing to engage in this colportage work, and every door is open to their efforts, which are strictly uncontroversial. The sales made are of the most encouraging nature. The only difficulty in late years has been to supply the funds from which the agent is partially supported. It was a remarkable fact, that wherever a district of the country had been neglected in a moral and spiritual sense, the emissaries of murder and outrage have had full sway. On the other hand, where the influence of the colporteur has extended, the people have been exempt from complicity in these terrible crimes. Copies of the Douay Testament are being circulated by hundreds throughout the country.

Rev. Mr. Armstrong, who came from the very heart of the "disturbed districts" in West Ireland, and had lived there for thirty-seven years, said he could corroborate the statement as to the great increase in the spread of the Scriptures and good books. Notwithstanding the dreadful things that had been happening the Scripture readers and colporteurs have not been molested in the least by those who were hatching and committing outrages against society.

Mr. Stansfeld, M.P., said that on several visits to Ireland he had been favourably impressed by what he had heard of the work of this Society, and that impression had been deepened by what he had read and heard of it since. Many of the schemes propounded for the benefit of the Irish people were of a mixed character, but no possible evil results could arise in connection with the work of this society. Dr. Fisher spoke warmly of the native kindness of the Irish people, as he had himself experienced it. He thought the English people should take every opportunity of showing practical kindness to the Irish people. In response to this appeal Mr. Stansfeld offered £5 to the funds of the Society, and a visitor at the meeting (an American lady) gave £20, to extend over for two years. Others contributions were promised or handed in.

JEALOUSY.

LOVE eternal, full of glory,
Infinite, divine,
Drawing with a jealous yearning,
Human hears to Thine.

Longing with a jealous longing
For a vast return;
Shall our breasts be irresponsive
When a God's doth burn?

Shall we mete from meanest measure
Love in little dole,
When Thou pleadest for all passion
Of the ardent soul?

Nay, but Christ! we come to Thee
Laden with our love,
Come to meet the sweet grace flowing
From the Fount above.

Only jealous lest we be not Jealous with our might;
Lest we serve Thee not delighted
With a whole delight.

Vain, and vile, the hearts that offer
Love, in language lame,
Yet the lip which praise upraiseth
Honoureth thy name.

O! Eternal God, accept us,
Make our zeal to be Perfect, ere perforce we worship
When we look on Thee.

FLOWER GIRLS' MISSION.

THE Watercress and Flower Girls' Mission held its seventeenth anniversary on June 26 at the Foresters' Hall, Clerkenwell. About 700 women sat down to a good meat tea at six o'clock, after which the public meeting was held under the presidency of Lord Shaftesbury. Connected with the celebration was an artificial flower exhibition, a creditable result of the painstaking industry and artistic taste of the Flower Girl Brigade.

Mr. Groom, the superintendent, was able to report satisfactorily of the past year's work. The "Emily Loan Fund" had been a friend to many poor girls in time of need, and although nearly £3000 had been left since its establishment ten years ago, there had been but few losses. As an expression of gratitude for this loan-fund the flower-sellers presented Lord Shaftesbury with a timepiece. These girls were honourable, and desire to live upright lives. They are surrounded by many temptations, and it is a good thing they have a friend in Mr. Groom, who is well able to direct them where they can get strength to resist the many forms of evil which surround them. The spiritual good is the one great aim of the Mission, and of course this includes the temporal. By well-ordered clubs and classes an amount of work is done which must surprise any one who takes the trouble to look into the report.

The noble chairman, the Bishop of Bedford, Sir J. Whittaker Ellis, Sir Robert Carden, Sir E. Henderson and Rev. J. Rose, urged the claims of the mission very strongly. We observe from the report that out of £660 received £103 came from the workers in, and those who are benefitted by, the Mission. This of itself is no little encouragement to others to help. Mr. Groom makes a special effort to get hold of the little girls in the streets, and by teaching them in the home the artificial flower-making, and domestic work, alongside of the truth of the Gospel, they become respectable members of society, and many of them Christians. The address of Mr. Groom is 8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

HORNSEY BLUE RIBBON MISSION.—A twelve days' Mission has been held at Hornsey, in a large marquee. Major and Mrs. Evered Poole, assisted by Rev. J. Jeakes, Mrs. G. Reany, and others, are greatly encouraged by good attendances, and hope for great blessing on their effort.

Mildmay Park Conference,

June 27, 28, and 29, 1883.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, JUNE 27.

UNION WITH CHRIST, THE GROUND OF SECURITY.

PUNCTUALLY at the stroke of eleven o'clock, on Wednesday morning, 27th inst., Mr. S. A. BLACKWOOD rose in his place, and gave out to the crowded company in the Conference Hall, a motto for the three days: "Unto HIM shall the gathering of the people be." Then was sung this prayer-hymn, the composition of the late William Pennefather:—

"Jesus! stand among us
In thy risen power,
Let this time of worship
Be a hallowed hour.

"Breathe the Holy Spirit
Into every heart;
Bid the fears and sorrows
From each soul depart.

"Thus, with quickened footsteps,
We'll pursue our way,
Watching for the dawning
Of the eternal day."

The venerable Dr. Wilson, Vicar of the parish of Islington, led the opening prayer of the assembly, as he has done for many years past. With much unction and earnestness he breathed out thanksgivings for past blessing in connection with the Conference, and supplications for present need, and for rich showers of spiritual refreshment upon all the mission-fields of the world.

OPENING REMARKS BY THE CHAIRMAN.

Mr. S. A. Blackwood, before reading Psalm cxxii., said: It is a great privilege to bid you welcome to Mildmay again, and to know that it is not merely a welcome to Mildmay, but a welcome from the King himself to his own presence. He says "Well-come;" I trust that may be the experience of all present. He never bids us welcome without coming Himself to meet us. He comes as the Great High Priest over the House of God, after the order of Melchizedek, not empty-handed, but like him, bringing forth bread and wine. He bids us all welcome to seek Him—the weakest and the worst, the poorest as well as the richest, the most insignificant as well as the most prominent. May there be an echo in all our hearts this morning! What a comfort, as one looks on this sea of faces, and tries to reflect on the almost infinitely varied wants of every heart, that Jesus, in whom all fulness dwells, has a blessing for every heart. The Lord make us willing in this day of his power, to sit at his feet, to hear his word, and to receive it into our hearts.

Having read, and briefly commented on the Psalm, Mr. Blackwood said that no doubt there were varied motives in the minds of those present. Perhaps there were some, like the Jews of old, who came to the feast, not for the sake of Jesus only, but that they might see Lazarus. It is to be feared that we do not always come for the sake of Jesus only, but that we may hear this or that speaker, and see this or that friend. Not that we are to be debarred from deriving special benefit through these human channels, not that the Lord would denaturalise us, or take away the enjoyment of these great privileges; but let us be jealous in our gatherings lest such subsidiary objects take the place of the Master himself, lest we come to hear and see others instead of "for the sake of Jesus only." There were others spoken of on this same occasion—the Greeks—who came to Philip, and said "Sir, we would see Jesus." The object of their desire was not the resurrection man merely, but Him who was "the Resurrection and the Life." And to them the Lord spake words—the very subject that we have for our morning's meditation. If the desire of your heart to-day is to see Jesus, you shall see Him and hear Him. He will speak words of power, and grace, and life to your hearts.

Mr. Blackwood then referred in a few sentences to the change in the usual programme this year, by the omission of the subsidiary afternoon gatherings, on behalf of various forms of Christian enterprise. The reason of this change was that the minds of those attending the Conference might not be distracted from the worship of God and the study of his Word, that were the original and main objects of the meetings. The subject to be considered on this occasion, he said, might be considered very simple and elementary. But how needful it is in these days to go back to foundation truths. Many are unsettled in their minds, because, though trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ, they are not grounded in the truth, and are unable to give a reason for the hope that is in them. Thank God the foundations cannot be destroyed, but we do well to go back to them and see how we stand. He then read over the passages of Scripture on the programme that had been selected as suggesting the line of thought that might be taken with reference to the subject of the day—"Union with Christ, as the ground of our security. Thereafter the hymn was sung commencing—

"How shall we praise thy name,
Jesus, thou Lord of light?
We need the seraph's power,
We need the angel's might;
And yet the pardoned soul can tell
More than unfallen Gabriel."

God Seeking Union with his People.

BY REV. CHARLES A. FOX.

I can hardly think of any statement, however profound or precise, to convey the idea of "Union with Christ" more completely or forcibly than the old familiar words out of the Holy Scriptures — the lost sheep upon the shoulders of the seeking Shepherd. This is the union, dear child of God, that we have with Christ. There were two tracks when we stepped forth—the track of the lost sheep, erring and wandering, and the track of the Shepherd. As soon as they had once met, the lost one was placed on the very shoulders of the Shepherd, and there was only one track henceforth—one track homeward. We are not living our own lives, we are living Christ's life. He bears and carries us, and He will carry us right on to the end. We have one name, we have one nature, yea, we have similar wounds. His shoulder and breast are covered with the names of his people; even the very palms of his hands are written over with our names. But He also bears the wounds of the Cross. "These are the wounds wherewith they wounded Me, in the house of my friends." And as we bear the name of Jesus, we also bear his wounds, "always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus." This is the true "fellowship of his sufferings;" we have mutual sympathy, He with our wounds, and we with his blessed wounds.

You may ask: How was it that the Holy Spirit could not be given until Christ was glorified? The answer seems to be this: The Holy Ghost cannot give an imperfect Gospel, cannot reveal Christ as crucified only. He reveals a full Christ, a Christ who has been crucified, a Christ who has risen, a Christ who has ascended, and who is on the very throne of power, mediating for his people.

I will say one word, first of all, as to God's intention or purpose, that there should be union between Christ and his people. It has been in the heart of God from the very earliest ages. In the first Gospel that God ever gave—the gospel of promise—we find this thought. God yearned to be in union with his children immediately after they had fallen, so He gave to Adam the blessed and wonderful promise: "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." It was the promise of power. The next promise that God gave in this first Gospel of promise was when he met his servants as they came out of the Ark. It was a promise of peace: "I will not again curse the ground any more for man's sake." The third promise was that given to Abraham—the promise of the possession of the land. This was handed on from the one to the other. Moses took it and brought the people into the wilderness; then Joshua took it, and brought the people at last into the holy land of promise. In all these three promises we find that God was seeking for union with his people.

Take up the next Gospel that God revealed to man—the gospel of precept, combined with all those wonderful object pictures and types. The command was "Thou shalt love." Was not that God desiring union? In these wonderful pictures and symbols we have God revealing his love. What had the Tabernacle to say? This: "I will dwell with you, my people." What had the altar to say? "I will forgive you, my people." What had the laver to say? "I will cleanse you, my people." What had the candlestick to say? "I will illuminate you, my people." What had the table of shew bread to say? "I will associate myself with you, my people." What had the sacred veil, between the holy place and the holiest of all, to say? "I shall be one with you one day. On the cross of Calvary, when the crucifixion of Jesus, which is now hidden from your eyes, shall be fully revealed, I shall then have the fullest union with you, my people." What said that mercy-seat? "I will commune with you, and meet you here." What said the priest as to this union with Christ? He came from the sinner and walked right by the altar and the laver, right up to the mercy-seat, and there linked the sinner and the Saviour together in a bond of eternal peace. He said more. His breast, glowing with jewels, proclaimed that the love of God binds the hearts of all his people together on the one sacred heart of Jesus. What said the cloud and the pillar of fire? "I will guide you, my people." I know nothing in all Scripture more affecting than this, that when God turned his people back, because of their disobedience and unbelief, He himself should go before them; that He should lead them Himself all through the wilderness of the provocation. He could not be torn from them by any means—not even by the means of sin. Oh, child of God! this is the Gospel which reveals the unity of Christ with his people.

Again, we have a further Gospel in the Old Scriptures—the Gospel of the prophecies. What are they, but the assurance that when He sends them into captivity He himself shall be in union with them as their hope and joy, and giving them the victory?

Then in the New Testament we have the Gospel of the person of Jesus Christ. God becomes incarnate because He would be in union with his people. There was no poor sinner that He would not touch, such was his yearning desire to draw all men unto Him. In that person of Christ every foe that we have as sinners—sin, death, disease, judgment, and guilt—all have been fought and defeated. The world, the flesh, and the devil, were overcome by the Son of God for us. There is yet further, the Gospel of the passion, in which the Lord shows his deepest union with his people by his suffering and death upon the cross. After his death and resurrection there was the Gospel of the spiritual presence, when He loved to walk and talk with Mary and the disciples going to Emmaus, and the rest. Last of all, there was the grand Gospel of Pentecost.

Do we realise that this is the great desire of God—union with his people? Let me put it before you in this way. It was the sovereign grace of God the Father that procured it. It was the sovereign sacrifice of God the Son that secured it. It is the blessed indwelling of God the Holy Ghost that ensures it. God gave us as a gift to his Son. What a gift! We are in the covenant. "Thine they were, and Thou gavest them Me." We are chosen in Christ, blessed with all spiritual blessings in Christ, predestinated in Christ, accepted in Christ, redeemed in Christ, sealed in Christ. Everything is in Him. More than that, Christ himself hath secured it. He was not satisfied until He had come to the cross of death for us. He was in great haste about it. "I have a baptism to be baptised with, and how am I straitened till it is accomplished." It was on the cross that the real union of Christ and his people was begun. We are crucified together with Him, buried together, quickened together. I have often wondered how God the Father could quicken us together with Christ, the Holy One with the vile, the Spotless One with the sinner. We are raised up together with Him, and are seated on the very throne of God in the person of Jesus Christ. The Holy Ghost ensures all this to us. He reveals Christ to us. He worketh in us. He keeps us low down in the dust, in the place of death, teaching us that in ourselves we are nothing in the sight of God.

What are the privileges then of this union? They are very great. There is the privilege of partnership. Through our union with Christ we are possessors of the Divine nature. Our inheritance is secured. Our Representative has gone up to heaven, and impersonates us there before the throne of God. He has gone there to administer his own will. He left all to his people—his peace, his joy, his work. Now he has gone on high to administer that will, to see that his people have all his blessed possessions. He is there to sanctify us, sending down upon us the streams of holy oil. He is there that He may fill all things. Bring out your empty vessels to-day. There are 3000 here I suppose. Let each one empty the vessels and bring them out, so that all may receive of the great fulness that is in Christ and be filled. Let each bring a whole and an emptied heart, that each may receive a whole and a full Christ.

There is a further privilege through this union. We read in that wonderful chapter, John xiv., "Where I am, there ye may be also." There is oneness of place; but there is more: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the works that I do shall ye do also: and greater works shall ye do." Oh, the unselfishness of God! He will not do "the works," though He has done "the work." He leaves his people to do the works. He wants the branches to bear the fruit. There is the grand Root Vine, standing outside amid the storms, the punishment and the wrath that we deserve; inside there are the branches, in the shelter and the warmth of God's own presence. On the branches hang all the fruit, the perfume, the beauty, the glory, because of the wonderful unselfishness of God. "The works that I do shall ye do also." What are they? The works of Christ were faith works, love works, and these his people may do. But these works were chiefly on the bodies of men. The Pentecostal works—works on the soul—are greater, and these his people are to do. What says the Master to us? "Roll ye away the stone." "Loose him and let him go." So we have our part in the raising of men from the dead. Another privilege that comes from this union is life. "Because I live, ye shall live also." There is but one life between Christ and us. Let there be no confusion between his life and ours. Let ours be but a manifestation of his, so that we may be able to say, "I live, yet not I; it is Christ that liveth in me." So shall Christ actually live out his life in all its fulness and freedom, through his own redeemed though sinful people. There is another blessed privilege—the fellowship of his sufferings. We are to become absolute manifestations of Jesus in this world of sin and sorrow.

We have glanced at God's purpose in this union, at the process of it, and also at some of the privileges. What is our experience of it? Why is there not more blessed experience in the Church of God of this Divine union? How is there so little of it in each Christian? Is not our experience a feeble and fluctuating one because we have not a full Christ in us? The first thing, in order to increase this blessed experience, is to let Christ in all his fulness into our souls. He stands at the door and knocks. Let Him come in and fill each heart to-day. Let Him take possession of the whole being—every department of it, every chamber of it. Let Him answer the door of your lips; let Him look through the windows of your eyes; let Him control your will; let Him be Head in his own house. Be entirely at his disposal: that is the highest life to live. Be his, not knowing what He will do with you. Let Him bid you, and then do the thing He bids in his strength.

This also will help you to a greater experience of Union with Christ—not only let Him in, but let Him out. I believe the Church of Christ has been for many centuries suffering from the fearful disease of the congestion of Christ, if I may so speak. They have not given out Christ. If you want a deeper experience you must allow Him to break your alabaster box, so that the house may be filled with the odour of the ointment. You must have Christ, not asleep in the hinder part of the vessel (though you have given Him the only pillow), but you must have Him awake and at the helm, even in the commonest things of life. You think you can manage your little boat yourself, but Christ has fallen asleep on purpose to show you that you cannot do without Him, even in the small things of daily life. He does not hire out his attributes; He works his own work in you and me. It is not that we get hold of one of the attributes of God, and work that out; He comes into us and does the work Himself. It is not driving out the evil by the power of a new affection; I would rather say it is driving out by the presence a new inhabitant. Let Him out. Let Him be seen. Do not shrink from it. The Church of God believes in the blessed privileges of the Gospel, but she does not reveal them. She is afraid to testify of them. She keeps them to herself. But we must give them out. We must not only admit the Christ, and submit to the Christ, and commit to the Christ, but we must also transmit the Christ. Let Him be revealed.

I believe there is a great tidal wave breaking over the Church of God. The rivers of the water of life are rising higher. I have heard it said of fishermen, that when they hear the roar of a tidal wave they get their boats ready, and as soon as it comes they will be carried away ten miles to sea without an oar or a sail. So let us yield ourselves to God in holy trust and confidence. The sap shall rise from the Root into the branches, and every branch shall bear leaf and fruit to the glory of God. The Master has come, and calleth for us. Shall we not respond? Shall we not arise quickly, and go with Him?

> "For oh! the Master is so fair,
> His smile so sweet to banished men,
> That they who meet it unaware
> Can never rest on earth again.
> And they who see Him risen afar
> To God's right-hand to welcome them,
> Forgetful stand of home and land,
> Remembering fair Jerusalem."

Shall we not then obey his call? This is a blessed opportunity; do not let it slip. Covet earnestly the best gifts. In a house not far from here I have seen a picture that is painted on the roof of one of the rooms. It is so high that one can only see a confused vision of colour. But underneath it there is a table with a mirror inlaid; if you gaze down into it you can see the picture brought out distinctly; every feature and every colour is given back in beautiful reflection. Let each one of us be mirrors, to receive the blessed image of God, to be conformed to the image of Jesus Christ, and to give back his features and attributes, so that we can say, "It is no longer I that live, but Christ that liveth in me." So shall we be like a sixpence lost in a shilling; you cannot take it out, and yet it is there. It is the same image and the same inscription—Dei Gratia—"By the grace of God I am what I am." Nay, there is something more, and better than that, "By the grace of God I am what He is."

The Basis of the Believer's Security.

BY REV. DR. MONRO GIBSON.

"There is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus." "Whosoever abideth in Me sinneth not." "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." These three texts set before us comprehensively the security of the believer in Christ Jesus. The first guarantees peace with God; the second, purity of life; and the third, eternal joy. All are conditioned on Union with Christ, and that a union of an altogether unique and peculiar kind. No kind of personal union with which we are familiar could be described in this way. We may be united to one another in various ways, and by ties of different degrees of strength and tenderness, but we never speak of being in one another. We may be bound to one another by ties of association, of connection, or contact, but the relation indicated here is more intimate than any of these.

The first thing we have to do then, in order to deal with the great subject before us, is to try and understand as clearly as possible the nature of the relation on which our security is based.

The texts I have quoted are all from the latter half of the New Testament. This is no mere accident. Texts of the same kind might be quoted by the hundred between the one in Romans and the one in Revelation, but not in the earlier part of the New Testament. How is this? Why had our Lord so little to say about a matter so important? In the four Gospels the relation of Christ to his people is set forth in varied ways. He is the Teacher; they are disciples. He is the Master; they are servants. He is a Leader; they are followers: and so on. There are also tenderer relations referred to, "Whosoever doeth the will of my Father in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother." But you may read page after page of the Gospels without finding any reference to intimate relationship expressed by the preposition "in Christ Jesus." To this rule, however, there is one notable exception. I refer to our Lord's last words in the upper chamber, before his Passion, to be found in the wonderful discourse recorded by John. This word is brought into special prominence, but even here it comes in by way of anticipation of a coming time. The Saviour is looking forward to the time when He shall have left the world, and the Holy Spirit shall have come, and He says, "At that day ye shall know that I am in the Father, and ye in Me, and I in you." A most important utterance, though it seems to me it has received wonderfully little attention. The commentators, so far as I have noticed, pass it very lightly by, and I never remember to have seen or heard a sermon on it. Yet there it stands, the very first Scripture in which the great thought is introduced, of the Christian being in Christ.

From the way in which our Saviour introduces the idea, it is evident that the intimacy of this relation belongs to the dispensation of the Spirit. The words indicate a new way in which the presence of Christ was to be realised and experienced. As long as He was on the earth his presence with his people was manifested through sense. He was with them as they were with each other—sometimes together and sometimes apart. And his nearness or his distance made a very great difference to them. As we all know, they were strong in his presence; in his absence they were helpless and insecure. Now that his presence is to be entirely withdrawn, what would they do? No wonder that sorrow, and something akin to despair, filled their hearts at the prospect of the removal of that presence in which they had found safety and strength and joy. The substance of the comfort He gave them was just this: His presence was to be withdrawn in one sense and restored in another; withdrawn in an inferior degree, to be restored in a far better way; withdrawn in the flesh, to be restored in the Spirit; withdrawn as a human presence, to be restored as a Divine presence; withdrawn as a local and temporary presence, to be restored as an Omnipresence and a Perpetual presence.

Inasmuch as this is a matter of spiritual experience, known only to those who have received the Spirit, it is exceedingly difficult to speak of it in the words of ordinary speech. Hence the need of illustrations from the common things of life, in helping us to a right understanding of it. There is the use of the illustration of the vine and the branches, the appropriateness of which can be seen at a glance. The relation of the vine to the branches is not that of association merely, or of connection. The branch is not with the vine; it is in the vine. It lives the life of the vine. It is absolutely dependent upon the vital currents which come from the vine. So the life of the branch is not the branch's life; it is the life of the vine in the branch. So when our Lord says, "Abide in Me and I in you," He means, abide in Me as the branch abides in the vine, and as the life of the vine abides in the branches. An illustration frequently used by Paul is to the same effect. The hand is not with the body, but in the body. It lives only so long as it is in the body. So our position in Christ is like that of the hand in the body.

There is another illustration used by our Lord, which perhaps expresses more closely the point of view given by the words in which He introduced the subject at the first. It is suggested by the word "Spirit," which means breath, or air, and also by the simile used by our Lord in the passage: "The wind bloweth where it listeth. . . . so is everyone that is born of the Spirit." The nearest analogue in nature to the spiritual, as distinguished from the bodily presence, and to the Omnipresence as distinguished from the local presence, is air. It suggests the spiritual because we cannot see it. When it is still we cannot feel it; therefore it is possible to be surrounded by it and yet not to be at all conscious of its presence. Then, whither can we go from its presence? If we ascend to Alpine heights, or go into the deepest mines, it is there. If we take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, there shall we find it. Not only are we always in it, but it is in us. It is as necessary to our life that the air should be in us, as that we should be in it.

In all this we have a very helpful illustration of what the presence of Christ in his people is, under the dispensation of the Spirit. Now we know that He is in the Father. His human presence here on earth, as he veiled his glory in mortal flesh—that human presence is withdrawn from us. So far as our power to recognise it is concerned, it is merged in the Divine. Instead of a local and temporary presence, it is now an Omnipresence and a Perpetual presence. It is like this elemental air, which fills all things, and therefore the preposition with becomes inadequate to express the intimacy and interpenetration of the new relationship. There is one respect in which the simile fails. We know that the natural air is in us, and we in it, by necessity; those who are in Christ, and He in them, are there by choice.

Even with respect to this spiritual life, a parable may help us. God has given us many illustrations of spiritual things in the life of the lower creatures. Look at the history of the dragon-fly as an illustration of the point before us. It is born at the bottom of the water. For a considerable time it lives there, a narrow, low, greedy life; for this particular grub is said to be exceedingly voracious. It gropes about the submerged parts of aquatic plants, and lives on aquatic insects. It breathes the air only as other inhabitants of the water do, content to get out of the water such small quantities as manage to filter into it from above. So it lives in utter ignorance of any higher or better life, of any larger or more generous supply of the vital element by which it lives, until one day there comes a wondrous change. This cannot be better described than in the words of the Laureate:—

"To-day I saw the dragon-fly
Come from the wells where he did lie.

"An inner impulse rent the veil
Of his old husk: from head to tail
Came out clear plates of sapphire mail.

"He dried his wings: like gauze they grew:
Through crofts and pastures wet with dew
A living flash of light he flew."

The same animal as before: but, oh, how different the life! "Old things have passed away, behold all things are become new." And the change cannot be more comprehensively expressed than by saying that it now lives in a new element. Formerly it lived in the water; now it lives in the air. It is now dead to the water, but alive in the air. Its old grub life is gone; its new ethereal, heavenly life has begun. It is true that even when it lived under the water it could not get on without air; but it knew nothing about it: it simply took in so much water, and got the air out of it, which the water had absorbed.

And so, in the same way, even those that know not Christ, and have no experience of the power of his resurrection, are not independent of God whom Christ reveals. They are not conscious of his presence; and yet they could not live without Him; though they get from Him every breath they draw, they have no conscious relation to Him; in works they utterly deny Him,—are just as much strangers to Him as the grub living at the bottom of the muddy pool is a stranger to the glorious sunshine in the upper air. But when by faith we take hold of Christ, we are lifted out of the muddy pool, crucified with Him, buried with Him, and risen with Him. We are drawn from the waters of sin which have submerged us, and then we not only owe our life to God, as all along in a dumb unconscious way we have done, but now we know that we are in Him, living a new life in a new element; bathed in the sunlight of his presence, surrounded by the fresh breezes of his Holy Spirit—a life which is no longer bound by the narrow element of a little muddy pond, but which stretches out on all sides to the dim horizon of indefinite distance and possibility. When bounded at all it is by the everlasting hills, over which, as over all other, is spread the infinitude of God's glorious sunshine and sky.

And how different the temperature! There was, indeed, power to sustain life, such life as there was in the air which was mixed with the water, but there was no generous and genial warmth in it, and these gill-breathing animals are a cold-blooded race. But how different the upper air, air that is warmed by the rays of the glorious Sun of righteousness.

And the light! How different it is. Here again we have a favourite illustration, both of our Lord and his apostles. The light of the world, which seemed to go out on Calvary, has been rekindled in the heavens. He who descended into the lower parts of the earth has now ascended above earth's horizon, as the Sun of righteousness with healing in His wings. Have you observed the force of the beautiful metaphor which the prophet Malachi employs in the last words of the last Old Testament promise? What wings? They are the wings of the Holy Dove, the other Comforter whom He promised to send. How beautifully expressive is the sacred emblem. Christ Himself is the Sun, now exalted in the heavens. The Holy Spirit is the light, which streams perpetually from Him. The sun in the sky has its local presence in one particular place in the heavens, but light is by no means confined to that spot; with those wonderful wings it fills every bound of space, wherever its rays are not cut off by intervening obstacles. So, too, the Sun of Righteousness has His local habitation in the highest heavens, and yet is not confined to it; by his Holy Spirit He is present everywhere, except where He is shut out by barriers of wickedness erected against Him, or excluded by soul windows fast closed within, by those who love the darkness rather than the light.

"At that day shall ye know that I am in My Father." How do we know that the sun is shining in the heavens? Only by the light that streams down from it and reaches our eyes. In the same way "No man can say that Jesus is Lord, but by the Holy Ghost, or, as it is in the Revised Version, "No man can say Jesus is Lord, but in the Holy Spirit." "At that day ye shall know that I am in My Father." "And yet in Me." On a bright but chilly day in early spring you see your friend walking on the shady side of the street, as some will do; you call over to him, "Come and walk in the sun with me." The sun is many millions of miles away, yet you speak of being in it, and walking in it, when you are bathed in the light and warmth continually proceeding from it. In the same way are we in Christ, when we are surrounded by the gracious loving presence of his Holy Spirit. So "Ye in Me."

"And I in you." Not only must the light be around us, but in us, before we can be said to live in it and walk in it. A blind man is surrounded by the sunlight as any one else is, but he does not live in it; he does not walk in it; he cannot enjoy it. Why not? Simply because it is not in him. We must have eyes; and these eyes must be opened to receive the light into the body, so that we may live in it, and walk in it, and enjoy it. And in the same way must the eye of faith be opened to receive the heavenly light into the soul before we can even be aware of its presence; and it must be kept open in order that we may "walk in the light, as He is in the light." Christ must be in us by his Holy Spirit, in order that we may live in Him.

Such are some of the views given us in the Scripture, of the nature of that union with Christ in which is found our security, our strength, our fruitfulness, and our joy. And now it would be in order to show that in this union, and in it alone, are to be found our security from condemnation, from sin, from death, and from all fear of evil. But the subject is too large to be gone over in one single address. I therefore leave out these points, hoping the subject may be followed on these or other lines by those who come after. Meantime may the Lord fulfil to all of us these precious words of his: "At that day shall ye know" (not only be in Christ, but know it) "that I am in My Father, and ye in Me, and I in you." This is the only ground of our security, as of our strength, and fruitfulness, and joy.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The proceedings were opened with the singing of the hymn,

"And may I really tread
The palace of my King?"

Pastor Theodore Monod offered prayer. The 96th Psalm was read in alternate verses by the men and women present.

Judicial and Vital Union.

BY REV. CHARLES GRAHAM.

There are two senses in which the believer is one with Christ. He is one with Him judicially, and he is one with Him vitally. By his judicial union with Christ he has righteousness and perfect acceptance with God. By his vital union with Christ he has the life of God, and he has an inception of the holiness and the grace which qualifies him for fellowship with God and fits him for the service of God.

Pardon and righteousness always go together, and both are expressed in Scripture by one word —justification. In justification there are no degrees. The babe in Christ and the father in Christ are equally justified and equally accepted. When we believe in the Lord Jesus his death is attributed to us. God looks upon us as having died in our Surety, as having paid sin's penalty in the death of our adorable Representative. Therefore you read in the 6th Rom. "He that is dead," —or more properly, he that died,—that has died in his Surety, his Substitute, "is justified from sin." Standing in this judicial union with the Lord Jesus, we are invested with the righteousness of Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom and righteousness. David describes the blessedness of the man to whom the Lord imputeth righteousness, and righteousness without works, saying, "Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord imputeth not sin." David describes the righteousness of such a one, and he shows us that where God does not impute sin there he always imputes righteousness. The righteousness of Christ is the righteousness of God. "He (says Paul, in 2 Cor. v. 21) was made sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him." Why does he say, "the righteousness of God"? He had told us in the 9th verse that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself. Therefore the righteousness of Christ is the righteousness of God, and the righteousness of God is unto all and upon all them that believe. The Jew rejecting God's righteousness went about to establish his own righteousness, and so did not submit himself to the righteousness of God, for "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness, unto everyone that believeth."

On this subject of righteousness and acceptance with God on the ground of it, Scripture is most dogmatic and most exclusive. It unequivocally declares there is salvation in none other than the Lord Jesus, and if men reject that foundation-stone that God has laid in Zion, they exclude themselves from salvation, and from the kingdom of God. "There is none other name under heaven given amongst men whereby we must be saved." Therefore it is the Holy Scripture pronounces the awful sentence, "He that believeth not shall be condemned." The security of the believer in Jesus is just as complete as his acceptance. "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God who justifieth; who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea, rather, is risen again, who is at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us." The apostle in that connection shows us how God has acted on a plan, the plan which (we speak with reverence) He, speaking after the manner of men, formed for Himself from the beginning. Whom He foreknew them He foreordained, called, justified, glorified. Therefore the apostle asks, "If God be for us who can be against us?" All the powers of earth and hell marshalled against us cannot affect our standing in Christ, and therefore cannot affect our eternal security. But we have, first of all, to ascertain on this point that we are in Christ, that we have believed in Him as God's provision for us—the all-sufficient provision, but the only provision by which we can obtain acceptance with an infinitely righteous and holy God.

The believer is not only judicially one with Christ, but he is vitally one with Christ. "God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith He loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ—by grace are ye saved—and hath raised us together, and made us to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." Now we are representatively raised—representatively risen. We are in Christ before God, just as the twelve tribes were represented on the breastplate of the High-priest when he went into the Most Holy Place—into the presence of the Shekinah glory. But then our vital union with Christ is real. We are representatively in Him by resurrection, his resurrection; but we are vitally in Him here, while we live and walk upon the earth. The spirit that quickened the sacred body of Jesus in the tomb of Joseph has quickened every believer with the life of the Lord Jesus. We are one with Him in the unity of life.

We have four symbols given us in Holy Scripture of this union. In Ephes. v., the Apostle tells us that the union between Adam and Eve was the foreshadowing of the union between Christ and the Church. God cast Adam into a deep sleep, a supernatural sleep, the same as that into which He cast Abraham when the smoking furnace and burning lamp passed between the divided sacrifices; and out of the living substance of Adam God took Eve. When Eve was presented to Adam, he could say, "this is now bone of my bone and flesh of my flesh." Christ slept the sleep of death that we might receive quickening—life eternal from Him; and such is the union that Paul can say, "we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones." We are as truly one with Christ, as Eve was one with Adam, but in an inconceivably higher degree. They were one flesh, but he that is joined to the Lord is one spirit. It is a spiritual union. It is a union of life, but it is divine life. It is the life of Jesus in the believer.

We have another symbol of this in John xv. —the branches in the vine: "I am the vine, ye are the branches; abide in Me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself except it abide in the vine, no more can ye except ye abide in Me." Notice that our abiding is union. The union precedes the communion. The abiding is the abiding of faith and the obedience of faith. It is the abiding of union. Whatever arrests the vital sap flowing from the stem to the branch prevents its fruitfulness, and whatever interferes with our union with the Lord Jesus prevents that grace that comes from the union—from the fountain with which we are in vital connection as well as judicial connection.

We have another symbol. We have the head and the members, Jesus the Head in heaven; we his members here upon the earth. By one spirit are we all baptized into one body, and have been all made to drink into, or of, one spirit. Baptized into one body, united to the Head, we are united to the members. All the members of the natural body have one life. All the members of the spiritual body have one life and by baptism into the body—the baptism of the spirit—we are partakers, in common with all the members, of the one life of the glorified Head in heaven. Just as the head rules the body and our sensibility and motion come from it, so all spiritual potency, all spiritual perception, all spiritual sensibility, come from our Head in heaven ministered to us by the Holy Spirit. There is this failure in the symbol. The members of the natural body are not in immediate union with the head. The union is only intermediate, but every member of the mystical and living body of the Lord Jesus is in immediate union with the head, and so we can draw directly, and most directly from Him, and thus are qualified to minister one to another and to do and suffer the will of the Lord upon the earth.

The fourth symbol is an ideal one. It is the Apostle Peter who gives it to us. He travels beyond the province of nature and he imagines a symbol in order to illustrate this great truth. He imagines a foundation laid that possesses vitality, and then he looks upon stones that are dead in themselves touching that living foundation and becoming instinct with life. Jesus is the foundation-stone that the Father's hand has laid in Zion, but it is a living foundation, and we dead stones from the quarry of nature are brought by faith into contact with it. We are vitalised and we enter into the unity of the spiritual building—the temple that God is constructing to be the habitation of God and his Christ by the Spirit to all eternity. Just as Eve possessed the life of Adam, and, therefore, the nature of Adam, and as the branch possesses the nature of the stem and the root, and as the member possesses the nature of the head, and this quickened stone the nature of the living foundation, so every believer is a partaker of the Divine nature. The child partakes the nature of the parent. If we have the life of God and of Christ in us then we have the divine nature. We are new creations, and the speciality and the glory of that new creation is that it is a new creation in Christ Jesus, in union with Him, and so partaking of his nature. There is a mutual indwelling here—God in the believer and the believer in God. Just as we heard in the morning—we are in a vital atmosphere, and the vital atmosphere in us. It is a mutual indwelling—God dwelling in us, and Christ dwelling in us by the Spirit of God Himself, our element and our aliment—the element in which we live, the aliment which sustains us.

Now, it is easy to see that, arising from this there must be necessarily the security of the believer. Faith is the subjective, the experimental instrument, if I may so say. It is an awkward word, I admit, but it is what divines call the subjective instrument of our salvation. But there is an objective. There is an external instrumentality, that is, the Word of God. "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God which liveth and abideth." Just as the seed from which our new life is born lives and abides, so does the life which springs from it. We have said that we are quickened with the resurrection life of the Lord Jesus. He that is raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over Him. It cannot touch the Head. It cannot touch the members, because the life of the Head is the life of the members. Standing in the righteousness of God we are necessarily loved with a love (we speak it with reverence) with which God cannot love any other creature. Angels stand in the righteousness of their creation; believers stand in the righteousness of their redemption—that is, the righteousness of God. God sees us judicially and vitally in his Son. He loves us accordingly. He loves us with a love that we never appreciate in time and it is a question if we will ever fully appreciate it in eternity. That gives emphasis to the words of the Apostle—"What shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, persecution, peril, famine, sword, height, depth, angels, principalities, powers, things present, things to come, life, death, any other creature? "I am persuaded," says Paul, "they shall not be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." I do not think anything could give stronger emphasis to that statement than the perception of that love wherewith God has loved us.

There is one mistake that I often make and I dare say other believers have fallen into and that is to confound the standing and the state. Trusting in Jesus our standing is complete. It is as complete as the standing of Abraham, Isaiah, or Paul. It will never be more perfect in eternity than it is this moment for to all eternity we will stand on redemption and we stand on redemption now. Now that is the great objective reality; that is, Christ and his work external to me. Let me not mix up my own feelings, my failures, my deficiencies, with the work of Christ, and transfer my errors, mistakes, and failures to the foundation on which God builds me. Do you not see what a pernicious error it is, and what a dishonour to the Lord Jesus, to project upon Him my failures and deficiencies, and regard my standing as imperfect because my experiences and my state are imperfect. Let us look to God by his blessed Spirit to bring the state into harmony with the standing, but let us never confound the two things. Let us rejoice that God has placed us on his own eternal foundation, for nothing can move us from that basis on which He placed us except our own unbelief; and that can only do it in our apprehension if we are real believers in the Lord Jesus. Oh, that God in his infinite mercy may grant us to have that life that He has given to us by Jesus, more abundantly, even that rich abundance which He intends us to enjoy in Him.

Prayer was then offered, a hymn sung; various requests for prayer were read out by Mr. J. B. Mathieson.

A Sevenfold Union.

BY MR. RUSSELL HURDITCH.

After one or two prefatory remarks referring to the previous addresses of the day, he said: In the North of England a week or two since, I was asked by a well-known Christian what was the subject fixed for the next (this) Mildmay Conference. I replied that it was a very glorious subject—the one of Union with Christ. Said he, "Don't you think they might have a subject more practical and begin to confer on Christian honesty, Christian earnestness, and Christian work?" That remark was doubtless made in all sincerity, under the conviction that Christians, most of them at least, fall very short of carrying out in detail, in every day life, the glory of that character which they bear, if linked with the ever glorious Son of God. It is perfectly true that the professing Church fails to realise, fails to enter into, the true character God has imparted to her, fails to comprehend the glory wherewith she is called, fails in integrity, in truthfulness, in self-surrender, in downright consecration to God. But how is this? Is it not because she fails to comprehend the character of the calling wherewith she is called—the glory that God has attached to that calling, and the wondrous prospect that awaits the child of God? Failing to understand our true character, our true calling, the dignity and hope of that calling, we fail in detail practically to manifest, in everyday life, as we ought and as we would, the true character of the children of God, the Bride of Christ.

We have need to ask ourselves: Are we really believers in the great facts that have been brought under our notice in the Word of God, and through the ministry of his truth? Do we realise this union as God would have us? Do we realise that we are the millionaires we are, and not like beggars, or like those whose income is limited? Surely there is no standpoint, rightly, between downright Christianity and outspoken infidelity; but, some way or other, in the Church of God we try to make a middle path. If we did but enter into the great fact that before the cross, before creation, before the light shone upon this world, God had laid the great foundation in "the Covenant ordered in all things and sure," of that great union that we have been hearing about, and which it is my earnest prayer I may comprehend as I have never before done; then we should all pray that we and every child of God might enter into the glory, and dignity of the glory, that has secured such a union as has been the subject of our meditation to-day.

I ask you solemnly before God and in the light of heaven, as I charge my own soul with the question—Do you realise these Divine facts? Do you enter into the glory of such a union, or do you listen to this repetition of it as simply so much doctrine that is found in the Book, and not as facts in which you are intimately concerned, and with which you are identified, and will be throughout eternity? Ye are the sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty. As He has said, "I will dwell in them, and walk in them. They shall be my people, and I will be their God, saith the Lord." Have we ever risen to the dignity of this, or have we been retailing it out as the doctrine of the Book or the schools, but not as the doctrine that burns in our own souls, separating us from all that is unclean, and worldly, and grovelling, and that implies spiritual incapacity to enter into the magnificence of the stupendous facts that God has declared in his precious Word. These are truths, or they are mere fiction. They are the revelations of the Book or the mere dogmas of men. Have we not lived as if they were the latter, and not the former?

Look at the unevangelised world with its countless millions of perishing heathen, and ask yourselves, as I ask myself: Wherein is the secret, wherein is the cause for all this? Surely because the Church has failed to understand how she has been saved and called with a holy calling, and lifted from the dunghill and put down among the princes, brought from the far-off land and made nigh through the blood of Christ. We are in Christ; in Him, who created the heaven and the earth; in Him, the dwelling of his Father's heart, the brightest jewel in heaven, the only begotten of the Father; in Him, who said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and earth;" in Him who, to-day, lends glory to the throne on which He sits, fills heaven with the splendour of his person and the glory of his name, and shall yet fill earth with his praise and hell with his fear; in Him before whom all who people heaven to-night fall prostrate and cry, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain; unto Him be glory, and honour, and power, and might, and majesty, and dominion, for ever and for ever." We are in Christ, and if any man be in Christ, he is a new creation. Of such we read: "As He is so are we in this world," a string of monosyllables that God has given for the babes to wear as well as for the fathers in Christ to enter into. That is not all. We heard of the communion and intercommunion. We are in Christ and Christ in us. This is past comprehending, that the blessed Son of God should find an inheritance in us and live and dwell in us, and yet it is so. In Colossians i. we are reminded that it is "Christ in us the hope of glory."

This union is by covenant—"the covenant that is ordered in all things and sure." It is written in the documents of heaven. There have been covenants the documents recording which are mouldering in the cellars of the Parliament House or elsewhere; but this one is "ordered in all things and sure," and will never perish. Many a covenant made by the Cabinets of earth is now not worth the paper upon which it is written. Not so the covenant concerning his Church, and between God and his people. Because a covenant, we are secured by Him who has made that sure covenant that will never pass away. We are his by promise also. We read in Galatians: "In thy seed shall all nations of the earth be blessed," and that promise can never fail. We are his in the third place by oath. God has sealed his promise with an oath (Heb. vi.). The oath of God binds us to Him for ever. This union is also a union by gift. A Son was given, and the Eternal Father is given in the Son; we are given to Christ—a threefold gift. Christ given for us, the Holy Spirit given to us, and we given to Christ, and his by the gift of God. How sweetly did Jesus utter those words: "Thine they were, and thou gavest them me," —and we, beloved friends, who possess an interest in Christ, and have Christ in us —have we not received Him as God's free, spontaneous, gracious gift? We are his by blood. That union is secured by the precious blood of the Lamb: "Ye that were far off are made nigh by the blood of Christ;" and that blood sprinkled upon our consciences, that blood sprinkled upon our hearts. Do we realise that herein are our hearts sprinkled, that the blood of the precious sacrifice has been shed for us, and that we have been sheltered, bought, redeemed, and cleansed by it, and thus are united to Him who has died, the just for the unjust, to bring us to God? We are his by the Word of Truth, by which we have been begotten. Mr. Graham reminded you of this—"born again of the incorruptible seed which is the Word of God." We are, lastly, united to Him by the indwelling Spirit which He has given to us, the Holy Person, the third person in the ever-blessed Trinity, dwelling in us, as well as re-creating us, leading us to cry, "Abba"—dear Father.

Let me ask which of us realises this great fact —a sevenfold union? Ours by the covenant, by the promise, by the oath, by the gift, by the blood, by the Word of Truth, by the Holy Spirit. Surely here is the great mystery repeated over again of Him who dwelt in the bush, and yet the bush was not consumed. So in Christ we see the glory of the Godhead dwelling in the human body, yet the bush not consumed. So in us the glory of this divine life, of this indwelling Christ, of Him who dwells in us, shining away and burning away, yet the bush not consumed. Surely this is a union that can never be broken, and all this within the veil; a union brought about within the veil, not in the outer court of worshippers, but, the veil being rent, we come in. Do we know what it is so to live there, and so bathe in the light, and so rejoice in the glory, that we go forth as those whose faces have caught the light of that glory, as the face of Moses did, and shine out the light that shone in Him?

Then there is our security from judgment, from death, from the dominion of sin, and from the power of the devil. Do we realise this too? Security against all the attacks of the adversary because we are all in Christ. Security from the dominion of sin, as we let Christ reign in us. Security from all the power of death, so that, as a dear, dying saint at Willow-park said, "How beautiful it is to die!" Henry Bewley, dying in the same house, said, "It were worth thirty deaths to see my Lord. Lay nothing black upon my bed; white is the colour befitting a conqueror;" and yet that was the language of a saint, who, through even his long life, had some fear of death. The child of God is secure against all the shafts of death, for he can look it in the face and say, "Oh, death! where is thy sting! oh, grave! where is thy victory! Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Thus secure, we are also secured in entering into the magnificent possession of Christ, in the possession of the wealth of his resurrection, life, and vast possessions. Are they not expressed in that single "All things are yours, for ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's"? All this is secured in order that we may be possessors of this magnificent inheritance, and that we may now enter into all the glory and wealth of this inheritance to use it for God and his glory.

This security brings us peace, peace at the Mildmay Conference, peace amidst the perplexities of life, peace when the purse is empty and when otherwise all would be unrest, peace which leads us to rejoice even when there is no herd in the stall, when there are no figs upon the tree, and when the outward circumstances are dark. Security, too, in order to joy. How few joyful Christians there are! We seem to want to do as the little girl did in America, when she put out a spoon in the sun. She was asked why she had done that, and she replied, "I have just taken a spoonful of sunshine!" We ought to live in the sunshine of this Divine union.

That will lead us to see that this union is in order to Christian fruitfulness in service for Him. We should stir our souls to a more abiding communion, in order that by his grace we may be fit instruments for Him to use. You remember how Duncan Mathieson one day went to visit a dying Christian, and she said, as he asked her to give him a dying message, "Yes, I will give you a message; remember, that thou art a polished shaft, but remember that a breath can spoil you." We who are in all the enjoyment of this Divine life, and who are near and dear to God, may be easily spoiled for Christian fruitfulness.

Sin, if it is allowed, will check the outflow of the fulness that is in Christ, and render us unfit for the work. The little foxes spoil the grapes, and a dead fly causes the apothecaries' ointment to send forth an ill savour. Should we not then come with deep humility and full confession, asking that by God's mighty grace every blot may be erased from the epistle, and every breath taken from the polished shaft, and every little fox prevented from spoiling the grapes, and every fly destroyed that would cause the ointment of our Christian life to cast forth an ill savour. With three thousand men and women, sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty, filled with the Spirit, linked with the risen Saviour, in union with the Son of God—who shall tell what the outcome to London shall be, and what the outcome to the whole country shall be? China, India, Africa, and the islands of the sea shall feel the mighty outcome of a night and day's consideration of this wondrous subject, of which we shall never sound the depths.

THURSDAY MORNING, JUNE 28.

UNION WITH CHRIST, THE SECRET OF POWER.

A crowded gathering again assembled in the great hall, Mr. Blackwood presiding. The proceedings began with "a song of praise and holy worship"—

"Holy, Holy, Holy! Lord God Almighty!
Early in the morning our song shall rise to Thee."

Rev. H. Webb-Peploe led in prayer that the meditations of the day might carry a blessing with them to every soul.

CHAIRMAN'S REMARKS.

We begin this morning where we left off yesterday. Where was that? "Union with Christ the Ground of Security." If we were permitted to examine the foundation again, thank God, we have not got to lay it again. It is laid, thank God, for all eternity. Do we begin where we left off yesterday? Where did you leave off? Are you ready to begin on the ground of a perfect salvation in the Lord Jesus Christ? Can you start there this morning? May God bring us into vital union with Him as the ground of our security.

What a oneness that is! What a perfect union, like the breastplate upon the high priest's ephod (Ex. xxviii.), bound to it with chains of gold, bound to it with laces of blue, that it be not loosed from the ephod—type of the resurrection glory of our Great High Priest. What a union! We heard wonderful illustrations of it yesterday. Did you ever notice that one, borrowed from another of God's creatures, in Job xli. 15-17? "Shut up together, as with a close seal. One is so near to another that no air can come between them. They are joined one to another, they stick together that they cannot be sundered." What is true of the leviathan's scales is still more true of the union of the Lord Jesus Christ with his people. The one is so close to the other that no one can come between them. We cannot imagine a closer union than that.

And all this union for his glory, and for the profit, happiness and strength of his people. One friend, speaking this morning in the early prayer-meeting, reminded us of three things that resulted from the nearness of Joseph to his brethren. He said to all of them "Come near to me I pray you." One result was that he kissed them with the kisses of his mouth; another was that "his brethren then talked with him;" and the third result was that he abundantly satisfied all their needs. And what provision there is for us in Christ! When he gave some crumbs from his table to the Syrophenician woman, what were they? The casting out of a devil from her child! If the crumbs are so great, what must the whole loaf be? "Eat, oh friends," He says, "and drink, yea, drink abundantly." If we each get a good-sized crumb to-day, let us break it, so that we may share it with others.

What is the indispensable condition of this nearness and a participation in this provision of his house? Another friend, who spoke in one of the rooms this morning, reminded us that the great condition of answered prayer, and of communion with the Lord, is the determination to put away all evil. If we are to enter into this great secret of God, we must not be harbouring any secret thing of which He disapproves. Eliphaz said a true word to Job (chap. xv. 11), though perhaps it did no apply to Job: "Are the consolations of God small with thee? Is there any secret thing with thee? Why doth thine heart carry thee away? And what do thy eyes wink at?" If any of us are not enjoying fellowship with God, if we are not sitting under his shadow with great delight, if we are not experiencing the power of the Holy Ghost in our lives, is it because of indulged, connived at, allowed iniquity of any kind? I would remind you that there are reporters here: God bless them all; they are doing good work in helping to spread the good things of his house. But they are only reporting the words; there is One who reporteth the thoughts, the secret things. The record of these days' words will be wonderful, as we shall see it in type soon. What will the record of these thoughts be? May we not well say, "Search me, oh God, and know my thoughts; try me, and know my ways, and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." "The eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to show Himself strong"—not to show us strong, but to show Himself strong—"in behalf of them whose heart is perfect"—upright, sincere, honest—"towards Him."

Mr. Blackwood then read, without comment, a portion of Daniel x., and another hymn was sung. Before calling on Dr. Bonar to speak, the chairman reminded the audience that they could obtain an illuminated set of all the texts quoted on the programme, having reference to the subjects of the three days, at the Illumination room of the Conference Hall, for the small sum of sixpence.

Strength, and How to Get it.

BY DR. ANDREW BONAR.

There are two texts quoted here: "Strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus;" "Strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might." I would have liked better to have put the subject I am to speak about under the title of "the secret of strength." We have got into the way of using the word power with respect to particular kinds of work; but strength includes everything. This, then, is our subject.

Most of you may have seen a drawing of a tree. It just looks like a tree, with spreading branches; but if you look more carefully at the picture you find out that there is an object. In the way in which the tree is brought before you the branches are so drawn, that as you gaze carefully you discover the outline of a countenance—the countenance of General Washington. It reminds me that in the Old Testament we have one or two types that do not strike the eye of ordinary readers. But there they are, the exact outline of New Testament truth, though they do not at first present to us the thoughts they were intended to raise.

You know that grand and most magnificent type of atoning blood, when the men, women, and children in the camp of Israel, and even the Book of the Covenant, had been sprinkled with the blood of sacrifice. (Ex. xxiv.) What was the result? Every dark cloud disappeared. No voice of tempest now. The heaven is like an azure pavement—the throne from which the God of Israel looks down well pleased. That is among the types and yet it is often unnoticed.

There is a type of to-day's subject also, which I would put in the same class. Moses was directed by God to go up the hill, while Joshua fought in the valley. He was directed to take the rod with which he had wrought so many wonders, in his hand. There now you have a type. Look at the man, look at that Moses—the most beautiful man mentioned in the Bible; fair to God, often spoken of, a beautiful type of the Mediator. There is the old and venerable Moses, his face shining as he goes up the hill, with the rod of God in his hand. Now think of the weakness down below—Joshua engaged against Amalek. But Joshua can accomplish nothing unless the rod be lifted up. Then on the hill itself you have Moses quite weak. He is worn out, and his hands can hold the rod no longer, till Aaron and Hur help him, holding up his hands. Now the rod is pointed heavenwards. It is not said that Moses prayed all the time—that he uttered words of prayer. He but pointed to the place of power. He kept the eye of Israel looking heavenward, and the victory was won. Observe, he was not to take the rod and merely wave it over the host. At the Red Sea, he had done no more than that. This was to teach a further lesson. He was to have it in his hand and to keep it, pointing it upward to Him who should send the power for victory—teaching that there is a ladder of communication between God and poor, weak, helpless man below. You may carry the application of that type further; I simply suggest it.

Now in the Old Testament, what have we everywhere? We have New Testament truth under a veil. The Old Testament saints fed on the same truths as we do, but they had a scantier supply of it. They fed on the same Christ; they knew the same Holy Spirit; they were indwelt by the same Holy Spirit: but the measure of the blessing was scanty, till the great Shepherd offered Himself for the sheep. Then was fulfilled the word: "I have come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly,"—in overflowing streams. Still, the Old Testament truth was New Testament truth seen through the lattice. It was the same Beloved that they saw, but they did not see Him so fully as He was afterwards to be revealed, and as we see Him now. Hence the expressions used about power. You have a great deal said about communicating power, but you do not get at the secret of it altogether. I know no book that contains more remarkable truth about weakness and power, than that of the prophet Isaiah. I do not know of a passage that speaks of weakness, where the Lord is not, more remarkable than Isaiah x. 4. The Lord says, "Without Me they shall bow down under the prisoners, and they shall fall under the slain." As if He had said, "the very slain will get the mastery over you without Me." There is weakness indeed. There is another instance of power and weakness together in the words "Thou worm, Jacob." You know how easily the plough share could cut the worm in pieces, how easily a touch of the foot could crush it. Yet God says: "Fear not, thou worm Jacob . . behold I will make thee a new sharp threshing instrument, having teeth." The Lord takes up the weak worm in the palm of his hand. He clasps it, and it is the hand of Him that clasps the worm that threshes the mountains and beats them small, and makes the hills as chaff.

Here you have got glimpses of the truth, but the veil was not yet lifted up; and I think, occasionally, in times of crisis, the Lord gave his believing ones a remarkable insight into his truth. I suppose when Moses sang his song it was so. "One of you shall chase a thousand." Moses sang by the Spirit of the Lord; he got a glimpse of what the union with the Mighty One could accomplish. Asa went out facing a million of foes, and he cries unto the Lord for help. The last clause of his prayer is wonderful: "Let not man prevail against Thee" (2 Chron. xiv. 11). He sees the union between God and his people, and if the king of Ethiopia should prevail against Israel, it will be man prevailing against God. These Old Testament saints got such glimpses, but no more. It was so in the tenth chapter of Daniel. We cannot mistake who it was, walking on the site of the old Paradise, by the banks of the Hiddekel; He meets Daniel there, and raises him up and says, "Be strong, yea be strong." But He does not tell him how to become strong; He gives the strength as He speaks. So when He said to Joshua, "Only be thou strong and very courageous," He did not let him into the secret of this great strength. You will have noticed in the pages of Old Testament history, how men are made to prosper; it is expressed in this way: "The Lord was with Joseph;" and so he was a prosperous man. "The Lord was with David," and he behaved himself discreetly. "The Lord was with Jehoshophat," and he was established in his kingdom. There is no more said; the secret of power is not revealed. Not till the time when Emmanuel came could there be further light on this matter.

"Emmanuel, God with us"—here is the union of God and man. Then the world began to have a clearer knowledge of this mystery—the secret of strength, through union with the Mighty One. The time had then come for lifting something of the mist, and letting us see more clearly how the Lord uses his saints for giving forth more power. When Emmanuel had lived for us, had obeyed and magnified the law by his obedience for us; when He had died and risen for us; when He had gone up with his finished work into the Holy of Holies, and presented it to the Father: then was the hour come for the full discovery of things that had been under a veil in the Old Testament, but which were now to be seen without the veil. The Lord, you know, takes his own time. After ten days,—days of waiting in heaven as well as on earth—the Holy Spirit was sent down at Pentecost. It was in those days, and at that time, not that the union between Christ and the believer was formed—for it had been always the case; there are not two ways of saving sinners—but its secret was not known. God did not wish it to be clearly perceived until his Son had finished his work and was glorified in his acceptance with the Father.

Well, now, we have got this length. Here are we looking upon our Emmanuel, accepted of the Father, and having all power in heaven and on earth. Oh! what power is in the hands of Him to whom the believer is united. Only think of this one sentence from Heb. i. 3: "Upholding all things by the word of his power," that is, He who by Himself purged our sins. The writer had spoken of worlds before, and here he says: "Upholding ALL things." Astronomers are satisfied that they can catalogue some twenty millions of stars, and every star a world. Who holds them up, and keeps them in their orbit, undeviatingly? Who is it that from hour to hour, from moment to moment, maintains all this marvellous system? It is our Emmanuel. And He does it with perfect ease—"by the word of his power." Perfect calmness and perfect ease. What a view of the divinity of Christ! What a view of the infinite majesty and omnipotence of Him who is our Emmanuel! It is almost staggering to us to gaze long upon this sight. Can it be true that in any sense the believer is united to that Emmanuel? Yes, it is true; it is the secret revealed to us more fully in the New Testament.

You remember in the day when you were brought to Christ what took place. The Holy Spirit applied the Redemption purchased by Christ to you. He brought the blood that sprinkled you. He brought the robe of righteousness that clothed you. He applied the work of Christ to you, by working faith in you, and so uniting you to Christ. The moment that you had faith wrought in you was a wonderful one for you; Christ taking hold of you, and you taking hold of Christ, at one and the same moment—that was the divine arrangement. From that hour you were one who could not be separated from the Lord Jesus; you were one with Him, and He was one with you. Now He is the Head and you are a member; and He cannot lose one of his members of his body.

There is the union; there is nothing like it. You may lean upon anything in this world; yet you do not become united to it by leaning on it. But you cannot lean upon Christ without being united to Him for ever and for ever afterwards.

But, then, union with Christ is not the same thing altogether as that which we are speaking of—the secret of power. Union is the source of power; but I would make a difference between the source and the secret. Here is the source of it, our union to the Mighty One who upholds all the worlds by the word of his power; but how do we get the power that is in Him? That is a further question. In a general way, we would say it is by communion with Him. It is the Holy Spirit coming from Him into our souls that gives this strength that we are in search of. There is not a godly parent here to-day but wants strength for domestic and other duties. There is not a godly servant here but wants strength in order to serve well in the family. There is not a Sunday-school teacher to-day but wants strength for his work. There is not a pastor here, or an Evangelist, there is not a worker for Christ here, but wants strength. And it is to be got, in a general way, as I have said, by communion with Him to whom we are united.

But we must go a little into detail; for it is to be noticed that all who are united to Christ do not seem to have power for their relative duties. They are perhaps looking for power by which to affect the souls of those at a meeting, who sit by them, but they are not looking for strength for an everyday, holy walk. Do you look to Christ, friends, for strength to have mildness and sweetness in your daily intercourse with your fellow men? Think of the impression that Christ's walk cannot fail to make upon you, as you read of it in the Gospels. There is no effort—nothing of what we would call extravagance, in any sense. There is a gentle power of holiness, a delightful loving-kindness breathing around Him. We want that kind of power. It is not by lifting up the voice on high, and becoming very enthusiastic—that is not the way to have this power. There is a calmness in power, and this calmness, as in the case of Christ, comes from the fulness of the Spirit.

Then, in order that in communion with the Lord we may get power from Him, we need to know that He is the source of it, and we need to remember it. Paul prayed for the Ephesians, that they might "know the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power,"—according to the energy of the might of that power which raised Christ from the dead. That power is all for us, not only in our being raised together with Christ, but all along through life. Then remember it; call it to mind. We are very forgetful. Hence the need of those who remind us, Sabbath after Sabbath, of well-known truth. We who are in the ministry are sent to remind you. Perhaps you say when someone has preached, "Oh, I have heard all that so often!" The very thing that God was aware of, and therefore sent us to remind you of it—to stir up your pure hearts by way of remembrance. You know the grand source of this power. It may be that when you are contemplating Him, as Moses did when he pointed the rod up to the throne of God, while you are meditating on Him, you have touched Him and virtue has come out of Him to you. You have got strength almost before you were aware of it. "Beholding, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, we are changed into the same image, from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord." That applies to this theme; that is one way in which we get the power that we need.

There is another way. Remind the Lord that the fulness of his mediatorial work is for us. He has received gifts for men; remind Him of it. He likes to be reminded. "Put Me in remembrance," He says (Isaiah xliii. 26); when we have put Him in remembrance of the power, and our need of it, He is not slow to come to our help. Do we not often fail in putting Him in remembrance—in urging Him to give us this communication of power? Sometimes you do not need to do more than just remind Him. The four friends who brought the palsied man, just laid him there before the Master. There was a silent appeal, a looking to Him who had the power to heal. The eye of faith has a wonderful power with Christ. You know there is a fascination in the look of the eye. A simple weak believer's eye, looking to Christ, might be said to fascinate Him. He cannot help coming to strengthen you when you thus look up. Try that way in your quiet closet. Then give thanks when you have got strength. Always remember, the Lord never grudges us the supply. We are straitened only in ourselves.

But do not suppose that you will always know when you have got strength. You may rise from your knees and go out of your closet, just as feeble to your own consciousness as before. That is not a sign that the Lord has not given you strength. Moses' face shone—we are always coming back to these old types—it shone so that none in the camp could gaze upon it; and yet he did not know it all the time! So you may have got power and never be conscious of it. We have seen cases of this kind at revival seasons. The first revival that I remember seeing, in a very definite form, took place in this way. There had been much prayer preceding. One evening, not a large but a crowded meeting was closing in perfect quietness. All at once there came an uncommon silence over the meeting. Nobody could explain it, and the minister looked about him. One sobbed, then another sobbed; the tears ran down one cheek, and then another. God's power had come without an effort, and with perfect calmness. It was just the Mighty One, in his own way, answering the cry, and the yearning faith of his waiting ones.

A Fourfold View of Divine Power.

BY REV. NORMAN McNEILE.

Our subject is power. Power belongeth unto God; and that power is specially revealed to us in Christ Jesus, whom the Apostle emphatically calls "the power of God." He is the power of God to us, and in us, and by us. He is the power of God to us objectively; we receive that by the gift of faith. He is the power of God in us subjectively; we learn that by a blessed personal experience. He is the power of God by us effectually; we show that in a life of holy energy. It is to the middle of these three that our meditations are especially directed now: He is the power of God in us; or, joined to Him we have power. And He reveals Himself as a power in us in a fourfold way: First, with God; then over sin; then in the world; and lastly, before the whole universe.

He is the power with God. Our state without Him, before God, was one in which we either totally disregarded Him or had a servile fear towards Him. The first part of the history of Pharaoh is an example of the disregard: "Who is the Lord, that I should obey his voice to let Israel go? I know not the Lord, neither will I let Israel go" (Exod. v. 2). Here was disregard; later on we find servile fear, when he was made to feel that there was some reality in the Lord. The heathen now seem an instance of this fear. They have very great earnestnes towards their gods, but it is the earnestness of fear or of despair. But union with Christ brings us into an altogether new relation towards God. This union is a whole union; it is a union to Him as He is. It brings into our possession His whole work—His past, His present, His future work. In these three ways union with Christ gives us power towards God.

His past work is ours. See how grandly we find this in Colossians ii. 10, where it is said: "Ye are complete in Him who is the Head of all principality and power" (See three following verses). This union is so complete that God looks at Christ, as it were, and not at us. How wonderfully this was foretold in the words of Balak. Speaking by the power of God, he said: "He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath He seen perverseness in Israel" (Num. xxiii. 21). And yet Moses told that same people that they had been stiff-necked from the day he knew them. In themselves they were stiff-necked, but joined to God He did not see their iniquity, so close was the union. Hence we have the power of faith, that takes from us all fear. "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ." "We have boldness and access, with confidence, by the faith of Him."

But our union with Christ is not simply a union with Him in his past work; it is a union with Him now. "He ever liveth to make intercession for us." And it is by virtue of this union we have the power of prayer. He says, "Whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask anything in My name I will do it." "All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." This is how we, in a far greater sense than even Jacob of old, may have power with God and prevail. How beautifully this seems to be symbolised in Revelation viii. 3, where we read of the angel standing at the altar, to whom was given a golden censer having much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints. We are told that the smoke of the incense which came with the prayers of all saints ascended out of the angel's hand. This is a beautiful emblem of the way in which our prayers ascend and have power with God; it is because they go with the blessed incense of our great High-Priest.

But our union with Christ also looks forward. He is coming back. He is to return in glory; and our union shall only then be fully consummated. But we have the earnest of it now, and this it is that gives the power to praise. It is because of this that we can "in everything give thanks," because it is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning us. You remember that in the first chapter of Acts, we have an account of our Lord's ascension. When He had gone, two men stood by the gazing Apostles, and said, "Why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus who is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." And this seems to explain what would otherwise appear strange. In the account of the Ascension given in the Gospel by Luke, we are told that after the Lord was taken up "the disciples worshipped, returned to Jerusalem, and were continually in the Temple praising and blessing God." It would seem strange that they could praise when the Saviour had just left them, were it not for this assurance that they received, that He should so come in like manner as they had seen Him go. Here then, surely, is our great power to praise; it is in looking forward to His triumphant return.

But, secondly, we have power over sin. Here again the past, and present, and future of the Lord to whom we are united, is the secret of power. His past work, his grand Atonement accomplished upon the cross, enables us to put away sin. So we read in Romans vi.: "Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin." And again in Gal. ii. 20: "I am crucified with Christ." So close is the union, that when He was crucified and buried, our sins were put away for ever. This enables us to break off from a life of sin: "We are dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world." John writes: "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil."

But our union with Him does not end at the Cross. His resurrection is a grand and glorious power. Paul desires to "know Him, and the power of his Resurrection." What does this enable us to do? To "walk with Him in newness of life." It is only as we know Him, not merely as a Crucified Jesus, but as a Risen, Reigning Jesus, that we can walk in newness of life. "Christ being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over Him. In that He died, He died unto sin once, and in that He liveth, He liveth unto God. Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, and alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord." Again: "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God that worketh in you to will and to do of his good pleasure." What is that good pleasure? It is interesting to compare with this text another well-known one in Isaiah liii. where we read: "When Thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, He shall see his seed, He shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand." Here the pleasure of the Lord prospering in his hand follows upon the prolonging of his days. That is, the resurrection power of Jesus is required to fulfil the good pleasure of God; and it is in this resurrection power that He works in us "to will and to do his good pleasure."

But again, we look forward. Oh, how blessed to look forward to his glorious Return! It is with the eye fixed on that Return that we have power to advance in holiness. What says the Apostle? "Ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God; when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory. Mortify, therefore, your members which are upon the earth." Again we read: "It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear, we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is. Every man that hath this hope in Him" (that is, in Christ), "purifieth himself even as He is pure." And again: "The grace of God, which bringeth salvation to all, hath appeared, teaching us that, denying worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world, looking for the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour, Jesus Christ." So it is this hope that enables us to proceed in holiness of life.

It also gives another power—the power of suffering for Him. You remember how James and John, the sons of Zebedee, had made a request to our Lord for high places in his kingdom. Immediately the Saviour asked them: "Can ye drink of the cup that I drink of, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?" We shall have power to do it by looking forward to our grand place in the future Kingdom. "If we suffer we shall also reign with Him." This, then, is the power of suffering—the thought of future glory. Was it not so with the Lord Himself? We are told that, "for the joy that was set before Him, He endured the Cross, despising the shame."

But next we have power in the world. Here, as before, it seems to me, that the past, the present, and the future work of the Lord Jesus, according as we realise them in communion with Him, are the secrets of power. That past work it is that removes from us "the fear of man which bringeth a snare." "The Lord is on my side, I will not fear; what can man do unto me?" How do we know that the Lord is on our side, except through the grand work He has accomplished for us on the cross? "It is God that justifieth; who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea, rather, that is risen again. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?" So we thank God, "who always causeth us to triumph in Christ."

Then the present work of blessed unceasing care and intercession: it is this, I am convinced, that gives us, in the world, what nothing else can give us—the power to love. Oh, it is easy enough to love when you are loved in return. It is easy enough for husband and wife, who are devoted to one another, to have affection, and as it were to revel in their love for each other. It is easy to have a love of the family, or to love close friends, when that love is reciprocated. But how hard it is to do what the Saviour commands—to love your enemies, to bless them that curse you, to do good to them that hate you, to pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you. How can I do it? you ask; it is too much. Surely it is not, if united with Him who is still loving these people Himself, who is still yearning over them, who is actually for a time foregoing his glorious return to the kingdom on which He has set his heart. Why? Because He is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. He is waiting for them; He is yearning over them: you and I, in union with Him, shall have power to love them, and yearn over them too.

Was not this the power that was in Stephen when they were hurling the stones at him and beating the life out of him? See him with eyes uplifted, beholding Him with whom he was in such blessed union—Him who was standing at the right hand of God. What did Stephen say then? "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." How these words must have struck the ears of any who could have heard them! Surely they must have had hearts of steel who could have cast another stone, after such words as these. This is a power that can only be had by continually looking up to Christ in his risen, blessed, interceding love, which is also ours by virtue of this union with Him.

Then his return—oh, the thought of his return! This gives power to labour for Him. "If any man serve Me, let him follow Me; where I am there shall also My servant be." So, in his glory, He is coming back to give all to us. We are heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ. It is this that enables us to work for Him. This is the glorious mystery of which we have been reminded by our revered brother Dr. Bonar—that mystery which has been kept secret through ages and generations, but is now made manifest to his saints, to whom God would make known "what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles—Christ in you the hope of glory, whom we preach, whereunto I also labour, striving according to his working which worketh in me mightily." What says Peter? After he has been speaking of the new heavens which are to come, he says: "Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be, in all conversation and godliness; looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God." How hasting it? The Saviour said: "This Gospel of the Kingdom must first be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." This, then, is the great spur to all missionary work, at home and abroad. I cannot but think that much of our work, in these days of evangelistic effort, loses its power, because we do not refer as we ought to the glorious Second Coming. We want to have it brought more prominently forward—the glorious coming back of the Lord with all his saints, and then the triumph of his Church in Him.

Once more, for a few moments: this union is the secret of power before the whole universe. This is still future, still secret from the world. We are told that the earnest expectation of the creature—the creation—waiteth. What for? For the manifestation of the sons of God—the grand showing forth of the sons of God by union with Him, when his power shall raise them to be in his own likeness. The Saviour says: "Because I live ye shall live also." And though, no doubt, these words are partially fulfilled now, in the life we have in the Spirit, they wait their grand fulfilment in the time when He will come by his power and raise our bodies. "If the Spirit of Him who raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." The glorious resurrection of the body, in the likeness of Jesus, made perfect through his comeliness, which He will put upon us—this is the grandest manifestation of power by union with Him: that is yet to come. If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, then them that sleep in Jesus shall God bring with Him. That which has been sown in weakness shall be raised in power. Then we shall know, in a way that we could never have known before, that it is God that giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Then we shall not only be conquerors, but "more than conquerors," through Him that loved us.

"Then we shall, on the Mount of God,
Girt with the victor's sword,
Receive the honours which, with blood,
Were purchased by our Lord.
"Then from the echoing sky,
This song of joy shall ring:
'Oh, grave! where is thy victory?
Oh! death, where is thy sting?'"

Archdeacon PHILPOT, by request of the Chairman, said: We have just been listening to the blessed testimony of one whose outward eyes it has pleased God to close [Mr. McNeile], but whose inward eye seems to dwell with intense fervour and praise upon the Saviour whom he loves. I am asked to say one word upon a subject to which he alluded. He spoke of the angels, when the disciples stood watching the upward ascent of our Lord, who said to them: "Why stand ye gazing here? That same Saviour shall so come even as ye have seen Him go." On that subject I addressed many multitudes long before the greater number of you were born. I still grow in the conviction that the Blessed Saviour is not far distant. It may be that, old as I am [93], I may escape the dishonours of the grave and meet my Blessed Master in the air; and I ask you, my dear friends, if the roof of this hall were now to cleave asunder, and we should look up and see the Lord upon his glory-cloud, coming with his angels to this world again, what would be the effect upon each of our hearts? I entreat you, as an aged man, as an old brother, to look into your hearts and answer that question faithfully. What would be the effect of seeing your Lord now come back? Would you be amongst that blessed number who would look up with joy to behold their loved Master and Saviour drawing nigh? Or like the terror-stricken crowd who would call on the rocks to hide them, and the mountains to fall on them, and cover them from the sight of that Saviour whom they have neglected, or perhaps despised? God give us all grace to answer that question before the day comes.

Before the company dispersed, Mr. Blackwood made an earnest appeal on behalf of the Mildmay Missions, which, he said, required an expenditure of £12,000 a year; towards this there was only £100 of an assured income. It would not be difficult, he thought, for the many thousands who attended these gatherings, and received so much profit from them, to help very materially in providing for the necessities of the work. He appealed on its behalf with all the more freedom, as he himself had no personal interests to serve in doing so.

Mr. J. E. Matheson, superintendent of the Mission, said that in thinking of their present needs, they desired not to be unmindful of, or seem ungrateful for, many past mercies granted in respect to monetary matters. Through the kind generosity of two ladies, the mortgage of £2,400, which had been an encumbrance on the grounds since they were acquired, was now paid off. The beautiful hospital outside, with beds for thirty sick and suffering poor of the neighbourhood, was the gift, with all its furnishings and fittings, of another beloved lady. Through the generous kindness of a nobleman and his wife, the Missions have also a Convalescent Home at the seaside.

THURSDAY EVENING.

Power for Practical Godliness.

BY REV. EVAN HOPKINS.

In reopening our subject, it would be well if we were to begin with those truths which we all accept as fundamental. We all believe that the essential condition of spiritual power is union with Christ. The power of which we speak is power for practical godliness, personal holiness, and effective service. This power is not from ourselves. It is not something lying dormant within us, something that has been covered up, and only needs to be awakened, called forth, set free. It is Divine power. Originally, God put power into the hands of man, but he lost it at the Fall. Now God has put power in Christ. He does not give it to each one separately, but He has bestowed it on Christ. He has laid it up in his own Son. There it is eternally safe, and there it is for all the members of his Body.

But while it is there, and there for us, we cannot have it apart from vital union with Him. It is not a gift that He bestows, just as you can communicate flame to some combustible material, as, for instance, when you light one candle by another. It is power by virtue of union. You go into some large factory; you pass through the various departments; you see, in each, machinery at work; you see power accomplishing marvellous results, and you ask: What sets all these things in motion? Where is the source of all this activity? Then you are taken into the engine-house. There you see the centre of all the power that is put forth throughout the whole of the factory. The machinery in each department works, not by its own independent force, either generated in itself or derived from some other source, but by a force received moment by moment, and continuously, from the central engine. The essential condition for the communication of the power from the engine to the machinery is union. Break connection, and the power ceases. So that power which we must have if we are to live overcoming lives, must be Divine power, God's power—not something that has been lying latent, not something that we have derived from God, and which we have stored up in ourselves, but that which we are receiving, which comes to us as a ceaseless stream of energy from the central source of all spiritual life—the Lord Jesus Christ. There must be vital union with Him who is the power of God.

But then, you say, all believers are united to Christ. As we read, "He that is joined to the Lord is one spirit." The converse is also true, that "if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." A man may hold the doctrine of Christ, and yet may not be united to Christ. He cannot have the Spirit without the union. The Spirit is the essence of union and power. We are all united to Christ. This is true of all believers. This union is not a matter of attainment in holiness. Why, it is the starting point of all life. It is the beginning of all holiness. Life comes because we have received the Living One. Identified with Christ in his atoning death, we are united to Christ in his risen life. There is one Body and there is one Spirit, and the body bears the same name as the Head, the Christ. So also is the Christ. Christ is the Head of angels. Ah! but He is the Head of the Body of which every believer is a member, in a far higher sense than that. Angels form part of the company of heaven. Believers are all members of that Body which is the Bride of Christ. This union is no figure of speech; no mere dream—it is a reality, literally and spiritually.

Now, however, a difficulty arises: it is lack of power in those who are thus united of which we are now to speak. We have come here as believers, and we approach the subject as believers. Those of us who rejoice in the fact that we are in union with Christ, are willing to know what the secret of power is. How are we then to understand it? First of all, let us bear in mind that of no believer can it be said, He has no power. Power, in some measure, every child of God possesses. If there is life there is power. There may be life in the very lowest forms; but if there is life, even in the lowest forms, it will be accompanied by power however feeble. But now we speak of overcoming power, not only power which struggles and offers some resistance to sin, but which rises triumphantly over every wave of temptation; which is able effectually to withstand every assault of the Evil One, and courageously to give its witness to the grace, to the sufficiency, and to the faithfulness of God. Now we can understand how there may be union, and yet a lack of power in that sense. Look at a man whose arm is withered. There is union between the hand and the body, but for all practical purposes there is no power for action or service. There, then, is a figure of the condition of things between many a believer and the Head,—union but not power, and yet union is the secret of power.

This presses the subject still nearer home; and now we come to ask what are the hindrances that stand in the way of the manifestation of power in those who are in union with Christ. We are all subject to limitations,—limitations that are inseparable from our moral and physical constitution—hindrances that exist in the fact that we are finite creatures. God's power is infinite. Our capacity is limited. No amount of growth or spiritual progress can ever make our capacity equal to God's own fulness. There are therefore limitations, and God does not expect us to remove these, but the hindrance in that sense is really no hindrance, for let us remember there are other hindrances for which we are responsible. While our capacity can never become infinite, it is capable of endless increase—inconceivable expansion. "Unto him that believeth all things are possible." "That ye might be filled with all the fulness of God." The vessel I bring to be filled may be empty, or it may be partly occupied with something else. Worse than all, I may be keeping my hand over its mouth, and thus preventing the water from flowing in. In that case it is not a question of the sufficiency of supply, but of the condition of reception. Well, the provision is infinite, and the channel that connects the vessel with the fountain is established. There is union, and yet there may be sad hindrances to the inflowing stream of power. What are those hindrances? In order to discover what they are, and to have them removed, surely this is one object of our gatherings at this Conference.

It would not be difficult to show that, after all, the one great hindrance to our being filled with the power of God is unbelief. We limit God by our unbelief, and we also limit our capacity by unbelief. "Oh, but I am a believer. I do believe." Yes, of course you are a believer. But our faith may be at a very low ebb indeed. Our spiritual life may be suffering from a kind of moral paralysis. The avenues of our being, which bring us in contact with Christ, may become contracted, and the vessel into which the power is to flow may have been reduced to a very small capacity, all through the chilling influences of unbelief. If we are to be filled with the power of God, our faith must grow. Whatever increases our faith will increase our capacity, will open the avenues of our being to God, and the power will flow in.

There are three things that our faith needs: freedom, food, action. Faith needs freedom. Thoroughness liberates faith. If our eye is not single then our faith will be crippled, fettered, chained. "How can ye believe which receive honour one of another, and seek not the honour that cometh from God only." "I cannot trust Him," says one. Why not? Is He not trustworthy?" "Oh, yes, but I feel something is holding me back. I feel, when I try to believe, that my faith is bound hand and foot." Just so; and I want you to see that something is needed in order to snap the fetters; and what is it? Have you obeyed the words of the apostle in Romans xii., words addressed to believers, addressed it may be to people very much like yourselves? "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present yourselves." Consecration to God liberates faith, snaps asunder the fetters, and faith, like a bird, rises and spreads her wings.

But faith needs food. The Truth of God is the food of faith. In order to trust, faith must have something to trust to, and a person to trust in, and the Word of God unfolds these objects of faith. If my faith is starved it will soon begin to feed upon itself; that is to say, it will be occupied with its own activity. When faith begins to be occupied with itself instead of with the Lord, very soon it will lose its efficacy as a channel of receiving spiritual power. Oh! see to it then, that you are feeding on the Word of God, for the Word of God is the warrant of faith, and in proportion as you can grip the Word your faith will be strengthened, but you must not be occupied with your act of trusting.

Then faith needs action, for faith in action is obedience, and, of course, faith must carry out into practice that which it believes, just as with the body. Unless you give it exercise as well as food, of course the man will become indolent and slothful, and suffer from indigestion. I think there are many Christians who are suffering from spiritual indigestion. You must be continually putting into practice, carrying out, translating into active obedience, all you have received, and what you say you have fed upon. But do not fall into the other mistake. You may be very zealous and doing wonderful things in the way of aggressive work for the Lord, but remember if you do not feed your faith upon the Word, all this activity will come to an end, and you will find that you are worn-out—used up. Christ is the power; in every conceivable direction in which we feel our need the Lord Jesus Christ is our strength.

Now, let us look at this power in some of its various aspects. There is conquering power. The very first enemy that must be conquered, if we are to become conquerors, is self, and the only power that can conquer self is the power of God. Acknowledge it, submit to it, get under it.

If you would know what it is to be led triumphantly by Christ, you must first become his captive. He is always going forth as the Conqueror, and there are no conquerors but those who are included in his train—conquering, because conquered by Christ.

Have you noticed the reason that the Centurion gave why his word was power, and why he could rule? He does not say "because I am a man set over my soldiers," but "because I am a man under authority." There is the secret of reigning over sin. We must know what it is to get under the power of Christ, and controlled by the power of God; then shall we know what it is to reign. Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God. Get under the power of God. Oh! for more humility. Oh, that we might be brought to that point now. There are some of us who are afraid of being humbled. Remember, all discouragement comes from the devil. God never discourages, but He humbles us. Let Him take you and humble you. He will exalt you in due time.

But then there is sustaining power. We want that, too—power to rest on; power on which we can cast all our weight. There are some Christians who seem to be always struggling to keep themselves up. You see that man in the water. How he is struggling to keep himself from sinking. Now put him in a boat. Why, his struggling is over. Why? Because he has found a power that sustains him, and he rests upon it. So it is with the power of God. What we want is power to sustain us. "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and He will sustain thee."

And then there is protecting power—not only power over and under us, but power on every hand—encircled by the power of God. And so I like these words: "We are being guarded in the power of God"—a fortress of power. Let the enemy find you thus entrenched, he cannot touch you. Here is the secret of resistance. "Resist the devil." How? By having the power of God between your soul and the enemy.

Then, again, there is transforming power, the power that fills us with the Holy Spirit. Believers in this dispensation, if living up to their privileges, should be men and women whose abiding and habitual condition is this: full of the Holy Ghost; not simply having seasons in which they get special fillings, but always full of the Holy Ghost. You say, "I know what that means. I realise something of it but I find it does not continue." How about those secret leakages? If you take a vessel and fill it with water it will not continue long full, if there is a little leakage. Are we really thorough before God? May God's Holy Spirit come into every department of our being that we may see to this. God transforms by filling. He purifies by casting out all evil, and conforms us unto his image by taking possession of us. When the tabernacle was finished then God's presence filled it. The glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle. Now we are to be temples of the living God, but not temples without the glory.

The last thought is this: overcoming power for testimony before the world, for service, for aggressive work, and for suffering. When these conditions have been fulfilled we shall know what this means. It is the remark of a well-known preacher that the Church has in it a power which is adequate for the conquest of the world. Do you, do I, believe that God has already blessed us with all spiritual blessings, and bestowed the exceeding greatness of his power? When we understand the conditions, when we are willing to fall in with God's plan, and God's method of bringing it about, that is to say, when we are brought into complete subjection—getting under the power; when we cease from our own struggles and self-energy, and just rest in the Lord; when we are brought to know what it is to be in Divine keeping; when we are filled with the Holy Ghost power over us controlling us, power under us sustaining us, power around us protecting us, power filling us, transforming us—then shall we know what it is to go forth in power as witnesses for God. Then will the Church shine forth, "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners."

Triumphing In Christ.

BY REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES.

If the Chairman had announced that the next speaker would be the Apostle Paul, with what a flutter of high and holy expectation would your eyes be directed towards the platform. The next speaker will be the Apostle Paul, for if that great servant of God had been here, and had been asked to speak, I think he would have repeated what he wrote in Philippians iv. 13: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." I believe Paul would have made this great doctrine a matter of direct personal experience. It was not a theory or a speculation. He could do it; I can do it, and you can do it. God grant that we may all realise that now. In the Revised Version of the New Testament (which is probably the most accurate version that will ever be made) there is a slight but significant change in this verse, and it reads, "I can do all things in Him that strengtheneth me." A remarkable fact that the later copyists of the New Testament should have put the word Christ instead of the pronoun Him, and that the translators should have translated the Greek through instead of the word in. Both of these changes are significant. Why was the pronoun dropped and the name of our blessed Redeemer put in? Because, as the love of the Church grew cold, the thought of Christ was not so prominent in all minds as it was when the apostles wrote the Word. He might use the personal pronoun without the slightest fear of misconception. When St. Paul said, "I can do all things in Him," he knew there was nobody at Philippi who would fail to know whom he meant. But as the Church began to intrude herself between the people and the living personal Saviour, some of the later copyists thought there might be a mistake, and they were induced to give an explanation not originally deemed necessary. Thank God we do not need that explanation. If I had given you the Revised Version first, you would never have thought I was referring to any one except Christ.

And why did the translators say through Him, when St. Paul said in Him. Because at that period men were more impressed with the material work of Christ than the life-giving work of Christ. It is true that our strength is through Christ, but that is not what St. Paul says here. He says that our strength is in Christ, in union with Christ, as we have been hearing all day. This is the deeper, the more spiritual truth; and we are here especially to remind one another, not that Christ is our Example or Mediator, but that Christ is our Life. We may now venture to put with that strong statement of St. Paul, which was not a speculation, but a bit of his own personal experience, a corresponding saying of our Lord, which we find in John xv. 5, "Without Me"—or, as the margin has it, "Severed from Me;" or, as I think it is translated in the Revised Version, "Apart from Me ye can do nothing." Here, then, we have the two aspects of the great truth that cannot be too frequently impressed upon us. Paul says, "In union with Christ I can do everything." Christ himself says, "Without union with Me you can do nothing." Union with Christ is the sine quâ non, the essential condition of all spiritual strength or power.

And what is this union with Christ? There is a great mystery in it. There is, however, a passage of great importance (John xiv. 20): "At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in Me, and I in you." Ye shall know that there is a real living union between my Father and Me, and between Me and you. So that this union may exist in disciples who are not fully conscious of it, and the special object of our Conference is to impress us with the fact. To what day did our Saviour refer? To the day of the Holy Spirit, to that great day of Pentecost in which we are living, to the day when it was finally revealed to us that the Divine Agent of this real living union between Christ and all the saved is none other than the Blessed Spirit. I have always thought that there is no verse in the Word of God that throws so much light upon this mystery as a singular passage from 1 Cor., which Mr. Hopkins has quoted: "He that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit." What is it that makes the various members of my body into an organic unity? Why am I an individual? Why am I one? Because the whole of this body, from the crown of my head to the sole of my foot, is animated by the same human spirit. And why is it that the Church is absolutely one? Because the Living Human Head in heaven is full of the Spirit, and because the same Spirit fills the body on earth. It is because the same Spirit who is in Christ is also in us, that we are made one with Christ. As the result, the love that is in Christ is also in us; for, as we read in the Epistle to the Romans, the love of God hath been shed abroad in our hearts through the Holy Ghost which is given to us. It is a remarkable fact that in the varied passages in John's Gospel, where our Saviour refers to the union between the Christian and Himself, He always proceeds to refer to love (see John xiv. 20, 24; and again in xvii. 21, 26). This love of God shed abroad in our hearts is the warm blood of the Divine life, which we share with our risen and living Saviour because we are united to Him by the Holy Spirit.

It is of inconceivable importance that every Christian should understand that the power of which we speak is the power of a new life. "He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son hath not life." The power which unites the branch to the vine is a living power. The power that unites the body to the head is a living power. Hence the inconceivable folly of the man who tries to overcome sin in his own strength. We can see that mistake in a sinner. I remember a short time ago, when I was conducting a service at Oxford, a working man came into the meeting. He was the first penitent that night, and he has frequently told me since that he had been most honestly and sincerely trying for twenty years to be a true Christian; he had failed every day, and almost given up in despair, when he came by accident and heard this truth, that his failure was due to the fact that he had been trying to be a Christian in his own strength. He then went into the inquiry-room, trusted in Christ, was united with Christ, shared the life of Christ; from that day to this he has done what he could not do for twenty years before, although he was really trying, because he is now strong in the life which he shares with Christ. Are not we Christians in constant danger of making the same mistake? Are not some of us in danger of supposing that we can make ourselves better Christians, more Christlike Christians, by our own resolutions, and efforts, and rules, and discipline?

What does the vine branch want in order that it may produce foliage, blossom, and fruit? It wants life. What does the body want in order that it may discharge its duties without difficulty? It wants life. What do you and I want in order that we may do all that God has given us to do without difficulty and delay? We do not want resolutions, or efforts, or rules, or discipline. We want life, which may God in his mercy pour into us here and now. This great improvement in our religious life, which we all feel we need so much, will not be achieved by a variety of exercises, and prayers, and fastings, and meditations, and self-discipline, and sacraments. What we need is to receive more of this new life from Jesus Christ through the Holy Spirit. The vine wants sap and the body wants blood, and I want more of the life which is in Christ my Saviour. May Christ my Saviour give it to me now!

What is the practical condition of this? Surely it is that of absolute submission to Christ, of which we have already heard so much to-night. What is the condition of more vigorous life in the vine branch? That all the little channels of communication between the vine tree and the branch should be kept open, that they should not be filled with dirt or insect life, or be severed from the main trunk. Let all the pores and channels be kept open, and the living sap will flow. The rest, I was going to say, will follow as a matter of course. Our supreme need, therefore, is that we here and now be filled with the Spirit of God. Then everything else will follow.

Let us not imagine for a moment that our hearts are to be emptied of anything before they are filled. If all the shutters of this building were closed at noonday, and someone proposed to let out the darkness before letting in the light, what would you think of him? There is no way to let out the darkness except by letting in the light. Take away the shutter. And we shall never let out our selfishness, cowardice, and worldliness, but by opening our hearts that they may be filled with the Spirit of God; then the whole matter will be settled at once.

A few days ago I went with some friends on a pleasant excursion that we sometimes take on the river, to Newnham. As we were coming back we came to Sandford Lock. We got into the lock, and then we were in this predicament, that the water on the other side of the lock, between us and Oxford, was at a higher level than we were. What were we to do? Make desperate efforts to lift the boat out of the lock? Not at all. The only conceivable remedy was to ask the boy who kept the lock to turn the handle and open a sluice which permitted the water from the higher level to run to us until we were at that level. So we went on pleasantly and safely to Oxford. I think some Christians are in a lock. They have made a certain amount of progress at a lower level, and there they stop, because the rest of the water is at a higher level. How to get there! By resolute efforts and resolves on our part? No! There is no possible way except by opening these apertures in the lock-gates, and permitting the living water from the higher level to come gushing in. Oh, that it may come in, and rise so rapidly to the higher level, that the lock-gates may be thrust open, and we may pass on happily and pleasantly towards our great reward in heaven!

I made a remark which may have startled some. I said, if the branch is only filled with sap, all else will take care of itself. That, at any rate, is the law in the natural world. If the life is there, with the necessary conditions of life, it will evolve itself according to its law; and I believe the same great law of God holds true of the spiritual sphere. Do you not remember that once our Saviour pointed to the lilies of the field and said, "They toil not, neither do they spin"? They grow into beauty and into the accomplishment of their destiny without effort, because there is the life in them; and if we were full of this Divine life which is ours in Christ, and which is to some extent in us now, we should neither toil nor spin, and without effort we should make rapid progress, and bring forth much fruit. Christ says that his yoke is easy and his burden light, but there are some Christians who cannot say it. They find his yoke to be difficult and his burden to be heavy. Why? Some poor man who lives at Enfield has to come into the city every day, and he is in bad health. He finds it most difficult to carry along his carpet-bag from Liverpool-street to the West-end. He can scarcely do so at all. What would be the use of suggesting to him some ingenious method of transferring his bag from one shoulder, when tired, to the other? That poor man is in a very feeble state of health. The remedy for him is more health, more life, and then the bag will be no burden at all.

There is some Christian duty you have to discharge. It is like the heavy bag. You can scarcely do it, and the sinner, seeing your trouble, exclaims, "After all, the devil is right; it is a miserable thing to be a Christian." It is because you have not enough life. Come to Christ. Let Him pour life into you, and then you will have strength enough to discharge your duty.

John would have been glad, like Paul, to have given his experience here, and he might have expressed it in this way: "His commandments are not grievous." That was his experience. Can every Christian in this hall say, "It is my experience"? I am bound to say it was not always mine. I have sometimes found some of the commandments to be very grievous. Why? Because I hadn't the necessary strength to discharge them; or the life without which I could not do my whole duty. I have often been struck with the way in which the Spirit of God directs different minds simultaneously to the same passages of Scripture. I had selected for reading that very passage that the chairman read, Isaiah xl. It is so important that I venture again to call attention to it, at verse 28: "Hast thou not known? hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary?" That is the God for weary Londoners. "He giveth power to the faint." That exactly suits you, "and to them that have no might He increaseth strength." That describes me. I have no might at all, and every day of my life I feel it more and more. This is the remedy that goes to the root of the matter, and settles it all. "Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall." The most vigorous and most splendid strength must fail, but God's strength will never fail: "But they that wait upon the LORD shall renew their strength." It does not say they that make great efforts shall renew their strength, or their prayers shall renew their strength, or even attending a Mildmay Conference shall renew their strength, if they simply come in the spirit of intellectual curiosity. If they wait upon God they shall renew their strength—"they shall mount up with wings as eagles." Have you ever seen an eagle fly? You cannot judge of the eagle by seeing one shut up in a cage at the Zoological Gardens; nor can you judge of Christianity without the life of which I have been speaking. If you saw an eagle soaring majestically above this earth, that would give you an idea of the Christian when filled with the life of Christ, and of how then he can deaden everything in human nature that is earthly, sensual, devilish. God grant that in this sense we may all soar as the eagle above the smoke, and noise, and wickedness of London, and rejoice in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. "They shall run and not weary." What do you think of that? doing enthusiastic special Christian work without being weary. "They shall walk, and not faint." That is like my friend at Enfield, because they have waited upon God. Let us wait upon God, and let us seek our remedy for all our weakness, not in medicine, but in food.

I am reminded of my excellent grandmother, now in heaven. As her natural strength abated she had a supernatural and superstitious love of medicine, which is common to very many aged people. She was always doctoring herself, but it was of no use. She was merely exhausting the strength that was left. What she should have done, was to nourish her remaining strength by proper food, and it's of no use you or I taking medicine if we want food. Unlike my grandmother in the natural sense, we are able in the spiritual sense to renew our youth and never grow old. It seems to me that coming to the Mildmay Conference is like going to the seaside or to Switzerland: we don't want the quinine of ceremonies, but the oxygen of Divine love to be poured freely through our hearts by the great Spirit of God. Then, like Stephen, we shall be filled with grace and power. What do we want in order that these dry bones may live? No doctoring, no re-arrangement of the skeleton, but the breath of the Spirit of God. Oh, breath of the Spirit of God. Thou who art the Lord and Giver of life, fill us with life, and we shall, an exceeding great and living army, be able to say with Paul (and that is the experience I am always anxious to give in a Methodist class meeting), "I live, and yet not I, but Christ in me."

Let me remind you of the practical uses for which this power is given us. It is given not merely that we may enjoy it, least of all that we may waste it, but for high spiritual ends. I think the references to Scripture to-day ought not to be brought to a close without a further one—to the marvellous prayer in Ephesians i. 18. Paul there prays for the churches in a high state of grace. He prays (ver. 18) that they might know three things: first, the hope of his calling; secondly, the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints; and thirdly, the exceeding greatness of his power. We have been talking all day about the power, but we must not forget the other two things. The power is given in order that we might realise the hope of our calling, and the hope of his glory. Mr. Hopkins has explained how to live without sin even in London. We ought to give up the expectation of sinning, because we can do all things in Christ, who strengtheneth us. And not only so, but Paul prays that they may know the glory of His inheritance in the saints, which is the utter destruction of all sin and of all the works of the devil. We must be satisfied with nothing less than this, and we must look for this, and speedily.

Is every Christian who now listens to me so full of the grace of the Holy Spirit, and the love of Jesus Christ, that he hopes that by the power of God drunkenness will be utterly abolished? That is what we ought to hope. Does every Christian hope the demon of lust will be brought to an eternal end? How wicked we have been in neglecting this grave subject, and assuming that vice is a necessity. No man who is full of the life of Jesus Christ can believe that for one moment. Nothing is necessary but that the works of the devil shall be utterly destroyed, and every inch of this world shall belong to Jesus Christ. Therefore, in conclusion, let me say, if any Christian who now listens to me has never yet fully realised all the fulness of this living power which enables us to do anything and everything, let him realise it now. Every day of my life I am less and less afraid of the devil and the world, and only of myself. Martin Luther said the Pope he was afraid of was the pope in his own breast, and I can say the same. If God fills us with the Spirit and Life of Jesus Christ, no one will be able to stand before us. There will be enough power in this assembly, not only to shake London or England, but to shake the four corners of the earth. "I can do all things in Christ, who strengthens me." Then let us yield ourselves fully to Christ. Read Romans vi., x., xi.: "For in that He died, He died unto sin once: but in that He liveth, He liveth unto God. Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord." He died once for all. It was death—not half asleep, or sound asleep, or partially dead, but dead once for all. Once for all, reckon yourselves dead unto sin, on this beautiful summer night, positively dead unto sin—and act as though you were dead—not because you feel, but because you do not feel. Why should we be perpetually deluding our own souls by looking into our hearts instead of looking into our Bibles? Our hearts are all escaped convicts—their testimony is not worth hearing. They are "deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked." If this Book tells me that, by the power of Jesus Christ, I can live without sin in London, why should I believe the testimony of the devil, or of my own heart? I will believe Jesus Christ rather, and, once for all, reckon myself to be "dead unto sin and alive unto God."

FRIDAY MORNING, JUNE 29.

UNION WITH CHRIST, THE SOURCE OF FRUITFULNESS.

The meeting was opened with the singing of the hymn—

"All hail the Power of Jesus' Name," after which prayer was offered by Rev. George Everard, of Wolverhampton. A portion of Hosea x. and xiv. was read.

REMARKS BY MR. S. A. BLACKWOOD.

How far is it true of us that we have brought forth fruit unto ourselves and not unto God? It is a sad retrospect if such has been the case; and who is there among us looking back on the past years of Christian life who is not compelled to say, "This is true of me"? A friend suggested that I should mention it, and I do say it to the glory of God, that it is a solemn thing and yet a blessed thing for me to stand here this morning, the 27th anniversary of the day when in dear William Pennefather's church the light of God streamed into my soul in all its fulness. A marvellous thing!—but as I look back on those twenty-seven years,—oh! friends, you who look back on your life, your Christian life too, you can realise what I feel of failure, and of fruit-bearing unto self. It is good to look back. We have been praying for the broken and contrite hearts. The Lord grant this to everyone. What a wonder that He has kept us in his service! What a wonder He permits us to engage in it still!

I cannot help feeling that amidst all the joy, and brightness, and delight of this Conference, there must be many, as I said on the opening night of the prayer-meeting, not quite in tune with it, whose consciousness of past failures makes them feel almost hopeless as to future blessing. There may be many who have come up during the past two days of the feast, wanting, longing, desiring, dissatisfied, empty. The third day has come, and they almost feel as if they were going away as they came. I am sure there are sad, though there are many glad, faces here to-day. The world is clinging to them. They have made idols according to the goodness of their land. They do not look forward to the future with bright anticipations of union or of useful service. They are distracted. Their heart is not united to serve the Lord. "Is there any hope for us?" they say. Yes, mark what God says. Here, in this chapter in Hosea, is restoration promised, and the way prescribed and fruitfulness held out, even to those who have been living to themselves, as a glorious promise of the living God. God can turn the heart of the lowest and most unhappy among us into a home of praise to Him this morning.

Christian Fruitfulness.

BY REV. MARCUS RAINSFORD.

The key-note of our Conference is Vital Union with our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. God grant to you and to me that it may also be the key-stone of our Christianity. We have already had "Union with our Lord Jesus Christ, the Ground of our Security," and we have had "Union with our Lord Jesus Christ, the Secret of our Power." Now we are to consider "Union with our Lord Jesus Christ, the Source of our Fruitfulness." Our Lord is all and in all, you perceive. Mark the order, for it has been well chosen. Our God doth not accept fruitfulness for us till He has secured us in Christ, and until He has matured us in Christ. First security, then power, then fruitfulness.

There are three statements out of many in God's Word which at present fill my mind—God grant they may fill yours also. One you find in Colossians i. 19, and again it is repeated in another form in chapter ii. 10: "It pleased Jehovah [Father is not in the original—the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, it was the covenant three in one] that all fulness should dwell in Christ." God—Father, Son, and Holy Ghost—emptying themselves into a depositary, and that depositary the God-man, the Lord Jesus Christ. In the 2nd chapter, verse 10, it says, "In Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." Take another passage (John i. 16). "Of his fulness," the fulness of the Godhead bodily dwelling in the Son of God to be communicated to the mystical members of his mystical body, the branches of the living vine of which He is the root, "of his fulness have all we received." The poorest, meanest, most insignificant believer in this assembly now is spoken of here as much as Paul. "Of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace." The Spirit of God tells us what it means. Then we have a third passage (Eph. i.) where we have a description given of Christ the Lord in his resurrection power, and love, and glory. We are told in verses 22 and 23 that "He hath put all things under his feet, and gave Him to be the head over all things to the Church, which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all." All the fulness of the Godhead dwelling bodily in Him—He in us and we his fulness.

If you want to know who the we are, you have only to look at the connection. We who believe are called his Body, and his Church, and his Fulness. They are all synonymous terms. We who believe—not one or two of us, but all the family of the believing children of God. They are in some wondrous sense—the Spirit teach us the meaning of it!—the fulness of Him that filleth all in all. Not of course the source of his fulness. Not of course the cause of his fulness. His fulness is in the Godhead. The fulness of the sun in the heavens is not the light that it contains, and the warmth that it possesses, but the light that it communicates to all surrounding worlds, the beauty that it throws out upon the creation upon which it shines, the life that it imparts as the creature of God. The fulness of the ocean is not the depth of its waters, or the multitude of its waves; but in this sense it is the rain, and the dews, and the rivers, and the fountains, and the cataracts that both refresh and gladden creation. The fulness of the head is not that contained within itself in the natural body, but that which it ministers to all the members. So the fulness of the great Head is not that contained in Himself, but that which He communicates to all his mystical members. His fulness is the imparting of life, beauty, salvation, righteousness, wisdom, sanctification, and redemption, to all the members of his mystical body.

When the Tree of Life was down here amongst us in our own nature He bare all the fruit Himself; not one particle of fruit was there on the earth but that which was contained in Himself. He would have remained alone for ever, as He tells us, in his fulness of fruitfulness, but that He fell into the ground and died; then He did bring forth much fruit in his own resurrection glory. Now He is at the right hand of God. Now the roots of the Tree of Life are upon the Throne, and in the Throne, and in the God-man that sits upon the throne. But He bears all his fruit in his branches here below. Have the idea in your mind of a reversed tree. When He was here He bore all the fruit upward that we might be accepted in the Beloved; now from the throne He bends down as it were in his branches, and bears all his fruit in his branches here below. That fulness of the root above is expressed in the fulness and blessedness bestowed upon the branches here below.

Now mark this beautiful, this wondrous fact. From the time that in fact the Son of God, in whom all the fulness of the Godhead dwelleth, did unite Himself with us his people, from that time He had no other means, no other channels, and will never have, throughout eternity, other means or other channels to display the fulness in and by but the members that He has assumed, the branches which He, the great Husbandman, has grafted into Himself. With this fact in our minds, see what He says in John xv.: "I am the True Vine." There is not a word there about the branches. He is branches and all. Oh, that we took that view of Him! Just as the members of the body are called in 1 Cor. xii. Christ the head, Christ the head and the members—one Christ; so Christ is the Vine and the branches, the true Vine, the fairest Vine, tended by the most careful Husbandman, planted in the most fruitful place, to fill the face of the world with his glory.

He says, "Ye are the branches," because He wants to individualise them and us, that we may see for ourselves in his blessed words our position in the Vine. Adam was a vine, a noble vine planted in Paradise. What could God have given him that He did not give him? What could God do for him that He did not do? All mankind were grafted, as it were, into him. Still he was but a creature, and therefore he was not proof against Satan, against self, against sin. He fell, bringing all mankind down into ruin with him. But the Lord had a people amongst the men that were created in Adam, and the great Husbandman has now provided a new Root. Just think of the wealth of that Root, in personal union with his own Godhead, Jesus Christ, the Son of God. "Forasmuch, then, as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also Himself likewise took part of the same; that through death He might destroy him that had the power of death." "We have become dead to the law by the body of Christ, that we should be married to another, even to Him that was raised from the dead that we might bring forth fruit unto God" (Rom. viii. 4). We have done with old Adam. We are dead to the law, united to our old husband, we could not have been united to the Son of God. He rids us from our old connection by taking our nature; dying in our place He rids us of the old husband, and rising in the power of an endless life He sends the Holy Ghost from heaven to wed us to Himself, and tell us, "I in you, ye in Me, and both in God, that we may bring forth fruit unto God." You see your calling then, brethren (1 Cor. i. 30). "But of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom—even righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." Here is the wisdom that was hidden from ages and generations. He is "made unto us righteousness;" that settles all the sins of the past. He is "made unto us sanctification;" that secures us for the present. He is "made unto us redemption;" that seals us for the future.

Mark three stages there of fruitfulness, in John xv. In the second verse you have union with the Vine, union with the Son of God, without which there can be no fruitfulness; then you have purging, in order to more fruitfulness. We have been talking a good deal about letting Jesus in. I belong to an old school of divinity, which believes that Jesus must make room for Himself when He comes in, and I think it is done by the purging. He knows how to lop off the hindrances. You never heard of a vine pruning itself, did you? No, no, the husbandman's work is to prune the branches, to lop off the hindrances, that there may be more fruit, and this is only done for those in Christ, by Christ. First there is union, then purging. You remember the Old Testament account of the Tabernacle light, the candlestick, representing the Church illumined by the Spirit, and the Spirit dwelling in the Church. The Lord commanded a golden snuffers to be used, and only the priest might snuff the light; there was a golden snuff-dish provided to catch the dust. Oh! that He might snuff us with the divine golden snuffers; for depend upon it, that if there is to be fruit there must be purging. Many know by experience how much we owe to the purging we have received by the Husbandman.

But now, what is the fruit? This is the principal one—abiding in Christ. Some bring forth much fruit. "I in the Father,"—the fulness of the Godhead; "Ye in Me."—for safety; "I in you,"—for fruitfulness; "Ye abiding in Me,"—for the greatest amount of fruitfulness. The Lord says, "Abide in Me," That is his command, and it is very clear. How are we to do that? We abide where faith is satisfied, and where hope is satisfied, and where love is satisfied, and where we can rest—that is, where we can abide. We will never abide where faith, and hope, and love, are not satisfied, and where we cannot rest.

The first great means of abiding in the Lord is to know the glory, and the next is experience of yourself. You will find yourself such a miserable creature in the light of the eye of his countenance that you won't like to abide at home. The next is to remember when He says, "Abide with Me," it is "Abide in my love." Is not that a tempting place to go and abide in? "Abide in my mighty love, in my sacred love, in my forgiving love, in my restoring love, in my fruitful love, in my fruit-giving love. His command is, "Abide in Me."

The next word is no command to us—"and I in you." That is his part. It is no command to me when He says, "As my Father hath loved me, so have I loved you." It is merely a blessed revelation to my soul. "Let neither the shadows nor the opposition, nor the consciousness of your unworthiness, nor the humiliations to which you are exposed by self, the world, the flesh, and the devil, tempt you out of this resting-place. His love is yours, and neither life, nor death, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." Get that truth into your heart, and it will expel all your doubts.

A word about the branches abiding in the vine. Look at the natural vine. The branches abide in the vine at all seasons. You do not find them leaving the vine in the winter; you do not find them leaving the vine in the night. They abide in the vine in the winter when there are no buds, when there are no leaves, when there are no blossoms, when there is no fruit. But in the root, thank God, the fruit is always there, whether it be winter or summer with the soul. Do you not remember the words, "Let him that walketh in darkness and hath no light trust in the name of the Lord and stay himself upon his God." Do you not remember, "Although the fig-tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labour of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls: yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation."

Abide, brethren, by winter seasons and by dark seasons, in the Lord Jesus Christ. You look within and you can find nothing; you look around and find nothing, and like Job exclaim: "Behold, I go forward, but He is not there; and backward, but I cannot perceive Him: on the left hand, where He doth work, but I cannot behold Him: He hideth Himself on the right hand, that I cannot see Him." Trust him still. God has given his children a Christ in whom they are always safe and accepted. It is their ignorance of this that hinders their abiding and their usefulness.

You see in Nature how the branches have attached to them some little sprays that you can hardly see. What would the vine do without them? They are often its most fruitful part. The fruit does not grow upon the stem, but out of these little buds. The Lord make us so small that He may afford to make his own precious fruit to hang upon us. Wherever you be situated in the vine, you are wanted there. Just like the little members of the body—the weakest of them are wanted, and the head cannot do without the least. No more can the great root of the Tree of Life do without the smallest and meanest branch. All is wanted for the symmetry and beauty and fulness of the whole.

Observe, again, vines will not bear fruit in the cold; they will not bear fruit in the dark, they want light and heat. The Lord says there was a certain fig tree, and the man of the vineyard saw there was no fruit upon it. "Let it alone," said the great Husbandman, "till I dig about it and dung it." Oh! we need to have our earth-hold broken, lest there should be no possibility of fruit. We are so earth-bound that the light of heaven cannot penetrate, and the rains and dews of God cannot moisten us. So we are out in the cold, and cannot bring forth fruit to the praise and glory of his grace. The vine root requires all the branches in order to manifest its fulness; no one branch can show the fulness of the root. No one member of the mystical body of Christ can show forth the fulness of the Head. There is that in Christ which is adequate to all the fulness of the members of his mystical body; and I believe there is in the members of the mystical body of Christ that which is adequate to all the fulness of Christ. We want the sap to flow, in order that we may triumph in the Head, and to teach us our need of Him, that we may appreciate Him. The more fruit the Lord is pleased to hang upon us, the lower will the branches bend down in the presence of God.

"What Comes of It?"

BY PASTEUR THEODORE MONOD.

Our brother, Mr. Hopkins, told us last night that in a large factory the secret of power lies in the engine-house. Well, we will suppose that one of us goes into the engine-house and speaks to the man in charge of the engine. He asks first, "Is your engine secure? Does it stand well?" "Yes, it does. The masonry and the engine are almost one, and the engine rests in the foundations of the house." "Then, is it safe from explosion as far as one can make out?" "Oh, yes; in that respect it is secure also." Then you ask, "What is the power of your engine?" Let us say it is 2000 horse-power. Then you ask the man, "Well, what comes out of it. What comes out of this house?" He answers, "Do you want to know how much coal I use? Oh, heaps of coal! There it is." "Oh, no, I don't want to know that! I ask what comes out of it." "Oh, you want to hear the whistle! It has a tremendous whistle." You say, "My poor man, you must be deafened with the noise of your own whistle. I want to know what comes out of it." "Oh, nothing in particular! but it's a wonderful engine, very secure, very powerful, but it doesn't accomplish anything."

Now, this is the very point—fruitfulness. What comes out of it? I might follow out this illustration. I need not do it. It has been done often enough. We have plenty of men, whose foundation we know to be secure, and who know where the power comes from. They have a measure of power, but what are they doing? A friend told me last night (and I may as well tell you it was Mr. Hudson Taylor) of how he began his mission in China, and how he began to think and pray about it. Then said he, "Of course, it would never do to pray, and stop at praying." I made a note of that. No, it will never do to sing and stop at singing, and it will never do to trust and stop at trusting. There is something further to be done, and that is to bear fruit.

The Bible is full of that subject—fruit. Take the first book and the first chapter, and you read, "And God said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed after his kind, and the fruit of the tree yielding fruit after his kind, whose seed is in itself upon the earth." You take the last chapter and there, in Rev. xxii. you read, "In the midst of the street of it and on either side of the river was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits." Paradise is many a time associated with fruit. You take the book of the law, and there you find the fruit again, especially in one remarkable passage about the high priest and the garments of the high priest: "And beneath upon the hem of it thou shalt make pomegranates of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, round about the hem thereof; and bells of gold between them round about: a golden bell and a pomegranate, a golden bell and a pomegranate, upon the hem of the robe round about." (Lev. xxviii. 33, 34.) All round golden bells, but not only bells, and we might say somewhat as our children say:—

> Tinkle, tinkle, golden bell,
> Joyful sound, we love it well,
> Only let there always be
> Mellow fruit along with thee.

The golden bells you can have, but let there be the pomegranates.

Then in the first Psalm we have, "He shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth its fruit in his season." The same thought runs through the prophets. We heard a few minutes ago that most beautiful chapter, Hosea x., and we might find many another.

We open the New Testament, and find the greatest prophet, as Christ calls him, John the Baptist. What did He preach? "Bring forth fruits, therefore, worthy of repentance."

We have the words of the Lord Himself. I need not repeat them, though we cannot lay them too much to heart. You remember those words in John xv. and Luke xiii., about the fruitless tree that has been alluded to, "If it bear fruit well, and if not, then after that thou shalt cut it down." We have another remarkable word of Christ, "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof" (Matt. xxi.) That is what the Lord wants. Then again, after the Gospel the Epistles. Romans vii. 4 furnishes another illustration: "Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to Him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God." Then that wonderful verse in Galatians, "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, meekness, faith, temperance;" that is fruit. That is not talking, or wishing, or singing, or thinking. And again in Colossians i. 10, "That ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all well pleasing, being fruitful in every good work and increasing in the knowledge of God." Therefore the Bible is all about fruit from beginning to end. Christ says that we should know people not by their talking or feeling, but by their fruits: "By their fruits ye shall know them." Observe that wishing for fruit and speaking of fruit will not make up for lack of fruit; still less will lamentation about the fact that we are unfruitful.

I am afraid many Christians imagine that they have been bearing fruit when they should more truly have said, "I am a fruitless branch, I am a dry stick; I have neither bud nor blossom, nor fruit, nor anything." It is good to acknowledge it, if such is the fact; but it is better, and it is needful, that you should alter the fact, and by the grace of God become a fruit-bearing branch. Christ says, "So shall ye be" (not exalted Christians, but simply) "my disciples." It is by bearing fruit, and bearing much fruit, that we have the only evidence of being his disciples. Now Christ Himself is first of all the example of all fruitfulness. How did Christ bear fruit? He placed Himself in the position of a man. He said of Himself concerning the Father the very words He says of us as regards Himself, "Of Myself I can do nothing." And He said in John vi. 38, "I came from heaven not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me." And again, "As the Father hath sent Me and I live by the Father, so he that eateth Me, even he shall live by Me." Christ is the example of fruitfulness in the very manner in which He bore fruit. In the relation in which He stood to the Father, we also stand to the Father, through Him and in Him. He brings to us from the Father gathered up in Himself that fulness of life of which we have been told, and on which I need not dwell again.

Let me give you a very few words on the subject from a book which I suppose it is lawful not to advertise, but to quote from. It is called "Abide in Christ, the Blessed Life and Fellowship." The author is away in South Africa, and will not hear this, at least not to-day. I beg leave to recommend that little book to you. It says almost all that can be said on the subject in the simplest, strongest, soundest, deepest, and sweetest way. He says this: "Without the vine the branch can do nothing. In the vine it has its right place in the vineyard, its life and its fruitfulness. Without the branch [and this has been pointed out just now] the vine can also do nothing. The vine without the branches can bear no fruit. Such is the wonderful condescension of the grace of Jesus, that just as his people should depend upon Him, He has made Himself dependent upon them. Without his disciples He cannot dispense his blessings to the world."

There is another chapter entitled, "That you may bear much fruit:"—"We all know that fruit, by which men are refreshed and nourished, is the produce of the branch. The fruit is not for the branch, but for those who come to carry it away. As soon as the fruit is ready, the branch gives it off to commence its fresh work of beneficence, and anew prepare its work for another season." These are suggestive words, and fruitful words. If we thus abide in Christ, we shall be kept fruitful, full of love to God and man, strong and humble, ever ready, and therefore ever used. As Dr. Macdonald, of Leith, said three years ago, speaking of Robert M'Cheyne, "ever ready, and therefore ever used." If we would be ever ready and ever used, what have we to do? Abide in Christ.

There is one word that is often overlooked, I think, in that parable of the vine, if one may call it a parable. The whole of the natural world is just a great parable to make you understand things. Christ says, "I am the Vine, ye are the branches." Now why don't we read that verse simply as it stands? Christ does not say, "I wish I were the vine." It seems absurd, and almost blasphemous, to read it that way, or "I ought to be the Vine." But He says, "I am the Vine." And what next? "Ye are the branches. Well, if I am a branch, then I will be a branch. If I am a branch, I will live as a branch. I won't deny Him. I won't say to Christ, "Thou art the Vine, but I am not the branch," because He says, "I am the Vine, and ye are the branches." If He made Himself one with us, it was for the very purpose that through Him we should be made one with God, one in desire, one in purpose, one in power. He the Root, and we the fruit.

All these illustrations are good as far as they go, but they do not go far enough, and even when we speak of a vine or plant, that helps us as far as anything can help us, but we must go a little further. We are not simply plants, and we do not simply thrive as a plant does. God has made us in his image. God has given us thought and conviction and will and conscience, and He intends surely to live Himself, as it were, through us. But it must be our life coming from Him, as it is his life coming through us. That is to say, He has not come to destroy us; He has come to make us. He has come that each man should be truly himself, and should verily have a heart of his own. Else how could he love God as he is bidden to do, with all his heart and soul and mind and strength? All the life is Christ's to become ours. It is from Him and yet through us, and the Apostle sums it all up in these words, "I labour, striving according to his working, which worketh in him mightily." It is his working, and it is my striving and my labouring just because it is his working. Whether you can put it together or whether I can, and find a formula for it, that is no matter at all. We cannot find exactly the formula, but we must stand to this—that it is God's life, and that it is God's life through us. It is, "I can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth me." It is not, "I have nothing to do because Christ does it."

There was an old minister well known and respected in London, and a man of large influence, now gone to his rest, Samuel Martin. I only saw him once, and we were talking on this subject. He said, "I once received a visit from a young girl who was full of joy, and surely I would not damp her joy. She said 'I am so happy because Christ does everything for me.' I knew what she meant, but still I went on and said, 'Does He read your Bible for you?'" Now that puts it, I think, in a very definite form. He does it all, but He sets us doing it. He sets us working, and willing, and praying, and using the means He has supplied. Then He is the Husbandman, and He does (as we heard) the purging and the pruning; then it all comes to the ripe fruit.

Remember, we cannot make fruit; in fact, fruit is never made, it is grown. I read in a religious paper a while ago this word, that must have, of course, escaped accidentally from the writer or speaker. He said, "We are manufacturers of sinners into saints." Ah, I thought, manufacturer!—that must be a poor kind of saint, the manufactured saint. I remember Whitfield was one day met by a man staggering through the street, who came up to him, laughing, and said, in the presence of several bystanders, "Ah! Mr. Whitfield, I'm one of your converts." "Yes!" said Whitfield, "I thought as much; if you had been one of the Lord's converts you would not be in the state you are." No, you cannot manufacture saints, and you cannot manufacture fruit. To be sure we can manufacture fruit in one sense. In Paris we have manufactories where they make fruits in pasteboard prettier than the real fruit, I think; but somehow that fruit has no fragrance, it has no taste, it has no growth, most of all it has no seed. Our fruit must be fresh fruit if it is fruit at all. Some Christians, I'm afraid, hardly understand this. If you went to a greengrocer, and asked for strawberries, and he should call to a helper, "Give this gentleman some strawberries of 1881; that was a very good year," you would say, "I don't want those." Then he says, "There are a few left of 1882." "Oh, no, I don't want those." "Then these are all I have." I fancy you would go somewhere else for strawberries. So there are some Christians who are at peace and joy, and if you ask them they say, "Yes, I had peace in 1859," or "I had joy in 1876." "Oh, indeed! but where is your peace to-day, and where is your joy to-day?" They have no answer to give you.

You will say, "One may have preserved fruit." Yes, that is fruit too, if you like, but I do not think anyone who can get plums will accept prunes, or will accept raisins for grapes. Raisins have been grapes, but are grapes no longer. There is no life, no taste in them. Call them grapes if you will, but they are dried or preserved fruit. There is very much of that going now-a-days. People are going about with tin boxes full of old fruit. That is no good. We want to go into the orchard itself and pluck the fruit from the vine. Everybody likes that. The children like it, and even men of the world. Don't you think they can see the weakness? They are sick of talk. I think those of us who talk are the most sick of all of talking. We wish to have done talking; we wish to have more fruit. There is so much said and written, so many nice illustrations and sweet addresses, and spiritual sugar-plums, that we want something else. We feel the time has come when we must have something more to show, and that is, fruit.

The fruit is just summed up in two words—love of God and love to man—and the two must go together. That is the great want at this time. You have some very good people, as far as they go, who are full of philanthropy; and that is a word not to be despised. Oh, the Scripture speaks of the philanthropy of God (Tit. iii. 4.) Love to man is a great thing, but they do not say that they must begin by knowing the living, loving God. They go about and try to do something, but there is not much sap and life in it. There are others who speak so much about love to God, and from God, that they do not seem to care much for their fellow-men. One sees that it is high time that true spirituality and true philanthropy should meet in one. The second commandment, Christ says, is like unto the first. If we do not practise the second, and if we have not a heart for the woes of our fellow-men, and a helping hand to extend to them, whether they belong to our church or not, or to any church or not, we may well question whether we are fulfilling the first commandment. Because He says the second is like unto the first, and the only evidence our generation will find time to read, and that will convince it, is when it shall see the fruit growing in abundance where people call themselves Christians.

If not we will have people saying, "Union with Christ" is not your theme; you should talk (as one said) of Christian honesty. There was in a paper called Woman's Work a long article entitled "A Sad Charge." What do you think it was? I will read you one sentence. A lady said, "I was first led to consider the accuracy of this sad charge by a remark made by a lady—a most polite and honourable person, though very worldly. She was told of the conversion of an old friend, and remarked, "I am very glad she is so, because I think she will act out her religion in a different way from most people, whom it does not seem to me to make a bit more unselfish, better-tempered, or less ready to tell little fibs when it suits them." That is just what we want to get rid of. That is the reproach of Israel, that others can say, "With all your pure mystical notions, you are not more honest, straightforward, or self-denying, perhaps less so, than some of us." Just as truly as good seed bears fruit, and it takes good seed to bear fruit, just as truly good fruit bears seed. That is what we read in the book of Genesis, "fruit whose seed is in itself."

While thinking about this address, I thought I would look into some book on botany, just to see whether I could not find an idea. Sometimes we find the best things in that way, and I found this that astonished me, I confess. I am no botanist, but this gentleman, scientifically speaking, says the fruit and the seed are identical. What we call fruit, and what we eat, is just the wrapping round of the seed. Its shape and texture are greatly diversified. Its position, in relation to the seed, is greatly varied, but the real fruit is the seed. Then he goes on to say, "The seed is the terminal result of the plant. In the seed it all comes to a point, to an end. In the seed also it makes a new beginning." I am sorry this gentleman is an atheist, but he preached a good sermon there. The seed is the ultimate result. Was Stephen a fruit? Did he bear seed? Fruit he did bear, if only in the young man named Saul, in whom it soon began to be shown. Did Paul bear fruit? Did he bear seed? Yes. Is Mildmay a fruit and a seed? Yes. Our friend the Chairman was speaking of the good that came to him twenty-seven years ago; was it a fruit and a seed? Yes. I was told here of a little revival that began in a place; when the people were asked what made them request prayer on their behalf, they answered, "It is such and such a family that settled here a few months ago. They all seem so happy, and we want to be as they are." Was that family a fruit? Was it a seed? Yes.

Now we must come to this, that the only test of fruitfulness is life-giving power. That is what we have to learn. You have the seed first in the ground, the root, the stem, the branches, the flowers, the fruit, yes, and then you begin again. Another seed from the fruit, another plant, and so on. Just as the generations of man, father and son, the son in his turn being the father, and the genealogies going down, just so there must be with that fruit: Christ as the one Root, but out of that Root comes fruit. Each fruit must be found bearing fruit according to his kind, and we must have the converting power through the Holy Ghost. If we are in fellowship with the Holy Ghost, how can we but have that power? The Holy Ghost's purpose and mission is to awaken sinners and bring them to the Saviour. If we have fellowship with the Good Shepherd, how can we but seek for the lost sheep? If you remain in the field at rest whilst the Shepherd is going after the lost sheep, it is just as if you parted from Him. You let Him go on and you remain behind. Some are finding this out. I wish I had found it out much more than I have begun to do.

A friend was telling me that he had had more gladness in his ministry in three months than during the twelve previous years. How is that? Did not he know of the rest of faith? Yes, years ago. What then? Ah, now he knows the joy of bringing souls to the Lord, and now his strength and youth are renewed. It is a great thing, the rest of faith; but then there is the rest of obedience, there is the rest of service, the rest on the Saviour's promises when He says, "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, is he that loveth Me, and he that loveth Me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest Myself to him." That is true rest, that is full rest—in unity of purpose, in unity of work with the Lord. We first have to be converted; second, we have to be consecrated to God; then we have to be consumed, and then shall we be conquerors, and more than conquerors, and bring others with us to Him that loved us first.

[We must postpone the two closing addresses to our next issue.]

AFTERNOON GATHERINGS.

THE JEWISH QUESTION.

Earl CAVAN presided at a meeting on Wednesday afternoon, on this subject. After prayer and singing, he read Isa. lxii., and said the subject for consideration was a most precious and important one. The Jewish question has been settled long ago in the eternal purposes of God. He has chosen Israel to be his "peculiar people above all the nations of the earth." In Deut. xxviii. we see the terrible predictions of judgment described for their rejection of the Lord; history tells us how these things came to pass. We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that the Lord's people are being stirred up to consider God's purposes as regards the future of Israel. It behoves us, as followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, to press upon our hearts what is incumbent upon us in this matter. May we indeed be stirred up to give Him no rest till He establish his people a praise in the earth. We are on the eve of great events in this respect; and it may be the times of the Gentiles are closing in.

Dr. ANDREW BONAR followed by drawing attention to "God's purposes in the future," as described in Isa. xviii., linking with that prophetic chapter the two last verses of chapter xvii. Prefacing his remarks on this subject, he said there was scarcely a parish or hamlet in Scotland, where Christians met for prayer, but where you would hear petitions presented on behalf of Israel. This race has furnished philosophers and poets alike with a problem which they could not solve, though the subject was being better understood now than ever. The speaker considered the "land shadowing with wings" (see first verse of Isa. xviii.) to be the British nation. She stretches her wings far and near, even beyond the rivers of Cush; no nation sendeth ambassadors in swift ships over the seas like us. The command, moreover, is, "Go to a nation scattered and peeled," and what nation is scattered and peeled like the Jews? Search from pole to pole, and you will not find any other nation of whom this can be said, and yet remaining a nation still. The word peeled means insulted, or cruelly treated. It has been so with this nation, and that too by nations who consider themselves Christian. Then it says, "they are a people terrible from the beginning." To Egypt they were terrible; to the nations they encountered in the wilderness they were terrible; to the nations in the land, too, they were terrible; and above all, the most terrible event that ever took place in the universe was at Jerusalem, when Jesus died. And because of the nation's rejection of their King, how terrible the judgments that have befallen them. They have been trodden down, and the land has been spoiled by the rivers, i.e. peoples of invading nations. In verse 3 we read, "All inhabitants of the world" are to listen to the message of "an ensign on the mountains;" and in Romans we read of the return of Israel being the means of blessing to the nations. God Himself will do all this; He will not make haste; He lets things come to a crisis and then interferes, as it is said He will when the people come up to Jerusalem to encompass the saints. This very people, now scattered and peeled, shall be brought to the Lord for a present; that is to say, they themselves shall be a present to the Lord, and not only a presentation of themselves to the Lord, but also a present from themselves to Him. He shall then reign in Jerusalem gloriously, and the nations shall come and bow before his feet, and the time of righteousness and blessedness will then have come, and will cover the earth from pole to pole.

Rev. H. FRIEDLAENDER referred to the present work among the Jews, particularly in Palestine, and of the "duty of Christians" respecting it. He said it was a source of much encouragement to him, and many others engaged in Jewish work, to find some think it a Christian duty to remember the Lord's ancient people. That sympathy does not stand alone. Not only has God stirred up Christians in Europe, but He has prepared something in Palestine for Israel too. "He that scattered Israel will gather him," is the declaration of Scripture. It is not ours though to sit still and fold our arms. He used human means to scatter them, and He will use human means to gather them. Everything written has yet to be fulfilled concerning the future of Israel. The promises of God towards that nation are always bound up with the mercies of David. After the minute details of the return of the Jews in Jeremiah, there is the promise of the new covenant; they are both parts of the restoration. In the meantime, if there are those who return to Jerusalem, you must give them the Gospel, without it they cannot prosper, and when signs are seen of a prospect of this number increasing, you must give them the truth, that alone will help them effectually. Satan has bound almost every Jew in Jerusalem, so that he cannot even listen to the Gospel. God has now prepared a Jewish permit, and they are able to break away from Rabbinical authority, and over 1000 are ready to listen to the Gospel now, and many of them are ready to confess Christ. Our duty is to furnish them with the means of a livelihood. It is proposed to buy land, where they can live as tenants, under the scheme which has lately been projected and inaugurated—the colonisation scheme. Whatever may be the rights or wrongs of the Jewish persecution, there is no doubt their love of mercantile concerns has brought upon them much trouble, and though a people so ready to launch forth in mercantile pursuits, hundreds of these Jews do not desire to resume them. To us this was the visible hand of God to help them, and surely it is a duty laid upon the Church, and she cannot be true if she does not take up the work. The hundreds who have gathered at the Mission places during the past year are broken-hearted, and they are glad to have the comforts of the Gospel of Christ preached to them. Jews from Europe have come to persuade them to give up the Gospel, but they stand so far true. They prefer Palestine, their own land and the land of their fathers, to any other quarter of the globe. The vista to us seems to be as life from the dead. Our hope is that many of these will indeed be blessed, and we say unto you who are somewhat concerned in Israel's welfare, "Destroy it not, for a blessing is in it."

The Promises to the Fathers Confirmed by the Lord Jesus Christ.

BY REV. J. WILKINSON.

Having made kindly reference to Dr. Rev. Andrew Bonar's interest in Israel for many years, as manifested in his travels in the Holy Land more than forty years ago; to Mr. Friedlander's present work in Jerusalem, and to Mr. Freshman's recently commenced work among the 80,000 Jews of New York; Mr. WILKINSON said:—

"The Promises to the Fathers," beloved brethren, is our topic to-day. These promises are given in the first three or four verses in Genesis xii., the substance of which is this: God here promises that Abraham shall become the father of a numerous natural seed with earthly inheritance, typical of and ultimately instrumental in producing an innumerable spiritual seed with eternal inheritance. These are bare promises—unconditional promises—but let us bear in mind they are God's promises. Here is a channel and an instrumentality for blessing the world, for the last blessing given to man, woman, or child to the end of time will only be in fulfilment of the first promise given to father Abraham. These first promises bridge over the dispensation of law and the dispensation of the Church, and reach to the end of millennial times.

Now pass on to the fifteenth chapter of Genesis. Here God tests the faith of Abraham, and it bears the test. God wanted a type of his beloved Son miraculously born, for "in Isaac shall thy seed be called." So it is written in the sixth verse: "And he believed in the Lord, and he counted it to him for righteousness." This is the spiritual covenant under which all believers in Christ to the end of time became the children of Abraham, though uncircumcised in flesh. A little lower down in the same chapter, sacrifice is offered and accepted, and "in the same day the Lord made a covenant with Abraham." Here we have the promises ratified by covenant founded on accepted sacrifice, on the occasion of Abraham believing God about a promised Isaac.

Now pass on to the 22nd chapter of Genesis, where we get another beautiful type of the Lord Jesus Christ—the father giving up to death his beloved son. "Take now thy son, thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and offer him for a burnt offering." . . . "And the angel of the Lord called unto Abraham out of heaven the second time, and said: "By Myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son; that in blessing I will bless thee; . . and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed my voice." Here we have the promises confirmed by the solemn oath of God on the occasion of Abraham's obedience in offering Isaac, a type of the offering of God's beloved Son. Has it ever occurred to you why God, who cannot break a promise, should ever swear? God leaves Himself at liberty to change anything established only for a temporary purpose, but it must be without an oath. If once it be sworn to it can never be changed. For illustration, the Aaronic priesthood, and, by consequence, also the Levitical law, could be changed. Why? Because the Auronic priesthood was without an oath. But Christ hath an unchangeable priesthood. Why? Because God hath sworn and will not repent, "Thou art a priest for ever." And when our blessed Lord returns He will be a King and a Priest on his throne.

It would be profitable occupation to search out all the passages which refer to the oath of God. God has sworn that there shall never more be an universal flood of water. God has sworn by his holiness that He will not lie unto David. "His seed shall endure for ever, and his throne as the sun before me." Anyone who doubts that Christ will yet occupy David's throne believes that God can violate an oath.

God made two covenants with Abraham—the covenant of faith, made with him when he was about eighty-three years of age, and the national covenant in circumcision when he was ninety-nine—the former referred to in Gen. xv., and the latter in Gen. xvii.

In the covenant of faith Abraham is to be the father of all believers, and the heir of the world; and in millennial times "the father of many nations" (Rom. iv. 17). But in the national covenant he is to be only the "father of a great and mighty nation." Faith in Christ the condition of the former, and circumcision the condition of the latter.

The nationally elect were blessed with all temporal blessings in earthly places in Palestine; typical of the spiritually elect, blessed with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ.

What is the blessing promised to all nations through the seed of Abraham? We answer, the Gospel. This should not be called the Gospel dispensation, as distinguished from the millennial age, for we shall have no other Gospel in the millennium. This may be properly called the dispensation of the Church. In Galatians iii. 8, it is stated that "The Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the Gentiles through faith, preached before the Gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed."

Now let us see what is the meaning of the term seed of Abraham, through whom all nations are to be blessed. There are three distinct applications of the term: 1st. To Christ, Gal. iii. 16, "And to thy Seed, which is Christ." 2nd. All believers in Christ, Jew and Gentile, Gal. iii. 29, "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." 3rd. The natural descendants of the twelve tribes of Israel, Isaiah xli. 8, "But thou Israel art my servant, Jacob whom I have chosen, the seed of Abraham my friend."

All believers in Christ are children of Abraham by being linked to Abraham in the covenant of faith made with him several years before he was circumcised, and made with him in uncircumcision on purpose "that he might be the father of all them that believe though they be not circumcised, that righteousness might be imputed unto them also." But as Israel was a name given to Jacob after he was circumcised, a spiritual Israelite is simply a converted natural Israelite, but a child of Abraham by faith, is indifferently a believing Jew or a believing Gentile.

To whom, then, were these promises made? We answer, to the natural descendants of Abraham, to whom they were confirmed by oath. But do these promises stand good to the Jew to-day; and is the Jew instrumentally the world's hope? Certainly. God's purpose has been arranged in infinite wisdom, and his plan cannot be altered. "Brethren, I speak after the manner of men; though it be but a man's covenant, yet, if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth or addeth thereto."

The Divine promise to Abraham has been confirmed by the oath of God, so cannot be annulled. So the inspired letter to the Jews called the Epistle to the Hebrews, says, in chapter vi., "When God made promise to Abraham, because He could swear by no greater, He sware by Himself, saying, Surely blessing I will bless thee; . . . and so, after he had patiently endured, he obtained the promise [of Isaac]. For men verily swear by the greater: and an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife; wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath; that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us, might have strong consolation." The promises still belong to the Jewish people. The Apostle Peter, addressing the Jews as "men of Israel," in Acts iii. 12, charges them with killing the Prince of Life, but tells them, "Ye are the children of the prophets and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed."

But some have been ready to say these Jews have, by their conduct, forfeited their right to the promises, so that they have been annulled to the Jew and transferred to the Gentile. What is the charge against them? They are unbelievers. Paul meets that charge in Rom. iii.: "What if some were without faith? Shall their want of faith make of none effect the faithfulness of God? God forbid! yea, let God be found true, but every man a liar."

Well, but they have broken the law given them under the solemnities of Sinai.

Paul meets the charge in Gal. iii. 17: "Now this I say, a covenant confirmed beforehand by God, the law, which came four hundred and thirty years after, doth not disannul, so as to make the promise of none effect."

The promises have travelled safely down to Christ, who came to confirm them (see Rom. xv. 8). "Now I affirm that Jesus Christ was a Minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made to the fathers," the ultimate purpose of which is "that the Gentiles may glorify God for his mercy:" in other words, that the promises fulfilled to the natural seed of Abraham may be a blessing to all the Gentiles throughout the world.

All the promises are in Christ, yea, and amen. So the promises to Abraham are good to his seed to-day, for Paul says in Romans ix. 1, "I say the truth in Christ, I lie not; . . . . for I could wish that I myself were anathema from Christ for my brethren's sake . . . . who are Israelites." Who have lost all? No, by no means. "Whose is the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises." Nothing can be clearer: the promises are theirs. We must not spiritualise the promises and give them exclusively to the Church, whilst literalising the curses and giving them to the Jews. The Gentiles are not going to take the world for Christ. The Jews, as a nation, are simply shunted to a siding, to allow the express train to pass to pick up the Church; then Israel will come on the main line, stop at all the stations, and gather the world. Christian brethren, what share are you going to take in blessing that people destined to bless the world?

PRAYER FOR ISRAEL.

Immediately on the dispersion of this great gathering, a considerable number adjourned for prayer to No. 6. Several requests had been sent in, among which special mention was made of the work of Mr. Friedlaender in Jerusalem, and of Mr. Freshman in New York, also for the work among the Jews in London and the provinces, in Glasgow, &c. Prayer was made that God would overrule the troubles of Jews in Russia, Germany, Hungary, Roumania, and in other places, so that they may see that they have no earthly resting-place but Palestine; and no soul rest but in Christ; and that God would teach Gentile Christians to remember that He will bless those who bless Israel, and punish all that oppress Israel.

Mr. Freshman gave a brief but stirring account of his birth and parentage, of the conversion of his father (who had been a Hungarian Jewish rabbi), and of his own; also of his work in New York. His soul was evidently on fire with desire to preach to his nation that Jesus is the Christ.

M. Theodore Monod pointed out a few facts bearing upon the subject. In the first place, the general ignorance or indifference prevailing on the Continent, in regard to the future of Israel. Most of those who say anything on that question "spiritualise," as they think, all the prophecies referring to it, and regard those who expect the restoration of the Jews to the promised land as being scarcely more than half-converted Jews themselves. And yet, to take those prophecies in their obvious, literal meaning, not only makes the Scriptures much more intelligible and consistent, but helps to bring the whole scheme of salvation from the sphere of abstraction, or of mere thought and sentiment, into the sphere of fact, of action, of history, past, present, and future.

He also remarked, in reference to Mr. Freshman's statements about his personal history, that they likewise had, among the Christian worthies in France, the son of a Jewish Rabbi, M. Hirsch, brought to the truth through the daily meetings of M. Armand-Delille, and now one of the agents of the Mission Intérieure, which has, or has had, also in its service a converted priest (M. Fourneau), a converted freethinker (M. Réveillaud), with others, Protestants by birth, such as M. Vernier.

The Jews are attracting public notice in France, increasingly. In a late meeting of a society founded by them, for the study of their own history and literature, M. Rènan (of world-wide fame, as the embodiment of the highest culture and the most complete scepticism), spoke of the Old Testament, and of the intimate, organic relation between the Jewish and the Christian religion in terms, often most striking, true and beautiful, to some of which the most orthodox of Scotch Presbyterians might give their fullest assent.

Another interesting, though painful fact, is the existence of a newspaper, that has been published every week for the past two months, the only purpose of which is to promote hatred of the Jews, and to stir up the same spirit against them in France as exists so largely in Russia, in Germany, and has even lately appeared in Switzerland. The editor expresses the object of his paper in words such as these: "We want to make the place so hot for the Jews that they will have to take themselves off to Palestine."

This meeting was characterised by a most intense and fervent spirit of prayer for Israel, so that Mr. Friedlaender afterwards remarked privately, that nothing had encouraged him more than this evident interest created by the Spirit of God in the hearts of Christians as to his ancient people.

MISSIONARY MEETING.

On Thursday afternoon Mr. H. Grattan Guinness presided at this meeting in the large hall. After singing—

"The whole world was lost in the darkness of sin.
The light of the world is Jesus;"

Dr. Gould, of China, led in prayer, with thanksgiving to the Lord, for the spread of the Gospel in different parts of the world.

Mr. Guinness said we have to take into consideration the two greatest countries in the world, viz., China and Africa. The result of the appeal made at this Conference last year has been very encouraging. Several have been led to give themselves for the Lord's work abroad. One officer who was present on that occasion, and who from the years that have passed over his head, is unable to give himself for service among the heathen, has given his son for spreading the Gospel abroad. Two Christian ladies also, who were present, have given themselves for service in Palestine, and there they are to-day, seeking to spread the truth. Others are waiting to see the way open to do likewise. We want to be practical this afternoon, and may we not hope that there will be some real results from this meeting, so that in these last days many may go forth to spread the glad tidings of salvation among the nations? We live in days that are remarkable indeed. The world has never seen such days. Since the time of the Apostles missionary work has never ceased; but there never was such an age as the present. He who interposed on behalf of the countries we are met to consider, has and will sustain the Church, in spite of the power that would cripple her efforts. He is opening up many regions that have hitherto been entirely sealed. A century ago God poured out judgment upon Papal Europe, which was followed by a great revival. If we study the Bible and history we shall see that at the close of prophetic periods great revivals took place, and God called with a mighty voice to the people to come into the kingdom. We remember the glorious season of revival of 1859-60, on both sides of the Atlantic. Thus it is now; we have reached a termination, and God is making known his Truth on every side. Africa and China have both been opened by God. India was, at one time closed against the Gospel, but is now open. China was closed by political exclusiveness, and Central Africa by physical barriers; it was until lately an unexplored, untravelled, and unknown region. Protestant missionaries had no footing in China in the days of Morrison (1807). In his life he managed to get a grammar and dictionary, and to translate portions of Scripture amid many difficulties. He soon had to leave the country, however, and his work to others, and sail along the coast with these portions of the Scriptures, and as best he could send them into the country. The opium war then took place, which sin is England's darkest iniquity, but out of which the Lord brought good, even the opening of the country for the Gospel. Different societies have sent the Gospel there, the China Inland Mission among the number. The work of these agencies has gone on in a most remarkable manner; almost every province is penetrated, and thousands of souls have been brought to a knowledge of Christ.

Until 1860 Japan, too, was closed to the Gospel. Two or three centuries ago every missionary, such as they were, was expelled from the country, and every semblance of Christianity extirpated and prohibited. What is to be found there now? Why, a native church of three thousand members, and increasing in spiritual knowledge and in number. Eastern Africa was visited by Krapf, who, like Livingstone, died on his knees full of hope for th country that was on his heart, and forwhich hee gave his life. For thirty-three years he tramped Africa, and acquainted the world with its condition, the result of which is that it is penetrated on all sides. In reference to West Africa, there is now a chain of mission stations for 300 miles up the Congo, reaching beyond Stanley Pool. Ten faithful men have laid down their lives in connection with the Livingstone Inland Mission, but others have nobly taken their places. Above all, souls have been saved all along the line.

Mr. E. STOCK, one of the secretaries of the Church Missionary Society, spoke on behalf of that part of Africa where labourers were to be found working under the auspices of that section of the Church and as a substitute for Mr. Handford, who could not come. He said that just sixty years ago a boy in Germany saw the blank spaces on a map of Africa, and asked whether they were deserts. Few people could give him much information about them, so he went, when old enough, to see for himself; that missionary was Krapf. He found many difficulties, however, and it was not till he had taken sixty-four distinct voyages that he succeeded in landing at Zanzibar. Bereavement soon overtook him in the loss of his wife and baby. A good brother having joined him by the name of Redmond, they made interior journeys for six years, and eventually conceived and planned the possibility of a chain of stations right across Africa. The subject was advocated in England, but trials came and the mission failed; but the geographical discoveries made have resulted in spreading a knowledge of the country itself, and attention has consequently been called to the great need of evangelising. Hundreds of little children are being taught in the schools and hundreds of people are learning the Gospel, many of whom are truly converted, and have, as they call it in that country, "joined the Book." During the last nine years, the Church Missionary Society has sent out forty-seven missionaries; seven have died, others invalided, and there are now sixteen working in that land. [Two missionaries here stood up before the audience who are labouring 500 miles in the interior.] The question is often asked, How many converts have you? It is God alone who can make converts, said Mr. Stock. There are converts, thank God, but it is not wise to think too much of the number. The good Dr. Krapf used to go to a certain tree from which he could see vast plains, valleys, and mountains, with villages studded here and there; and there weep and pray for the spread of the Redeemer's Kingdom in Africa. Among the last of his expressions is to be found that which declares his conviction that though the idea of a chain of mission stations may be buried, like Lazarus it will rise again; and so it has. Many cannot go to distant lands, but all can do something towards sending the Gospel to them. We can talk of it to friends, and show that it is as interesting to us as the daily news in the political world. Indeed, it ought to be more so. We ought to take up the missionary reports of the mission field with eagerness, and endeavour to make a practical use of all the means in our power toward this end.

Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR gave a deeply interesting address on the need of China, and how the China Inland Mission had sought to meet that need during the last seventeen years. He said that the Chinese Empire contained half the heathen world, and one-tenth of the population of the globe, though the actual population at the present time is less than it was thirty years ago. The rebellion and opium trade have been the cause of this. Of the eighteen provinces the China Inland Mission has been able to enter seventeen with the Gospel. China is no longer a sealed country. God has opened these provinces, and has been with us in blessing souls. When they first landed, with a party of eighteen, at Shanghai, it was said they were only fit to be sent into the interior into an asylum; they do not say so now. The importance of the Chinese nation is worthy of consideration. No race in Asia has such a large amount of influence as China; they are the greatest colonisers in the world, and will produce effects in future days that are beyond our conception now. How important, then, that they should have the Gospel. There are records in China dating 250 years before the call of Abraham. Other nations have passed away, but China still exists. God has laid immense mineral treasure there, and we cannot believe it is to no purpose He has done so; there is doubtless a great future before them, and best of all the way is prepared for the Gospel, and already there are 22,000 communicants. The work is small in some places, but the Word has been scattered broadcast with most blessed results. One family of eight persons were brought to a knowledge of the Lord Jesus through reading the Gospel of Luke, sold them by a colporteur. Some of these poor souls travel hundreds of miles to speak to a missionary about salvation; there is indeed a great cry everywhere for the Word of Life. We need to pray very earnestly for the scattering of this seed. There are thirty different Societies who have labourers in China, but they are nearly all near the coast. There are five hundred thousand to every missionary, and in some parts only one missionary to a million, in others one to two millions. In Northern China there are a number of little companies of Christians waiting for teaching, and no one to help them. Why should not half this meeting go to China? Fifteen hundred missionaries are sadly wanted there if China is to be evangelised during the present generation. Surely it is not a great thing to ask for. The expense is not much. Many Christian gentlemen could, individually, afford to send the whole lot out; and many who have private means could go themselves at their own charges. Fifteen hundred could be provided from the Y.M.C. Associations in Great Britain, so from the Church of England, so from the Methodist, and other Societies of Christians. There are, as said before, thirty societies already in China. If these could supply fifty misionaries each, it would be done. Let us search our houses from attic to cellar, and see what we can find that we can dispense with for this purpose. What delight the Lord Jesus had when He stood beside the treasury and saw the widow put in her two mites! And does He not stand beside the treasury now? What do we put in? Surely we can all do something. We read that Jesus went into the villages, and when He saw the multitudes He had compassion on them, because they were as sheep having no shepherd. Then follows that wonderful passage: "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few," and a little further on, "He that loveth father or mother more than Me, is not worthy of Me."

How many from this Conference are going after Him to China? He did the will of his Father, and has told us what that will is, viz., "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." Two hundred out of the two hundred and fifty millions have not yet heard the Gospel. They have never had the chance of hearing it, and perhaps some present may only have the chance once of taking it to them.

After this most earnest appeal to all present to consider prayerfully their duty toward the heathen abroad, Rev. E. Piercy, a devoted missionary from China, engaged in prayer.

ENFIELD BLUE RIBBON MISSION.—Mr. George Blaicklock, of Hoxton Hall, has addressed six meetings in the large marquee, Enfield, in connection with the Enfield Blue Ribbon Mission. The Mission at Ponders' End is to be continued seven days longer, with Mr. Blaicklock as the conductor.

THE MISSIONARY PRAYER MEETING.

The Prayer Meeting for Foreign Missions, in room No. 6, which immediately followed the Missionary Meeting in the large hall, on Thursday afternoon, was a beautiful finish to the interesting facts stated in connection with efforts in Africa and China. Rev. Gilbert S. Karney presided, and after the hymn "To the work" had been sung, read part of Revelation xi.

The first topic, he said, before the meeting, ought to be one of praise. What would our fathers have given a hundred years ago to hear the things which we have heard to-day, that the Lord is touching the hearts of so many, and by his Spirit revealing the love of Christ to so many in connection with this work. Having rendered praise to God, they would take up the special subjects of prayer brought before them.

Capt. Chapman and another friend then led the meeting in prayer, in harmony with the suggestion which had been thrown out. The requests for prayer were next read by the Rev. Mr. Storrs. Among them were the following: For converts, especially for their steadfastness—Mr. Storrs remarking that if we placed ourselves in the position of missionaries we should offer this prayer very earnestly. For all who are thinking of devoting themselves to the missionary work, that God will bring them to the point, and those who hear the call will go forth, not sent by man but by God. That Christians to whom God has given this world's wealth, and opportunities of doing good, may increasingly expend their wealth on the Lord's work. For all candidates for missionary work. That the Lord will raise up one well qualified to take the work which lay upon the heart of the late Major Malan. For Madagascar and the native Christians there, that the Lord will overrule their sorrows for the extension of his kingdom; and for two young men now in training for missionary work, whose desire is to go to China, that they might be specially guided. Praise was offered for much blessing given, after thirty years' work in China, and more recently in Formosa, where a church has been gathered. Prayer was asked for a Mission in Bengal. Mr. Bishop, of the Church Missionary Society, asked that blessing may rest on the converts in South India, and especially upon the conference of native Christians which will be held there in September next, the conference to be after the model of Mildmay-park. For the ship Harmony, announced to sail last Saturday for Labrador; and for the 332 Moravian missionaries who are labouring among the most degraded races in the world. That the Lord would send many medical students into the missionary field, especially many medical missionaries. For the Medical Mission at Jaffa, that God will show his faithfulness to those dear servants of his who sent the request to be remembered. For a Christian brother, a Swede, who has gone to labour among the people at Port Said, especially in reference to the outbreak of cholera in that port. A child of God from Finland asked that God's blessing might rest upon his country. "We have encouragement," he wrote, "to wait for the answer." For Germany, that doors may be opened there. For a Christian married man to be found to share the burden of Miss de Broen's work in Paris That God's Word may be preached in France with increasing power. For the little island of St. Michael in the Azores, that many there may be turned from darkness to light. For the ladies in training for Zenana mission work at Mildmay, that the Lord Himself would prepare them for the important duties before them.

Mrs. Baxter and Miss Holland offered audible prayer at the close of the reading of the requests, and the meeting was concluded by singing the hymn, "Tell it out among the nations."

PARENTS' PRAYER-MEETING.

Of all the deeply interesting meetings held on Friday afternoon this was one of the most affecting. It was attended by many fathers and mothers whose hearts were burdened with special requests for loved ones still outside the fold, or glad with joy in the conversion of members of their families. The room was crowded so that an overflow meeting was conducted by Rev. J. Wilkinson. It was a joyful sight indeed to see so many gathered to seek their Heavenly Father's face for blessing on themselves, their children, and the different spheres of labour where some are called to serve the Lord, and others are surrounded with peculiar temptation and trial.

Rev. W. Haslam presided, and Capt. Chapman read a portion of Scripture from 1 Sam. i. and the requests for prayer and praise. After an opening and earnest prayer by the Chairman, the requests were read a few at a time, and borne up before the Lord by different brethren. It will interest many who were not present to see the kind of requests sent in, many of which were left over for future meetings. For "nine grown-up children," for "an only son of four, unconverted," for "four children," for "six unconverted boys, and praise for three girls saved," "a backsliding son of seventeen years," for "a boy of twelve who steals and lies," for "an officer in Egypt," praise for "five children brought in," "that six children may grow up in the service of the Lord," for "three motherless children."

A few moments were then spent in silent thanksgiving for those of the families present who, during the year, had gone to be with the Lord. The remembrance of these beloved ones brought tears to the eyes of many, but they were tears of sorrow mingled with joy. It was remarked that among the numerous requests read, none referred to drink—a sign that the use of intoxicants was decreasing. Mr. Haslam then closed with prayer, and the assembly sang:

"Glory, honour, praise, and power
Be unto the Lamb for ever."

[Other Afternoon Meetings will be reported in our next.]

THE CHANNEL FLEET.—Mr. J. Newnham, of H.M.S. Agincourt, thanks those friends who have sent him tracts. He has been able to distribute them in other ships also. Mr. Newnham speaks of encouraging services held at Gibraltar and Vigo, in connection with the Fleet, soldiers, and natives. He will be glad to receive further help in tracts. Address, J. Newnham, Band, H.M.S. Agincourt, Channel Fleet.

MISSIONARY CONFERENCE IN JAPAN.—On Monday, April 16, one hundred and eight missionaries assembled at Osaka, Japan, and continued in conference till Saturday afternoon, April 21. At least eighteen of the twenty missionary organisations at work in Japan were represented, about half the membership of the Conference being ladies. The meeting was of the most harmonious and spirited character, and left a deep impression on all who attended it. One of the most valuable of all the contributions was a history of Protestant Missions in Japan, prepared by Rev. Dr. Verbeck. The papers on the "Special Obstacles to the Reception of the Gospel in Japan," Buddhism, Chinese literature, materialistic literature and science, were considered very useful. All matters on education were fully discussed; at one session, relating to the education of women, several missionary ladies made interesting and valuable remarks. On the fourth day the subjects connected with the self-support of the native Church were discussed, and quite advanced views were the order of the day. On Friday "Medical Missions," "Missionary Furloughs," and the "Preparation of Christian Literature" were ventilated; and on Saturday, "Preaching to the Heathen" and "Sabbath-schools." All who attended were greatly refreshed, and one of the fruits of the Conference will no doubt be an increased degree of fraternity and good-will among a band of missionary workers already distinguished for brotherly love, and this will necessarily bring increased success in the spread of the Gospel in Japan.

THE GOSPEL IN GERMANY.

At the Central Noon Meeting, Aldersgate-street, on Tuesday week, Mr. Von Schluembach gave a lively account of his recent experiences in evangelistic work in Berlin and other parts of Germany. He said he had greatly desired during the past month for an opportunity of returning to London to offer thanksgiving to God in the midst of his people for all that he had been permitted to see. He had felt as if sent out as a missionary to his own people by the Noon Prayer-Meeting here and he came to lay before them some report of a year's labour. A prayer-meeting like this is a power in the universe; these prayers go up and "ring the bells of heaven," and answers come down in rich abundance. He greatly valued these daily remembrances before God, of himself and the work given him to do.

He would not say much of the hindrances he had to encounter. Infidelity had left him alone. His greatest hindrance had arisen from some Christian brethren who suffered from "the sickness of churchism." Some of these dear friends were not able to look over their own steeple. They had no other fault to find except that he could not formally join himself to their particular "church;" he preferred to stay in the Church of the Lord Jesus, and he loved to tell those in all the churches of the one who died for them on the Cross.

Coming to the bright side of the picture, Mr. Von Schluembach said that the reports of German scepticism had been overdrawn. There was no doubt much indifference among the masses of the people. When he went to Berlin he was greatly helped in starting out by one of the pastors there, a man who was standing as a very lighthouse in the midst of all the storms that rage around the Christian faith in that city. They were able to open little meetings in lager beer rooms and other places; he thanked God he could report many cases of thieves and notorious sinners who had been regenerated and were leading a new life. He did not hold after-meetings, but what was better still, his house was an after-meeting the whole day long. Eternity alone could reveal the tale of what it was his privilege to know in that way of the saving power of God. Every night, towards the close of the work, they had audiences of 1500 or 1800, and many seeking the Lord. The meetings were still going on with good success. The work of the newly established Y.M.C.A. was also progressing most favourably. There are more than 200 members in it now, while it commenced in April last with 60 only.

Mr. Von Schluembach told, in closing, of the services he had recently held in a place in the north of Germany where, according to the pastor who invited him, "nobody cared for Christianity, and the church was empty." They met in a large saloon holding 2000 people—a motley crowd. The selling of lager beer was going on in full blast, but soon through the mercy of the Lord in answer to prayer that was stopped, and the place was full every night with people listening to the Gospel. He hoped soon to return and evangelise in Central Germany.

SOUTH AFRICA.—Rev. Mr. Weitzecker is about to leave Rome to labour among the Basutos in South Africa. He is the first Waldensian missionary to the heathen, and is sent out by the French Society.

WOMEN'S MEDICAL MISSION.—On Monday, the 18th inst., a meeting was held at 24, Grosvenor-square, by the invitation of the Earl of Shaftesbury, in connection with the Women's Missionary Institute for the purpose of establishing a house of residence in the neighbourhood of the London School of Medicine for Women and Royal Free Hospital for the missionary medical students during the time they are studying at the said London School of Medicine and Royal Free Hospital. It is necessary to provide a sum of money, not less than £2,000, to purchase and furnish the above-mentioned residence. Lord Shaftesbury reiterated his own conviction that the project was a sound one, and hoped that the Christian public would readily subscribe the requisite amount asked for. Address, Mrs. Meredith, 73, South Lambeth-road, S.W.

TWO ITALIAN CITIES.

FLORENCE.

The Orphanage under the direction of Dr. Comandi, in the Via Aretina, is one of great promise and special interest in reference to the spread of the Gospel in Italy. I was present at the annual meeting which was held in May. All the orphans and the children of the Sunday-school, with their parents and many friends, assembled in the garden. Addresses were delivered, and a few of the children gave recitals in the graphic way that none but Italians are capable of. There are seventy-nine orphans in the institution—fed, housed, clad, educated, and taught a trade of their own selection. The whole work is carried on in the spirit of prayer and dependence upon God. Evangelistic services are conducted in the Memorial Church during the week and on Sundays. Dr. Comandi has recently opened a Mission church at Siena.

Another work of equal importance is the Medical Mission, superintended by Miss Roberts, a Russian lady, in the Piazza Cavour, where the poor Italians receive medical advice and medicines without charge, and hear the glad tidings of a full and free salvation. I was greatly pleased in visiting the Mission and finding a large assembly of the needy, who heartily joined in singing revival hymns.

There is a Bible stand close to the post-office and the Piazza della Signoria, where the martyr Savonarola was burnt at the stake in 1498. The ashes of the celebrated prior of S. Marco were thrown into the Arno, but the Word for which he and many others suffered is now being publicly sold midway between the stake and the river.

VENICE.

A short extract from the First Annual Report of the "Ragged Industrial School" in Venice will interest your readers:—

"An English lady, being unexpectedly detained in Venice during the winter of 1880-81, was earnestly wishing to know whether there were not some service here which she was intended to undertake, when, one Sunday morning in December, 1880, the Minister of the Italian Free Church here prayed for the poor, idle, hungry boys in the streets and the piazza, that the Lord would open a way of rescue for some of them from misery and vice. This prayer seemed a message to her, and instantly gave rise to the thought 'Could I not possibly start a Ragged-school where these poor boys might be fed, and taught some manual work, as well as to read and write, and, above all, where they might be led to know their Saviour?'

"Just at the same time a providential circumstance enabled her to set apart £25 for this purpose; and thus, after earnest prayer for guidance, the school was opened on March 10, 1881, in the premises of the Free Italian Church, under the very able directorship of Signor Beruatto, the minister of that church." There are twenty boys in the Home, many of whom are orphans.

The institution is managed with admirable method and economy. More spacious buildings are, however, urgently required. The printing press is at one end of the church. The dormitories are over-crowded, but scrupulously clean and tidy. On the occasion of my visit two boys were in the kitchen preparing the dinner, while others were sewing, making boots, and carving wood.

TESTIFYING IN HYDE PARK.—Being in Hyde-park on Sunday-week, I was greatly surprised to see a crowd of the fashionables, who usually sit in the park on Sunday afternoons, being addressed by a gentleman, fashionably dressed like themselves, on Gospel truth. He spoke in such forcible language on sin and salvation, as also two others who were with him, and sang so pathetically, that I venture to say there are few in London who would show such a high degree of moral courage in striving to impress eternal truth on such an audience. All honour be to such men, who determine to brave the fear of man, and to teach and preach Jesus Christ only, and Him crucified.—A.

SUMMER HOLIDAYS FOR POOR CHILDREN.

IN connection with the service for children which I have conducted at the Angell Town Institution, Brixton, for some years past, we have a "Benevolent Fund." This fund is supported by contributions given by the children from their pocket-money, the amount received each week being about £1. During the summer this money is spent in sending poor delicate children from different parts of London (mostly from Whitechapel) to the country, for a fortnight each. They are boarded out in cottages at a village in Hampshire, the cost of board being 5s. each per week. It is difficult to say whether the givers or receivers enjoy this plan the most. Workers among children are frequently asking, "How can we interest young people in Christian work?" This is certainly one means. Why could not such a system be carried out in connection with each church or chapel, by giving the children of the congregation some work to do in this way? Children living in the country could raise a fund, and invite poor children down from London for a fortnight to see their green fields and shady leaves.

The delight of poor London children at the prospect of such a holiday is beyond description, and is often the means of restoring health to many a poor feeble little one, who would otherwise languish and fade away into an early grave, for the want of a little self-denial and a little practical Christianity. I shall be glad to give particulars to any who wish for further information.

THE GOSPEL IN PARIS.

IN a recent letter to a friend, Mdme. Dalencourt, of the Mission Evangélique aux Femmes de la Classe Ouvrière, 33, Rue Denfert, Rochereau, Paris, writes:—

"I have been much cheered by receiving a box containing 1,500 copies of 'La Vie de notre Seigneur Jésus Christ,' sent by Mrs. Grimkè, of the Text-card Mission, from money collected for this special purpose. We immediately set to work distributing them, at the time when people are allowed to visit their sick friends in the hospitals, giving a copy to each person or group going in, with the words, 'Voici pour votre malade; ça la consolera.' Last Sunday our Bible-woman was at Necker; she had distributed for nearly an hour, when one of the nuns came out and said, 'Go away with your Protestant books; they are worse than pestilence, one sees them everywhere.' The woman replied quietly, 'It is the Life of Jesus Christ, who is neither a Protestant, nor a Romanist, but the Saviour.' The nun threatened to send for the director of the hospital, but Mdlle. E—— replied, 'Do not take that trouble; I have my licence for colportage, and he has no more right to prevent my giving away these books than he has to forbid those women who are on the public road to sell their oranges and sweets.' The 1,500 copies will not suffice for all our hospitals; therefore any amount of them would be welcomed, and, I believe, judiciously distributed."

The book alluded to is entirely in Bible words, and will send people to the study of the Holy Scriptures with greater zest and curiosity. It is not meant to supersede the Bible, but to lead on to it in those who as yet know nothing of even the first principles of the Gospel. Dr. and Mrs. Grimkè, Hilton Park, Prestwich, Manchester, have published large selections, both in English and French, and would gladly receive orders, and despatch any amount to France. Mdme. Dalencourt's letter proves her to be a most efficient agent in their distribution. Her mission in its varied branches is one of the quiet, hard-working sort, making little noise in the world, but of a kind wholly devoted to the spread of the Gospel, and owned of the Lord in much blessing.

VILLAGE WORK IN SOUTH INDIA.

DURING our tour last month we came to a village at which I received a most cordial welcome from one of the leading villagers. When he learned that I was a missionary his joy was unbounded; he took us to his house, and spread mats for us on the pial (i.e., raised bench) that we might sit down. My wife and children were with me. My good friend went and brought all his fellow-villagers, and I preached Christ to one of the most attentive audiences I have ever known. While I was talking to the men, my wife went and spoke to the women, who, though timid, had ventured out to see her and the babies. When our service was ended, my friend said, "It is just thirty-five years since a missionary was in our village. The missionary who used to visit us went away, and our Mission-school was closed. I am the only one alive now who was a scholar in that school." I found that he had read Luke's Gospel in the school when a boy, and knew the facts of Christ's life and death. He told me that he did not believe in heathenism, but in one God and in Jesus Christ. He never worshipped idols. I besought them all, earnestly, to renounce their idols, and from that day to begin to worship the true God. The men appeared deeply interested in the message and impressed with its truth, and promised to do so. They begged me to send an evangelist at once to teach them of Christ, and promised to give a house in their village in which he might live. This one fact showed that their prejudice was disarmed, for caste people, as a rule, will not suffer a Christian to live among them. My friend said to me as we came away, "Whether it be due to the punniam (merit) of that old missionary or yourself, or to Jesus Christ, I don't know, but now that you have come and told us these things, this is the happiest day of my life. Don't forget the evangelist!" So we said, "Salaam," and came away. Alas! I am unable to send the evangelist; but I do believe that God will somehow do it.

On another evening we went to a caste village, where the people said no missionary had ever been before. They had just come home from the fields, and the boys were driving in the goats and buffaloes for the night. I sat down on the grass at the end of the principal street, sang a Tamil lyric, and soon the people came round.

The men sat down around me, and listened without a word of interruption to a simple sermon.

When I finished, the spokesman of the group said, "Sir, we never heard these things before, but, as with the noise of a drum, our minds tell us they are all true. We want to know them and do them. But you are going away. Why can't you stay at least for a fortnight and tell us these things every day, then we should know them perfectly?" How I wished I could send them an evangelist! I promised to visit them again, as soon as I could. Some of them came a full mile with us in the glorious moonlight (for our Indian nights are glorious indeed), and we praised God all the way home.

During the same tour, I asked the Christians present at an evangelistic service to tell us what God had done for them, and what difference they found between the old and new faiths.

"Friends," said one, "I used to go to that side (to Mari's Temple), but now I come to this side. Do you want to know why I have changed? I will tell you. I went to that side and got nothing, I came to this side and found salvation. Now I worship the true God, and I know that Jesus Christ is my Saviour. When I was a heathen, if sickness came I was always afraid lest I should die, but now I have no fear. If I die I shall be in heaven. Wherever I am, at home or in the paddy field, God watches over me."

Village work needs no advocacy of mine. Christianity began among the villages 1800 years ago. Its first apostles were villagers. Christ was the great village Preacher. Bethany, Sychar, Nazareth, Capernaum, Bethsaida, Nain, places glorified by his footsteps, and echoing with his voice, were villages and towns such as lie thick on all sides of us here in India. Because our Master's command "Go ye out into the highways and hedges" is unrepealed, because God's spirit is working among our Indian villages, the conviction of my heart is that we must work there too.

It is hard but happy work, for God is with us. When readers of THE CHRISTIAN kneel and pray, let them not forget our village work in South India. G. M. COBBAN.

MR. AND MRS. MOUNTAIN IN SOUTH AFRICA.

MY DEAR SIR,—You will be glad to hear that God has opened for us a wide door in this Colony, both for Gospel and Blue Ribbon Army work. We have every reason for being thankful that God directed our way hither. We have had a Temperance Conference in Grahamstown as part of our work. The Hon. John Geard, M.L.C., presided, and it resulted in much good.

Of course our Gospel work forms the staple of our labour, but the Blue Ribbon Army is a most important adjunct to the preaching of the Gospel. I am sorry to say that the Army is as necessary here as in England. It is very successful. In Graaf-Reinet, a town of about 5,000 inhabitants, there are 1,400 who wear the ribbon. This, however, has been our most successful field of labour. In other places we have had much encouragement. We are at present labouring at Fort Beaufort, on our way to Lovedale, King William's Town and Queenstown. We expect to spend till next March in this portion of the Colony, going from place to place as the Lord directs, and then we propose proceeding to Natal, whence several invitations have reached us. After that we hope to return to Cape Town for a number of Missions in the Western Province. Should health permit, it is our purpose then to proceed to New Zealand in furtherance of our Evangelistic and Temperance work.

We ask the prayers of your numerous readers, that Mrs. Mountain and myself may be sustained by God's grace in this arduous, but blessed work.—Sincerely yours,

J. MOUNTAIN.

SWANLEY NEW ORPHAN HOMES.—These Homes will be opened on Friday afternoon, July 20, by their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales.

INVALID AND CONVALESCENT HOME, FINSBURY HOUSE AND COTTAGES, RAMSGATE.—The eighth annual report is now issued, with rules for patients and visitors. The number received during the year has been 230, more use being made of the Home in winter than formerly. The funds have steadily improved. The payments of patients cover the expenditure for housekeeping and attendance, but rent, &c., require further help from friends who sympathise with weakness and need. Address Miss Rosalind A. Hosking.

DUNDEE TENT MISSION.—We commenced our seventh year's operations on the evening of Sabbath, 27th May. Mr. Richard Hill conducted the services during the first month. He gave his closing address on Friday, 22nd June. The addresses, so clear and so full of gospel truth, were most attentively listened to, and the earnest, affectionate appeals of the preacher seemed to leave a deep impression on the audiences. Each evening anxious ones waited for conversation, and numbers went away professing to find peace by trusting in Jesus. We had Bible readings on Sabbath mornings which were well attended. P. W.

MIDSUMMER-DAY OPEN-AIR MEETINGS.—Mission-work in Five and Seven Dials.—Midsummer Sunday was a busy day for Christian workers in that district. Bands of Christian men and women were engaged all day in consecrated service for the Master, holding open-air services, distributing tracts, and speaking personally to many about their soul's salvation. The congregations were large and interesting, composed chiefly of the poor men who dwell in the district, and the attention was very marked. At the services held in the hall, Moor-street, many were seen taking an earnest part in praise and prayer who had been invited from the streets and lanes during the day.

TEN TESTIMONIES.

THE SPEZIA MISSION.

DEAR SIR,—The seventeenth anniversary of the Spezia Mission for Italy has terminated with the public testimony of ten other followers of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. These individual cases will call forth from your readers, as from us, praises to the God of Salvation.

A lad of twelve years, medallist at school, who since his conversion has made most remarkable progress in spiritual things. A young girl of fourteen years, who through the devotion of her brother has been led to Christ: one day, recently, she was found in her home crying bitterly because she had not, hitherto, publicly acknowledged her Saviour. A young tradesman, who was first led amongst the Evangelici through a strong conviction that the doctrines taught by the priests could not possibly be of God. Another young tradesman, who, in great bodily affliction, called upon God to convince him of the true religion in which he might find peace: that prayer was heard, and now this young man is engaged in declaring the truths of the Gospel to his relatives, one of whom is a Romish abbot.

A farm labourer, whose power in prayer is a beautiful contrast to his deficiency in general knowledge. An artisan, whose moderation is known to all his friends and foes, and whose testimony has told the people that the Gospel claims our prudence as it does our trust. The wife of a Christian Government official, who is now interesting herself much in the work of one of our day-schools. A retired sea captain, whose social influence is unquestioned, and whose public oral testimony for Christ has produced a deep and wide impression. The father of the first-mentioned (lad of twelve), whose faith has not become "dead," but has already been instrumental in bringing his family to the knowledge of Jesus Christ. Last of this inspiring list comes, not the least noble, one crowned with locks made silver by seventy-eight years; whose public profession, last Sunday, brought tears to the crowded congregation.

Thus we labour, believing in the Word of the Lord: "I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams."

TEMPERANCE IN JERSEY.—The teetotallers in Jersey have formed an "Alliance for the suppression of the liquor traffic." They are strenuously advocating the entire closing of public-houses on the Lord's day. We hope they may succeed.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for week ending July 14:—July 8, Luke ii. 15-24; July 9, Luke ii. 25-39; July 10, Luke ii. 40-52; July 11, Luke iii. 1-14; July 12, Luke iii. 15-23; July 13, Luke iv. 1-15; July 14, Luke iv. 16-32.

MR. HENRY THORNE IN DERBY.—A supplementary Mission has been conducted by Mr. Thorne in Derby. All the meetings were in the drill hall, which has seating capacity for about 2400. The congregations were more mixed than at the previous Mission—not so large a proportion of young men or of the poorer classes—but many, apparently, who were accustomed to attend places of worship. A good number stayed to the after-meeting, and there was every token of abundant blessing. Mr. Thorne, Rev. W. H. Askwith, and several other Derby friends, assisted at a Blue-ribbon Mission, inaugurated by Mr. Noble at Duffield, a large village four miles north of Derby.

CHRISTMAS LETTERS FOR AUSTRALIA.—Mrs. Auriol Barker, hon. secretary for the Christmas letters for the Australian colonies, wishes to know if any captains of ships going to Melbourne or Sydney would kindly give a free passage to the parcels. If the ship is a sailing vessel she should leave England in August; if a steamer, in October. These are the latest dates; they might be dispatched earlier. We have instances of two cases of conversion occurring by means of these silent messages in different hospitals. One man died holding the letter in his hands, which the Lord had used to bring life to his soul, praising the Lord for his goodness in sending it. If captains of Australian-going ships would convey the letters free they would help forward a good work. Communications to be addressed to Mrs. Auriol Barker, Camano House, Tunbridge.

BREAKING THE FETTERS OF ROME.

MY DEAR SIR,—A few weeks ago, the day after I had given an address on "Auricular Confession" in one of the northern cities of Scotland, a gentleman asked me to give him one hour of my time, that he might have some explanation about our Saviour's words: "Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven," &c. (Matt. xviii. 18). After I had complied with his request, he said:—

"I belong to one of those Scotch families which have remained attached to the Church of Rome, when the great majority of the people were leaving that Church to become Protestants. But though, till last night, I have remained a Roman Catholic, I thought it was my duty to know what you had to say, and I was among your most attentive listeners. I will not conceal from you that at first I felt outraged at some things you said, and I came very near to leave the church at the first impulse of my anger. But I was soon calmed and struck by the evident good and friendly feeling of your address, and your lecture was not finished when my former blind faith in the Church of Rome was absolutely shaken, not to say entirely destroyed. My wife, a devoted Roman Catholic also till then, was sitting by me. It was easy to see that your words were making as much impression on her as on me. At her request, after the meeting, I bought your book: "The Priest, the Woman, and the Confessional," and we spent the greater part of the night in reading it from the first to the last line, with the exception of the Latin pages, which we do not understand.

"It was three o'clock in the morning when we finished. I then asked my wife, 'What do you think of this book?' She wept bitterly, and answered: 'My dear husband, all that is said here is true. Many times I have been scandalised and horrified by the questions put to me, not by all, but by several, of my confessors. . . . It was from those questions that I got the first bad impressions of sin in my poor guilty heart, when I was young. That is the reason why I have delayed, till now, sending our girls to confess. I have always concealed that from you. But to-day, I think my duty is to reveal it, that you may not press me any more to send them to confess. I am fully persuaded that auricular confession cannot be ordained by the God of Holiness. It is a school of infamy.'

"'You have nothing to fear from me, hereafter, on that subject,' I answered, 'for my resolution is irrevocably taken, not only to prevent our children from going any more to confess, but I am determined to follow the advice which Pastor Chiniquy has given us: to rely only on Christ, his blood shed on the cross, his life given up on Calvary, for the pardon of our sins.' My wife expressed her joy at my determination, and she said that, many times, she had had the same thought, but she never dared to express it.

"Now, Mr. Chiniquy," continued that gentleman, "it is my stern determination to follow your example, and join the great Protestant family as soon as possible, with my wife, and my seven children. But this cannot be done here, in the midst of the blind Roman Catholics who surround me. I will emigrate to America, and then you will help me to know, love, and follow the Gospel of Christ."

I could give you several other facts as interesting, if the short limits of a letter were not making it impossible. Since my last letter to you it has been my unspeakable joy to give a helping hand to three most respectable priests of Rome in breaking their heavy and ignominious fetters. One of them is a French priest, the other English, and the third an Irish one. They all ask me a place in "The Converted Priests' Home," to prepare themselves to preach Christ, by giving some time to the study and the meditation of the Word of God. Let us pray for all the priests of Rome, that they may receive the light, and that before long we may have a whole army of those regenerated priests, rallying around the banner of Christ. My address will continue to be 38, Parliament-street, London, S.W.

Truly yours in Christ,

York, June 25. C. Chiniquy.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE.

AN active campaign continues to be waged against the evils of the drink by Mr. Francis Murphy and his son Thomas—one in England and the other in Ireland. Mr. Murphy, sen., has concluded a week of most successful meetings in Tonbridge, Kent. Many local friends of the cause rallied round him, and, as an outcome of the week's effort, nearly 500 pledges were taken, a goodly proportion of them being from among the young. Mr. Murphy also paid a brief visit to the neighbouring village of Leigh. This week he addresses a meeting at Richmond.

Meantime, Mr. T. E. Murphy has been consolidating and extending the remarkable work he was instrumental in commencing at Belfast some months since. The tide of reform flows on in increasing volume, and the ranks of abstainers are daily being added to. On the first day of a series of meetings at Portadown, as many as 450 pledges were taken.

THE POWER OF THE WORD OF GOD.

THE Mission Intérieure de France has recently celebrated its anniversary at Valence, when M. E. Vermer spoke of his recent tour in Isère. He said:—

"The Holy Spirit is working quite independently of any organisation or particular church. I have just seen a striking proof of this at S——, where a very interesting nucleus of Christians is found, all Romanists by birth, and who were led to accept the evangelical faith, without the help of any pastor, evangelist, or colporteur. About four years ago a planter was returning from Algiers. In passing through Marseilles a pocket New Testament was given to him by a woman. This poor man, who could not read, carried the book into the mountains of Isère. His daughter, who was harvesting for a proprietor, spoke to her master about her father's book and brought it to him. He was delighted to have found a treasure incomparably richer than his Mass book. He read it with the closest attention. There appeared to him an abyss wide and deep between the teaching of Christ and that of the Romish Church.

"However, he continued to attend the Catholic services, but the preaching so disgusted him that he returned home, and, feeling an irresistible need, he knelt down and besought God to show him a better religion than that which he knew. Suddenly he was enlightened by the Holy Spirit, and on opening his New Testament a new light shone upon it. He found peace with God, gave up the Mass, and gathered his friends and neighbours around the Word of God, and prayed with them.

"Having discovered a complete Bible, he began to study the Old Testament and compare it with the New. He spent whole days and nights in reading the Holy Scriptures. He lost no opportunity of bearing witness to the truth. The parish priest used every effort to lead him back within the pale of the Romish Church, but without success. Indeed, the priest himself was convinced of his ignorance, and said, 'This man frightens me; he could make the devil tremble.' To which our friend replied that a true Christian, who abides in Christ, might truly make the devil tremble. Pastor Delavena, of the Protestant Church at Grenoble, goes to S—— to conduct meetings, and there is a little church of fifteen converted persons, who are essentially Bible Christians."

A SEASIDE HOME FOR CHILDREN.—A small establishment was opened at Lytham on Saturday, June 23, in connection with the Boys' and Girls' Refuges and Children's Aid Society of Manchester, with the object of giving poor city children the means of living for a day or two under the healthful conditions of the seaside. A comfortable house has been taken in Warton-street and fitted up to accommodate thirteen little ones. Most of the furnishings have been contributed by people in Lytham, where great interest is manifested in the Home.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

DEAR SIR,—Your readers will be pleased to learn that notwithstanding many hindrances our second party of young emigrants (100 boys) sailed in the Polynesian from Liverpool on June 14, and I have since heard of their safe arrival. I now ask earnest prayer on behalf of our third party, consisting of seventy-six girls from our Village Home, who will (D.V.) sail in the Sardinia on the 12th inst. Money has been received to pay the expenses of fifty-six of this party, and we are hoping that other hearts may be moved by the Lord to supply what is still lacking. My "bairns" are all in high glee over the prospect of their journey, and we have assurances of happy homes and bright futures for them in the land of their adoption.

These little girls will (D.V.) attend the noon prayer-meeting at Aldersgate-street on Tuesday next, the 10th, two days before sailing, to supplicate in a special manner the Divine blessing. I hope then to give a brief account of the 300 children who will have left our Homes for the Colonies since August last. It will cheer us all if there is a large attendance.
—Yours faithfully, on behalf of the little ones,

T. J. BARNARDO.

"THE LEAVES OF THE TREE."

WITH this most appropriate and expressive title, Mrs. Robertson, 1, Oak Hill Park, Hampstead, has issued another of her deeply-interesting records of the work done by the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures. It tells of the scattering broadcast of these "leaves," that are "for the healing of the nations," by workers in England, France, Holland, Egypt, Bohemia, Austria, Italy, Greece, Russia, Syria, India, America, and Mexico. With pleasure we extract from the concluding remarks of the report, and hope they will find an echo in the heart of every reader:—

"It is not possible at any given time to state the number of copies that have been distributed, because the work is always going on; but much more than 16,491 Bibles, 158,006 Testaments, and 115,777 Gospels have been circulated; although those are the numbers already registered. The distribution is all done by free labourers, which enables the whole of the funds of the Association to be devoted to the purposes of the work.

"We have this year been making a special effort to supply the Jews, many of whom have undergone great sufferings. It is remarkable how willing some of them are to accept the Scriptures, and many, in consequence of reading them, have already come to a knowledge of the truth, as it is in Jesus.

"We would especially commend this attempt to enlighten God's ancient people by means of his own Word to the prayerful consideration of his own people. The special blessing which the work has already received from the Great King is the greatest encouragement to go forward in his strength to bring the wanderers into the Father's House. The only object of the free distribution is to make known the Saviour's boundless love to sinners. Will you, dear friend, enable us to send this wondrous offer of God's free gift to those who will never otherwise know it? One thousand millions of our fellow creatures are without a copy of the New Testament. When Christians realise the great need—that the Master hath need of their gold and silver to be cast into the Treasury to send forth his own Word free as the light, broadcast as the rain, and bountiful as the sunbeams, the Lord our God does arise and shine: for in giving his Words—which our Saviour Himself has given to us—to perishing sinners, the blessing, which maketh rich, does return into the bosoms of his children, the peace which passeth all understanding, and the joy which is unspeakable and full of glory."

IRISH EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

THE report of the Irish Evangelisation Society's work during the past year is full of encouraging facts. Amid all the troubles that have befallen the sister island, it is gratifying to know that various Evangelical agencies are doing their best in spreading the Gospel among the people—the only balm that can effectually heal her wounds. We make a few extracts from the report:—

"Although a stranger personally, I take the liberty of giving you a short account of the work in Annalong, co. Down. I may state that I am one of the number who were brought to a saving knowledge of Christ through the preaching of Mr. Smith here, and can bear witness to the 'joy and peace of believing.' . . . The Hall now has been unable to contain the numbers who flocked to hear the Gospel. . . . We are astonished to see so many souls completely broken down under a sense of their sins, and this in so short a time; it is God who is breathing his Spirit. . . . Souls are brought to Jesus every night during the delivery of the address. Christian friends around here unite with me in returning thanks for sending Mr. Peatt."

One of the workers writes: "I am thankful to say we are now having precious times in Ballymaconnell, co. Down. For the first two weeks we preached every night, and apparently the people were unmoved. Mr. Burrows says he never was in a place where the people were so hard. Many of them have never been in the habit of going anywhere, and have not even any respect for the Word of God, and laughed at the most solemn truths; but, praise God! his Word in the hands of the Spirit is like the hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces, and now many are convinced of sin, and anxious about their souls. Four farmers, all young men, have professedly been brought into liberty. One very old man, who drank himself blind, has, we believe, been able to take Christ as his Saviour. Another man of nearly fifty years has been converted, five or six young men working for farmers, and a few women. Many are anxious; and twenty at least waited to be spoken with last night. We are expecting still greater things."

At the close of a service in a church, the tent being too small, J. D. Gilmore writes:—"There could not have been less than 1000 present, the large church being filled, and, best of all, the Master was present in power, and souls were enabled to decide for Jesus. Just that you may know how the Lord has been with us, I may mention that over a hundred have professed to have found peace."

These cases, which are but specimens of many others, will serve to show our readers the good that is being done by this society. Mr. James Barton, Dundalk, Hon. Sec., writes:—"Our four tents are at work, and we have every encouragement to go forward this summer if means are provided for us. Indeed, the demands upon us are such that I would be glad to send out a fifth tent, and am in a position to send Evangelists with it if it were provided. Poor people who have received blessing through our work are helping us increasingly, but the upper classes are much crippled in means in this country."

CONGRESS AT THE HAGUE.—The British Continental and General Federation for the Abolition of State Regulation of Vice will hold its third Triennial Congress this year at the Hague, from September 17 to 22 inclusive, under the presidency of M. Emile de Laveleye. Addresses will be given by M. H. Pierson, of the Asiles Heldring, Zetten, president of the Dutch committee; by the Baron Schimmelpennick, president of the Committee of Reception at the Hague; and by Mrs. Butler, on behalf of the executive committee of the Federation. Members are expected from Alsace, America, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, England, France, Germany, Holland, Italy, Spain, Sweden, and Switzerland, who will give reports as to the progress of the work of the Federation in their respective countries.

"REST UNTO YOUR SOULS."

A MEMORY OF MILDMAY.

"AT the feet of Jesus," freed from Satan's chain,
Day and night rejoicing, fain would I remain;
But my Lord forbids it, "I have work for thee;
Seek the groaning captives, bid them come to Me."

"At the feet of Jesus" weeping would I stand,
Pouring precious odours with adoring hand;
"Go," the Master answers, "make the feeble strong,
Guide the weary wanderer, cheer the sad with song."

On the breast of Jesus I would lay my head,
But the Saviour whispers, "Do My work instead;
Sinners' hearts are aching, pilgrim's feet are sore;
Rest when time is ended, rest for evermore."

"By the Cross of Jesus" surely I may stay;
Still the pleading Spirit summons me away: [wide
"Tell mankind He loves them, spread the story
Till to reign in glory comes the Crucified."

Lord, my spirit wearies, has not earth a home?
Must I, like the raven, o'er dark waters roam?
"Working, warring, waiting," comes the voice divine,
"In the Heart of Jesus there is room for thine."

June 30. ALFRED J. BEGBIE.

REV. DR. SOMERVILLE AT LOVEDALE.

THIS venerable evangelist, after a lengthened tour through Natal and portions of the Free State and Cape Colony as far as Kimberley, has paid a visit to Lovedale. He also addressed meetings in Alice, Fort Beaufort, Macfarlan, and afterwards at Burnshill and Pirie; the meetings held during the week being ten in number. In all these places he had large and attentive audiences, some of them exclusively European, and others entirely native, with a few Europeans.

If Dr. Somerville's life is spared and he goes on as he has done for the last few years, there will be few portions of the civilised world which he will not have visited. His preaching journeys have already included Germany, Spain, Italy, and Russia, and, besides other portions of Europe, India, Australia, and New Zealand. In all these extensive wanderings through many lands, the truths of God's Gospel have been brought into contact with the minds and consciences of hundreds of thousands. It is impossible that these truths—which are but God's message to man—can have failed to produce widespread results of the best and most permanent kind.

The main topics of Dr. Somerville's addresses are the great truths of the Gospel, which are also the great moral realities of life. They are: The love of God; man's sin; Christ's atonement; the power of God's Spirit to bring about the great change of conversion; the power of faith or trust in a Saviour; and the blessedness of reconciliation, and similiar main truths of the Bible. However far he may for a moment apparently wander away from his subject at any point, it is only in appearance; for whatever be the topic, everything said converges towards that central truth. And this is the secret of his influence on the majority of those who hear him. They discern the truth stated, and the anxiety and object of the preacher in its statements.

It is not often that we find a man, at the ripe age of seventy yeare, who has preached for forty year to a city congregation, traversing sea and land, wandering over the world and encountering the rough ways of African travel, and the discomforts of a constantly shifting home, to preach the Gospel to his fellow-men whatever be their nationality or colour. And yet this is the simple object of Dr. Somerville's mission.—Lovedale Express, June 1.

EVANGELICAL SCHOOL, ITALY.—The directors of this school, at Nuovo Guantia, No. 7, Medina, Naples, would be glad of help in the work of educating poor Neapolitan girls, so that they may be able, when grown up, to earn their living. Signora Teresita Wager is the present mistress.

BELIEVERS' MEETINGS, DUBLIN.

THESE were held as usual in Merrion Hall, and were attended by various workers from different parts of Ireland, and also from England and Scotland. One special feature of the meetings has been the prayer meetings, which are always well attended, and at which a large number of requests for praise and prayer are dealt with, giving definiteness and point to the petitions offered. A special note of praise ran through all the meetings for the answers to prayer offered at the meetings a year ago, for the restoration of law and order and better protection of God's people from violence. Last year the hearts of many were filled with apprehension on account of the undetected crime throughout the country. Now all is changed, and hearty thanks were rendered to God for his goodness.

The usual bountiful hospitality shown to all strangers and visitors was unabated, and a true Irish welcome was given to all. Amongst the speakers during the meetings were Mr. Henry Dyer of Malvern, Mr. Henry Groves of Kendal, Mr. George Trench, Mr. Bland, Mr. Crosbie, Rev. A. Rees of Sunderland, Rev. J. Wilkinson of Mildmay, Mr. George Soltau, and Dr. McKilliam of Blackheath.

The midday and evening meetings were devoted chiefly to addresses on various topics, from which the following notes have been selected:—

Mr. H. GROVES: We learn from Habakkuk ii. 1—4 how God speaks to us by what happens day by day. Many dream on as if God had not spoken, or as if they did not know what He meant. We need to get into God's presence to understand. "Habakkuk" means "the embosomed one." In the New Testament, we read of another who "leant on Jesus' bosom."

Verse 1.—The "secret place," the Holy of Holies," is the saint's watch-tower. Work is poor without a watch-tower to back it. Failure comes because we don't get our work from God. There is work to be done, and we go off and do it without having waited to hear "what He will say to me." We must see that the work and word are both from God. If we lived in communion with Him, all the sorrow and troubles would be but stepping-stones to heaven. Abraham, living in the "secret of his presence," knew of the destruction of Sodom long before Lot, whom it most concerned, had heard a whisper of the coming brimstone. Abraham was on his watch-tower.

Verse 2.—Our Christianity should be like large advertisements, evident even to the hurrying world. We live in days when it is thought wisdom to doubt. Are we believers in God? Let us be men and women who dare to say, "My Father told me"—standing firm for the truth. While Naaman was unsaved, he denied God. When he came out of the water he said, "I know." Where God has not spoken, don't think, for you don't know, and where He has spoken, don't think, for you do know.

Mr. GEORGE TRENCH spoke upon John xii. 23—36. See the margin of the Revised Testament for the reading of ver. 32: "Out of the earth." Remarkably suitable words to the occasion on which they were spoken. In the beginning of the chapter, we see a feast prepared for the Lord by his loved ones. Then follows a procession of a character very unusual to the "Man of Sorrows." He had become the subject of adoration. He must have felt at this time the attractive power, which was in Himself, first drawing that little band of loving disciples, then the Jews, and finally the Gentile Greeks.

The disciples seem to have expected the fulfilment of the prophecies concerning the glory of the King then, when Phil. ii. 10, 11, should be fully carried out. But then came the words, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone. . . ." What a sense of loneliness of heart this presented! "Abideth alone." Did He not even up to that time feel lonely? Was He not the song of the drunkard? Was He not an alien among his mother's brethren?

He is drawing now. By the attraction of his wounded body, and his shed blood. There is nothing like it to break the heart, and this same power will yet draw the world. "He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied," embraces a wide field of blessing.

We should preach, hold, and live in the Resurrection of Christ. Divisions arise from the fleshly desire to "draw disciples after them," i.e., the teachers, instead of allowing the risen Christ to be the one drawing power. Has He got possession of our hearts, and drawn them out of the world? "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Or, like the foxes and the birds, have we our holes and nests in the world? And while professing to be looking for Him, and forward to meeting Him, are we yet feathering our nests in the world? Love to a risen Christ is the best remedy for worldliness. His loving, sympathising heart longs for objects for its love. He has the instinct for attracting; and as a stone rests when it touches the ground, the heart finds rest only when it rests on Christ. Our hearts are attracted now, as our body shall be at his coming (1 Cor. xv.). We shall go up as He went up, and around the throne his people shall find their perfect rest. And then the world will be drawn to Him. And then the lonely man's loving, large heart will be satisfied. As a magnet among rubbish finds the needles, drawing them to itself, so as our hearts are drawn to the Lord the rubbish of earth is left behind us.

Mr. GEORGE SOLTAU: We have been asking God in our prayer-meetings for more power for service. How shall we obtain it? First, by using for God what we already have received, and then going to Him for further supplies. The disciples had to go through a certain course of education from the Master before they could be "endued with power from on high," and the succession of scenes in "the upper room" may enable us to see what we want to learn in order to be more filled with power. (1) Luke xxii. 11—20. The lesson to be learned is union with a crucified Christ: He, the fulness of power, was broken and emptied on the cross to fill us; we need to be broken to flow out to others. Peter failed, however, to get power at the ordinance of the Lord's Supper, for he went out and denied his Master; and if we depend on the ordinance instead of Christ we too shall fall. (2) John xx. 19. The disciples gathered probably in the same upper room. No power because the Lord was absent, but when He suddenly appeared and took his old place amongst them, He said, "Peace be unto you," and He breathed on them, saying, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." We are to inhale the breath of Jesus, breathe the very air of heaven. Then joy and power will flow into our souls. But Thomas was absent, so (3) ver. 26, at the next meeting he was amongst them unbelieving, because not able to feel the Lord, and refusing to believe until he could feel the wounds in the hands and feet. Many want to feel power before believing in the Lord. But the Lord here teaches the third lesson—Blessed are they that have not seen and yet have believed.

(4) After the Ascension the ten, having grown to a hundred and twenty, are met together in the upper room, and after the ten days' waiting on God received the promise of the Father, and were filled with the Holy Ghost and power. Henceforth the people of God are to work and wait and watch until called to the "upper room," where the Master, in his own guest chamber, will preside at the marriage feast, and we shall go no more out from his presence.

Rev. A. A. REES: The four Gospels give us a four-fold picture of Christ, but John seems to me to be the cream of the four, the 14th chapter the cream of that Gospel, and the verses I have read the cream of creams. We should be unhappy if we could get to the bottom of God's Word. It is unfathomable, like Himself. This passage takes for granted that those addressed are saved. Judas had gone—so there is room for deeper fellowship. Love we must have, if we are believers at all, but love is in different degrees, and it will be according to the obedience. Emotion does not tell much, but obedience is the characteristic of love.

What are his commands? His will as revealed in Scripture (2 Tim. iii. 16, 17). Socially, religiously, in the family, in the world, in the church, to gather his will, and do it, is "to keep his commandments. Spiritual children may not know as much as fathers in Christ, but light grows with obedience, and is lost if not followed. "To him that hath shall more be given." There is a difference, too, between limited communion and broken communion. Mistakes from want of light may limit, but not break it; wilful disobedience must break it. Many now-a-days are spiritually born in Babylon, like those of Ezra's days. It is a disadvantage, but they can learn God's ways for Israel. The one who knows best and does best is the one who loves most. "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I say?"

Psalm xxvii. 4, 5.—One thing, not two. "I have espoused you to one husband," says Paul—not two. David never did abide in the "House of the Lord," but he looked forward to New Testament experiences. Ps. xv. shows us the character of the one who would abide in the Holy of Holies, 2, 3. "Nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbour." Avoid the sins of the tongue. If you hear reproaches, let them lie there, don't soil your hands with them. (Ps. xxiv. 3, 4.) There we see the character of our forerunner entering. If we would enter in fellowship with Him, we must have the same character. If we would hold communion with Him, how can we have communion with the world that crucified Him? If God is indwelling, then we cannot go where He would not. Will you first drink of the living fountain, and then go to the puddles and funnels of earth? If we live in fellowship with Him, death is but passing from one room to another, without changing company.

Thursday morning's meetings began as on previous days, with a prayer-meeting at eight o'clock. After breakfast the meeting was held in the large hall, and many gave account of the Lord's work in this and other lands. Mr. GROVES began by giving an account from Count Guicciardini's letters, of Signor Rosetti's departure to be with the Lord. He was at the breaking of bread, and had just read the words "Come up hither," when he fell back and died. And so from remembering the Lord's death he passed away to see Him face to face. Mr. DYER added a few words about Signor Rosetti's work in Italy, where his loss will be much felt by the little flock there. Mr. DARLING then gave a short account of his work among foreign sailors.

Mr. GEORGE BRADY told of Gospel work in tents in Broadwindsor and other places. He spoke of the results of laying hold of God, illustrating it by the case of a poor crippled woman, the only Christian he could hear of in one village he visited. She had been praying for years that God would send someone to preach Christ there. When the meetings began, her own grandchild was the first converted, and then the rest of her family one after the other; and God gave much blessing in that village, in answer to that poor woman's prayers.

Sergeant MCMASTER told of his work among the soldiers in London, Windsor, and Dublin; of the many hindrances he met with, and how fifteen months ago he was led to leave the service to take a room in London for work among the soldiers, and of how God has been blessing that work since. Rev. Mr. WILKINSON gave a slight sketch of his work among the Jews.

Mr. EDWARD HURDITCH told of Bible-carriage work at Swindon. They took a room for preaching. The third night it was packed. They knew of no conversions for a fortnight. Then a little girl came to Christ; she sang, "Jesus loves me." The words rang in her father's ears, till he put down his beer, left the beershop, and went to hear for himself. He was converted, then his wife; and since then the work has begun in earnest. Three hundred and thirty are now in fellowship, and the young men and women working for the Lord.

Mr. BREWSTER told of his Bible-carriage work. In five years nearly three millions of Bibles and tracts have been sold from one carriage. He told of work in Sussex, at Great Yarmouth, where three and four thousand listened to the Gospel preached on the sands, and of blessing, often not heard of till afterwards, among all classes. The carriage is at Bristol now. Mr. HAUGHTON told of what the Lord had been doing among the police. Mr. CRANE, of Manchester, told of God's work in Lancashire. Mr. LEAR gave a short account of Gospel work done with Mr. John Hambelton.

Mr. MILLER, of Glasgow, told of a Gospel work begun in Berwickshire, where three men met to remember the Lord's death, and how since then the work has spread.

Mr. INGLIS then reminded those present of how much prayer had gone up for Ireland since last we met at the believers' meetings, and then went on to tell of how God had been answering, at least as concerned Dublin. He told of work carried on in a tent in the neighbourhood of Dublin last summer and autumn. God gave much blessing then, and many Roman Catholics heard the "good news." He went on to tell of the work under Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and of the winter's work in Merrion Hall, under various evangelists. God was certainly carrying on a great work in Dublin, and God's children might look forward to seeing the country opening more to the Gospel than heretofore if we have faith to continue waiting on Him.

Mr. VARLEY then gave an account of his personal efforts to withstand Mr. Bradlaugh, and to put down vice in London. Mr. GREER gave a short account of work in Armagh, followed by Mr. LEPER, who told of the blessing that had followed some tent work in Belfast.

The meeting at five o'clock on Thursday was a praise-meeting. Many requests for praise were read out, interspersed with hymns and prayer.

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

SWITZERLAND.

THE Swiss religious journals continue to report cases in which friends meeting together in private houses for worship, and who have been convened by individual invitation, have been broken up with violence. It is to be hoped this infringement of religious liberty will soon be put a stop to.

NAPLES.

The German Evangelical Advertiser informs us that very active aggressive efforts are being made in Naples by the Waldensian Pastor Sciarelli, for the more restful and religious observance of the Lord's Day. A letter and several Sunday pamphlets were sent to the Archbishop, also to the preaching ecclesiastics and to editors of journals. To twenty-two Lent preachers the same were sent, with a request that they would preach on the subject. Further, they adopted a most practical measure: some members of the Sunday Union visited 250 shopkeepers to request them to shut their shops on Sundays. What was the result? The very next Lord's Day twenty-nine of these responded by not opening their places of business; and out of the forty-four ecclesiastics only two declined the papers, and of the Lent preachers not one.

BERLIN.

We are glad to see that in Berlin, as well as in many places in Great Britain, a committee has been formed to help the destitute. Some members of the committee themselves go out in the streets and seek vagabonds and those without work, giving to them a card of invitation, which carries with it the right to a cup of coffee and some white bread on Sunday morning. After the modest repast, words of truth and salvation are spoken to the outcasts, pointing out that even to them a great door of deliverance is open.

When the Malagasy envoys were at Berlin, Mrs. Davies, the widow of the late representative of the Evangelical Alliance at Berlin, invited several Christian friends to meet the envoys, when a very interesting meeting took place. The first ambassador spoke of the pleasant remembrances the hymn, "From Greenland's icy mountains," awoke of his own land, where he had often heard it sung to the same melody, in Malagasy, by men and women, young men and maidens. Their visit was showing them how far behind the European nations they were in many things, but the present company would rejoice with him, that they had begun with the most important knowledge—being wise unto salvation. The friendly words offered by Professor Lepsius and others were translated by Count Bernstorff into English, and from English into Malagasy by one of the interpreters.

A DIFFICULT JUNCTURE.

DEAR SIR,—May I venture to appeal to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, who have shown me such strong and tender sympathy in the hard battle I am fighting for the sanctity of our womanhood, and the safety of our little English children, to help me in a systematic Preventive Mission I am endeavouring to start among the young girls of the Three Towns, Plymouth, Stonehouse, and Devonport, really constituting one.

When four years ago I visited Plymouth, I found 500 boys in careful industrial training, but not one single girl. There was not a single industrial school for girls, though they were going to ruin by scores. In response to an earnest appeal I then made, a powerful committee of men, with Lord Mount Edgecumbe at their head, was formed, with an earnest association of ladies, and the result of their united efforts has been the formation of three institutions—a Refuge, a Certified Industrial School for working the Industrial Schools Act Amendment Act, and a Preventive Home.

Now that the Industrial School is opened, and relieves us of the younger children, I am anxious to make the Preventive Home, Staddon House, the centre of a great systematic Preventive Mission, on the Bristol plan, to the swarms of rough girls that throng these populous seaports. The population of 170,000 is composed very largely of the labouring classes; the upper classes consist largely of half-pay naval officers and by no means wealthy professional people, with the claims of the poor pressing upon them, and suffering further from the commercial depression of late years.

Added to this, the success of Mr. Stansfeld's motion in the House of Commons has placed the Three Towns in a most perilous position. However much we may rejoice at the success of that motion, the sudden withdrawal of one legislation before a wiser and better can be substituted, renders imminent an outbreak of wild disorder, which will sweep many a little thoughtless girl away with it, unless a strong hand is held out. Indeed at this juncture the Three Towns stand in need of our deep Christian sympathy and brotherly help, in staying the tide of iniquity which is rapidly rising, and threatening to overwhelm them, brotherly assistance which will be best shown by helping them to save the young.

Any help, in either money or clothes, that those who are interested in this work can send me in my effort to start a Preventive Mission to the young girls of the Three Towns, will be gratefully received. I feel almost overwhelmed at the greatness of the need, and the poverty of the resources for meeting it. Even a few stamps will help us in the clothing club or outfits for emigration.

I again thank the readers of THE CHRISTIAN for the unfailing sympathy they have shown me. I may add that at my last meeting here the leading citizens formed themselves into a powerful body for raising the tone of public opinion and the prevention of vice.

Very faithfully yours,
ELLICE HOPKINS.

Ladywell House, Plymouth, June 22.

Notices of Books, &c.

THE FAMILY CHURCHMAN. The last number of this paper contains, we observe, a very good portrait of the Bishop of London, together with a full report of the special sermon preached by the Archbishop of Canterbury in St. Paul's Cathedral, on behalf of the Bishop of London's Fund.

PROMISES PROVED. By W. J. LEWIS. Price 6d. Morgan & Scott. This little book is some account of the Lord's work in connection with the Spitalfields Gospel Mission, superintended by Mr. Lewis. It gives striking accounts of conversion work and a report of the work generally.

ASK. By A. S. J. F. Shaw & Co. This is a practical book for Christians. It brings some of the great truths of Scripture into matters of every-day life, more especially that of dealing with God about what are termed "little things." It is written simply and pleasantly, and is worthy of wide circulation. The last two chapters treat on prayer answered and unanswered. They are specially helpful to faith in God as sure to regard the requests of His children with favour and acceptance, whether He in wisdom fulfils them or denies. The book abounds with Bible illustrations, and has a tenderness of tone which commends it at once to the reader's heart.

THE REVISED NEW TESTAMENT, AND THE DEITY OF OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST. By Rev. F. J. BASSETT. E. Stock. This is another volume called forth by the Revised Version, the object of the author being to examine into the treatment that crucial texts on the Deity of Christ have received at the hands of the Revisers. The reader will find the subject treated in a manner at once scholarly and reverent, the cause of orthodoxy being evidently dear to the author's heart. The book is written "with the earnest desire after fair and free inquiry to strengthen the faith in the One Foundation, the Deity of our Incarnate Lord." We feel sure many of our readers will thank us for commending it to their notice. To thoughtful and cultured minds it cannot fail to be very helpful and profitable.

THE SEVENFOLD GIFT; or, The Power of the Spirit. By Rev. J. GOSSETT TANNER. Shaw & Co. This book is calculated to be eminently useful, and is written in a spirit of devout and Evangelical regard for the glory of Christ, which makes it very refreshing to read its chapters on the important theme of which it treats. The Seven Gifts of the Spirit referred to are Life, Light, Liberty, Knowledge, Power, Fruitfulness, and Holiness. The book is saturated with Bible testimony, and is an appropriate companion volume to the author's other work, entitled, "Sevenfold Blessing; or, Perfect Salvation through the Blood of Christ." To Christians aspiring after a holier life and greater power for service, it must prove stimulating and instructive, while there is much in it likely to arrest the careless and indifferent reader who may be induced to peruse its pages. Variety of illustration, simplicity of style, and clearness of expression are marked features all through.

I'VE BEEN A GIPSYING. By GEORGE SMITH, of Coalville. 6s. T. Fisher Unwin. A rugged book, written by a rugged man in real earnest about his life work. He longs to save the children of the wandering and outcast classes, and secure for them what should be the birthright of all English-born children—a degree of education that will enable them to rise above the circumstances of their birth. Mr. Smith asserts that the real Romany, who has been credited by the writers of romance with an incapacity for indoor life, is nearly extinct. The vast majority of the gipsies of the present day, he says, have but a small modicum of Romany blood in their veins, the failing ranks being recruited from the lower classes of town and country folk who have taken to a gipsy's life from a desire for roving. Mr. Smith's description of the actual and utterly miserable and degraded condition of these vast hordes of heathen in our midst reveal a truly deplorable state of affairs. The condition of the women and children particularly calls for commiseration and help. The most hopeful feature of the case is that the gipsies themselves seem to look upon Mr. Smith as their friend, and express their gratitude to him when he explains his plans for the education of their children and general improvement of their position. These graphic sketches cannot fail to do good service by calling public attention to a crying evil, and so helping to hasten the day when an awakened Parliament shall wipe away this reproach from the nation.

Mission and other Appeals.

DUBLIN MISSIONS.—Dear Friends,—I sent a letter a short time ago giving some news of the progress of our Dublin Mission work, and as one of the many fruits of its success the opening of our new Home for big lads, which has already proved to be the missing link. We are very anxious to collect the money still needed for it. If 500 friends would give or collect £1 each the work would be complete.—Yours faithfully, ELLEN SMYLY, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin.

AN ITALIAN ORPHANAGE.—In a report of the work of Mrs. Boyce at Bordighera, at Lord Shaftesbury's, on the 22nd inst., it was stated that 72 boys and 42 girls had passed out of the Institution since its foundation in 1869. The applications for admission continue to be as numerous as ever, but owing to a want of funds Mrs. Boyce has made a condition of ten francs being paid by those who send them. Many sad and urgent cases are turned away. Mrs. Boyce therefore appeals for help, that she may be able to receive poor orphans. Contributions may be sent to Major Frobisher, 118, Pall-mall, S.W.

DAN AND REUBEN.

I.—A STAR FADING OUT.

DAN, a tribe, started fair. His father's dying blessing made its head, a judge in Israel, of serpent subtlety (Gen. xlix. 17).

But a grandson of Moses, named Jonathan, and his descendants, though not Danites, but Levites, eclipsed its lustre, by idolatry; until the day of the captivity of the ark under Eli's sons (see Judges xviii. 30, reading Moses for Manasseh, and ark for land: so Lange).

Hence Dan, as a name, is kept out of mention, slightingly; even when a Danite is referred to. See 1 Chron. vii. 12 (Lange's reading), Shuppim also, and Huppim, the children of Ir (a Benjamite, Iri, v. 7), and Hushim, sons of another, i.e., another tribe, meaning Dan. In that chapter, as Lange remarks, Zebulun is, in a sense, accidentally omitted, for none of that tribe are referred to. Here the name Dan is purposely slurred over. "Them that honour me I will honour, and he that despiseth me shall be lightly esteemed."

This is the more remarkable because David was recruited by some out of every one of the twelve tribes, showing Dan's and Zebulun's numbers to great advantage. (See 1 Chron. xii. 33, 35.) Fair was the oak, but hollow was its large girth.

Dan lingered on, in the Divine patience, as a tribe. Ezekiel used mosaic types, and in his last chapter mentions it first as a geographical expression for the northernmost limit. But he, (v. 6) without naming it again, silently shears away its part south of Ephraim, transferring the valuable but misused Jaffa seaboard (Judges v. 17) to Reuben!

And thenceforth Dan, as one of the twelve stars (Gen. xxxvii. 9), dims; till covered with the blackness of darkness for ever (Jude xiii.).

In the apocalyptic Sealing of the Tribes the number twelve is filled up; but Dan is not there! (Rev. vii.)

Let not any denomination among believers lose its crown, by any baleful spirit seizing it and leading it astray. The new idolatry, universalism, is helped by our Jonathans.

II.—A STAR BRIGHTENING.

Reuben stumbled, and his tribe was unstable as water, and did not excel. Another, Judah, took its first-born position in the patriarchal blessing (Genesis xlix. 3, 4, 8).

And four hundred years after Deborah's song has a painful refrain: "For the divisions of Reuben there were great searchings of heart."

But good as well as evil was in Reuben. Discipline, and the eye of the other tribes, kept it steady to engagements under Joshua. In David's time it had become happily ready to greet him, and to help the throne vigorously, with a perfect heart, and in brotherhood with its associated tribes, having all manner of instruments of war among them. (See 1 Chron. xii. 37—40.)

"Destroy not" the cluster "for a blessing is in it," is one of the commands of Him whose gentleness is needed to make us imperfect ones great, and who directs, as the Spirit, in the terrible wheels of his procedure.

One of those procedures often is the transference of useful openings from bodies of Christians not using them to those seeking them.

Like the individual, Peter, again converted, and honoured to strengthen the brethren, so a denomination may by painful winnowing have the chaff at last removed. The earth-born mists disappear. And so it, at any rate, comes to pass that some of the lost lustre can be regained. In the apocalyptic sealing (Rev. vii. 5), Reuben takes rank next to Judah. May the Rationalism of one body, and the Ritualism of another, be purified out of the stars now fading!

An Open Door of Service for Christ's Little Ones.

THE VILLAGE HOME FOR GIRLS, AT ILFORD,

Is now quite full, while every day urgent applications are received on behalf of needy Candidates for admission.

But, three and a half additional acres of Land have been obtained close to the Village, on which to erect Fifteen Fresh Cottages, and needful School Buildings.

A Lady near Newcastle has just given £600 to supply one of the first of these.

It is thought that there are some readers of THE CHRISTIAN who, knowing the need, may wish to contribute a small House to hold 20 Little Girls, to be snatched by Christ's servants from positions of danger or suffering, and trained in Christian ways.

If promises enough were received soon, the work could be begun during this fine weather; and next summer would, if God wills, see the Fifteen Houses taken possession of for their holy purpose.

Communications are invited, and may be addressed to

Dr. T. J. BARNARDO,

18 & 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

The Rescue Society
FOR Young Women & Children

Specially needs help at the present time.

The past half-year has been a period of full work, but the funds contributed having been only sufficient for daily wants, there is no surplus in hand.

All Christian and benevolent persons are earnestly entreated to give according to their ability, and especially such as have recommended applicants for admission to the Homes from all parts of the country and town.

The New Report is now ready, and any Contributor not receiving a copy should apply to the Secretary.

Contributions are kindly received by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, or may be sent to the Offices—

THE ANCHORAGE.

Hebrews vi. 19.

UNDER THE ANCHORAGE MISSION
(Of Hope & Help).

Committee.

GEORGE HANBURY, ESQ., REV. H. E. FOX, COL. STUART-WORTLEY.

For the reception of the more respectable class of young women in trouble, including those about to become mothers. Conversion of heart is most earnestly and prayerfully sought. Thorough training in household duties, cookery, dressmaking, fine laundry work, &c. &c. is given.

Regulations for admission to the "Anchorage House," will be sent on application by letter to MRS. H. STUART-WORTLEY, Rosslyn House, Grove End Road, N.W. (President of the Ladies' Committee), to whom, or to any member of the Committee, or Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, subscriptions (which, owing to the necessarily expensive character of the work, are much required) may be sent.

The Cheap Edition, Price 1s., is now
REDUCED TO HALF-PRICE.

P. P. BLISS,
HIS LIFE AND LIFE WORK,

Author of several of the popular pieces in "SACRED SONGS AND SOLOS."

BY MAJOR WHITTLE.

CHEAP EDITION, Tinted Covers, 1s.

(Can now be had for SIXPENCE.)

Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.

SUPERIOR EDITION, Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"Mr. Bliss poured forth a glorious tide of artless song. He 'sang praises to God.' He sang before countless thousands the message of Divine love. He fashioned the ringing chorus and the lifting melody which touched the hearts of millions, and consecrated patriotic enthusiasm, military pride, domestic sensibility, and common instincts, to the service of the Christ whom he passionately loved."

Bible Studies
at NORTHFIELD.

BY D. L. MOODY, AND OTHERS.

"The Conference of Christian workers at Northfield, Mass., during the month of August, 1881, was a gathering of more than transient interest. The large experience in Gospel activities of those who presented the various topics, gave a peculiar competency to their words and specially adapted them to the instruction and upbuilding of all engaged in Gospel work."

SCRIPTURE TEXTS.

Published by MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings; and may be had of any Bookseller.

From the late AGNES ELIZABETH JONES, Lady Superintendent of Nurses at the Liverpool Workhouse.

"The Lady Superintendent of Nurses begs to acknowledge the receipt of the parcels of Texts as ordered. She more and more feels their value. The patients lying in their beds can read the words—the print is so distinct.

"As she is going to undertake the charge of several hundred more patients, she wishes to give other Wards the advantage of these Texts on the wall."

In very large type, printed in blue ink, size 31 in. by 20 in., 70 different Texts, 3d. each.
Mounted on canvas, varnished, and with eyelet holes, 9d. each.
Mounted on rollers and varnished, 1s. 6d. each.

LIST OF THE TEXTS

1. "Choose you this day whom ye will serve."
2. "The wages of sin is death."
2.* "The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."
3. "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out."
4. "Repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance."
5. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die."
6. "In whom we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins."
7. "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God."
8. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."
9. "The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon Him; to all that call upon Him in truth."
10. "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world."
11. "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."
12. "The Lord is good to all; and His tender mercies are over all His works."
13. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge; but fools despise wisdom and instruction."
14. "Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered."
15. "When we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly."
16. "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus."
17. "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."
18. "Now in Christ Jesus ye, who sometime were far off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ."
19. "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found; call ye upon Him while He is near."
20. "Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the Just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God."
21. "Herein is love: not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins."
22. "God commendeth His love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."
23. "As by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so, by the obedience of One, shall many be made righteous."
24. "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing."
26. "The just shall live by faith."
31. "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God."
32. "The blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin."
33. "Through this Man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins."
34. "Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by Thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation."
35. "God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through Him might be saved."
36. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life."
37. "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."
38. "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."
39. "God so loved the world, that He gave His only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."
40. "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by Me."
42. "Let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus."
43. "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."
44. "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."
45. "Suffer little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not."
46. "He shall gather the lambs with His arm, and carry them in His bosom."
47. "Children, obey your parents in all things: for this is well-pleasing unto the Lord."
48. "I love them that love Me; and those that seek Me early shall find Me."
51. "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth."
52. "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him."
53. "Casting all your care upon Him; for He careth for you."
54. "The Eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms."
55. "He hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."
56. "I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content."
57. "As thy days so shall thy strength be."
58. "In all their afflictions He was afflicted."
59. "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth."
60. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."
61. "Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God."
62. "He is despised and rejected of men; a Man of Sorrows and acquainted with grief."
63. "He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities."
64. "The chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed."
65. "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way."
66. "The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquities of us all."
67. "Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth."
68. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters."
69. "If any man thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink."
70. "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shall believe in thine heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."
71. "It is the blood that maketh atonement for the soul."

The eight following are in Extra Large Type.

25. "Jesus only."
27. "Now."
28. "God is love."
29. "Behold, He cometh."
30. "Have faith in God."
41. "Prepare to meet thy God."
49. "Thou God seest me."
50. "Be ye kind one to another."

Nos. 45 to 51 inclusive are specially suited for Children.

Calls to Christ.

A SERIES OF ADDRESSES BY REV. R. W. NICOLL, M.A.

"The Gospel scheme of salvation is fully set forth, and is pointedly enforced. It is a book which might with much profit be placed in the hands of the careless and unconcerned."—The Record.

"Force and freshness are eminently the characteristics of these 'Calls to Christ'; they are also brief to a proverb, and hence they may be of great service to an earnest evangelist who knows how to use another man's thoughts."
Kelso Courier.

"A choice book. Sweet-scented throughout with the name of Christ, it sets forth the 'old, old story' in eleven simple but explicit lines of Gospel teaching. Though on a familiar theme, it has an unobtrusive originality, and many touches of beautiful thought, which remove it far from commonplace."
Children's Record.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE (Marked thus*).

The Irish Evangelization Society has now been at work nine years, and has had very great blessing. It has pleased God to use their Evangelists in the proclamation of the Gospel to bring a very large number into the fold of Christ. The Society's work is extending, and the Committee feel it to be right that the Church of God should more widely know of, and be invited to aid more largely in, this work.

EVANGELISTS.

The Evangelists of this Society may belong, as individuals, to many denominations, but as its Evangelists they represent none. They go out for this Society, not as members of any particular body of Christians, and without in any way taking part, publicly or privately, in questions relating to denominational differences, but only as Evangelists, to preach the glorious Gospel of Christ to perishing sinners, in its fulness and freeness, and to seek, under the constraining power of the love of Christ, to win souls to Him.

The Evangelists sent out by the Society are always anxious to co-operate heartily with the godly ministers of any locality in which they are called to labour.

MEETINGS.

The Society is prepared to receive applications for Evangelistic meetings, in any locality, from clergymen or laymen.

MEANS.

The work of the Society is maintained by voluntary contributions, and Christians are invited to share the privilege of this work for Christ. Those who are disposed to help are requested to do so at once. Contributions will be received by this paper, by the Hon. Sec., or by the Treasurer.

PAST WORK.

The Report of the year 1882 can be had upon application to the Hon. Sec., and will repay perusal.

Dundalk, 21st May, 1883. JAMES BARTON, Hon. Sec.

FIFTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN"

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK

CASE of W. THOMPSON of FRANKHAM FILL, FOURSTONES STATION, NORTHUMBERLAND.

This patient wrote me in October last. Heart disease and consumption had been in the family. Bronchitis had weakened him for several years, followed by pleurisy.

For the twelve weeks previous to writing me there had been a gradual decline of strength, hæmorrhage had now come on, with great pains in the chest, and difficulty of breathing. Loss of flesh was manifest in all parts of the body. He had been under medical treatment without benefit; but, seeing in the Christian Herald an account of some remarkable cases, as a last hope he applied to me.

I sent him various prescriptions and letters of advice from October to February (4 months). In a letter just received from him (April 3) he says:

"Your medicine has done wonders for me. I am so happy to say I have a new lease of life. You are at liberty to publish my case."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

BOOKS FOR ENQUIRERS AND CONVERTS.

Young Converts;

Or, Beginners in Zion's Ways. By Rev. R. Boyd, D.D. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

I have been continually asked by young converts where they could get a book in which they might find advice that would be helpful to them. This book seemed just the thing needed at this time. I have known the author, Rev. Dr. Boyd, for many years as a dear father in Israel. I have read his work carefully, and recommend it to all young Christians for prayerful meditation." D L Moody

The Way of Life.

A Book for Enquirers. By Rev. Robert Boyd, D D. Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth Boards, 1s.

"About fifteen years ago this little book attracted my notice. I read it with interest, and felt so much profited that I re-read it several times, and then circulated hundreds of copies among the soldiers during the American war. The number that then seemed blessed through reading the book has induced me to ask Messrs. Morgan & Scott to republish it, hoping that it may be the means of good in this country, as it has been in America." D L Moody

All About Jesus.

Thoughts and Reflections on the Person and Work of Christ. By Alexander Dickson. This book was printed at the express desire of Mr. D. L. Moody. Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"The volume sets forth Jesus very much in Scriptural language, for we have counted over 1340 passages of Holy Writ, chastely and lovingly interwoven in the discourses. Throughout, Jesus is the subject of delightful meditation, affection, and adoration."
The Methodist.

Addresses to Young Men.

By Rev. Daniel Baker. With Preface by D. L. Moody. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"These discourses were designed to be of an awakening character. They were preached (in substance) in numerous revivals, and were blessed to the hopeful conversion of many precious souls, of whom some fifty or more have become ministers of the Gospel. May He who was pleased to bless these discourses when they came from the pulpit, bless them also now." Author's Preface.

London: Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings; And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

The NUMBER "SEVEN" in SCRIPTURE.

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, Esq., C.B.,

Author of "Shadow and Substance," "Forgiveness, Life, and Glory."

"I do not presume to offer an opinion as to the purpose with which the number seven has been so prominently interwoven with the Scriptures. That there is some purpose, however, I can hardly doubt; for the use of the number is far more than merely mechanical or artificial. It runs through the whole of the Bible, commencing with the institution of the seventh day—or Sabbath—in Eden, and concluding with the various series of 'sevens' in the Apocalypse."—Extract from Introduction.

THE HOPELESSLY INCURABLE.

The Unsuccessful Candidates.—The Committee of the Ladies' Samaritan Society of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, 25, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, earnestly plead for Contributions in aid of a collection they are making for the unsuccessful candidates at the recent election of pensioners. There were 44 candidates and only 5 pensions to bestow; 39 poor sufferers were consequently disappointed. To each of these the Committee desire to send a gift of money and they confidently appeal to the sympathy of the kind friends who have assisted at previous elections, and to the public generally. The smallest donations will be thankfully acknowledged by the Committee.

PAKEFIELD CONFERENCE.—The Annual Conference at Pakefield, Lowestoft, will be held on July 19 and 20, 1883. Meetings, 11, 3, and 7. Subjects: 1. The Substitutionary work of Christ, the sole cause of our present and eternal salvation. 2. Christ the Saviour of the body, and its consecration as the temple of the Holy Ghost. 3. Holy warfare, and its relation to the Church Army movement. 4. Christian consistency and inconsistency, and their respective effects. 5. The witness, demonstration, and power of the Holy Ghost. 6. The saving, sanctifying, and all-sufficient power of the blood of Christ. Speakers: Revs. R. G. Walker, J. J. Luce, W. Carlile, Sholto D. C. Douglas, J. T. Layard, T. Richardson, C. W. Servante and others. Programme on application.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

Supported by Voluntary Contributions.

President—

The Right Hon. the EARL of SHAFTESBURY, K.G.

Established 1822, for the purpose of employing humble Christian men, well versed in the Scriptures, to visit from house to house throughout the country, and visit all denominations. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required. The work is carried on in a spirit of love.

Subscriptions or Donations will be thankfully received by the Secretary, Capt. KEARNEY WHITE, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin; or at 9, Paternoster-row, London.

The Earl of Shaftesbury says in his last letter to the Secretary:—Many thanks for your kind letter, and many thanks to Almighty God for the good intelligence you give me about your Scripture Readers in Ireland. I wish I could more effectively assist you. Your letter is the best thing that I have seen or heard from Ireland

I enclose my donation, and only wish it was more.—Yours, SHAFTESBURY

N.B.—Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society"

MRS. WILKES proposes to be at home every Wednesday from Two till Five o'clock, for the purpose of seeing friends of Rescue Work. French Parsonage, Bayswater.

ASHLEY MISSION, Peel-grove, Bethnal-green.—Funds are urgently needed to take 300 poor mothers, 100 factory girls, and 200 Sunday-school children, from the heart of the East-end, for a day in the country. Contributions thankfully received by Miss BONTEIN, 47, Weymouth-street, W.

A DAY IN THE COUNTRY would greatly rejoice the poor of the Gee-street Christian Mission, Goswell-road. Please send subscriptions towards it, and for rent of Chapel, addressed to HENRY RUDELEY, Hon. Secretary, 82, Wood-street, Cheapside; or to ROBERT BAXTER, Esq., Treasurer, 6, Victoria-street, Westminster; or Messrs. Barclay, Bevan, Tritton & Co., Bankers.

ZENANA & MEDICAL MISSION, Training School and Home, 58, St. George's-road, S.W.—The Home will be removed this month into the above much larger house. Contributions earnestly asked towards the increased and increasing expenses.—Hon. Sec., Dr. Griffith; Treasurer G. J. Green, Esq., London and County Bank, Victoria-street, S.W.—Mrs. Rnmford, £35 (third collection).

Educational.

TO GODLY PARENTS.—The undermentioned (who is in no way connected with the school) is desirous of recommending an old-established YOUNG GENTLEMEN'S BOARDING SCHOOL. DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED FACING THE SEA on the South Coast, a short run from London, in which a thorough and first-class Education is given, based upon the teaching of the Holy Scriptures.

It is one of the few remaining schools in which the power of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ influences the hearts and conduct of the pupils

The success, happiness, and training of the Boys have been so remarkable in this School that a BOOK OF TESTIMONIALS GIVEN BY THE PARENTS should be read to appreciate results so unusual. Two Vice-Chancellors have placed their wards as pupils in the school. Reference kindly permitted to Dr. THORN, Paddington, London.

BRIGHTON.—EDUCATION.—Mr. ALFRED CLARK, B.A. (Lond.) receives about 20 Sons of Gentlemen, from seven to fourteen years of age. Terms from 40 to 55 Guineas. Pupils are thoroughly grounded in English subjects; Latin, Greek, French, German, and Mathematics. Personal care, Christian influence, and a healthy, happy home.—85, Buckingham-road, Brighton.—Referees: Rev. W. Poole Balfern Brighton; Rev. F. Cruse, Christ Church Vicarage, Worthing; Rev. J. B. Figgis, Brighton; Rev. W. Haslam, 19, King's-road, Brunswood-park, N.

THE WOODLANDS, Hitchin, Herts,—Select Boarding School for Boys. For prospectus apply to the Principal, ISAAC SHARP, B.A., a member of the Society of Friends. Careful personal training. Efficient staff of masters excellent recreation grounds

CAPTAIN MORETON has great pleasure in recommending Mr Foster's School to Christian parents, who value the judicious training of their sons. Mr. Foster personally superintends.—Eldon Park School, South Norwood.

HIGH SCHOOL, Smethwick.—Large, airy, well-lighted schoolroom and dormitories. Bath-room. Hot water pipes. Open, healthy country. Sound training in school and play-ground. Terms, 34 guineas, inclusive. Quarter commences July 30.—ALFRED J. WYATT, B.A. (London: Honours), Head Master.

BRAMFIELD, Cavendish-road, Clapham-common. Miss RABBIT receives a limited number of young ladies as Resident Pupils, to whom she devotes her personal supervision. Refined and Christian influences. Careful mental culture. Special advantages for modern languages. High-class professors attend. Preparation for Cambridge Local and Higher Examinations. Prospectus on application.

EDUCATIONAL HOME for the children of Christian Parents residing abroad.—Miss ARNOLD, 50, Victoria-road, Clapham-common, S.W.

BRUSSELS.—104 rue Les brousart. The Misses Cooke offer every advantage to Ladies desirous of studying French and German. Careful Christian training. Reference permitted to Miss Bamber, Marlborough College, Exeter.

VEVEY, Switzerland.—First-class Educational Establishment for young Ladies. Special facilities for acquiring foreign languages; careful Christian training; special attention to health; domestic arrangements as in the best English schools. The Lady Principal will be in England at the beginning of August.

H. E., Librairie, B. Caille, Vevey, Switzerland.

For Delicate or Backward Youths.

PRIVATE TUITION

must always be far preferable to ordinary school life, where such boys are usually left to the care and tuition of inexperienced and often uninterested Assistant Masters, and to the rough treatment of hardier schoolmates.

MR. WILLIAM PENN

devotes his personal attention, care, and tuition to such Pupils, of whom he takes only a few, as he desires to preserve the strictly family tone of his home. In the fear and love of God it is sought to train this family, great attention being given to the development of a manly Christian character, and moral training is regarded as more important than mere intellectual acquirements. The House is admirably situated on one of the loveliest spots of the Northern Suburbs of London, and commanding an uninterrupted view of many miles. Abundant opportunity for

BOATING, BATHING, CRICKETING, NATURALISING, &c., close by. A Carpenter's Shop is fitted up on the Premises, and Pupils are taught Carpentry and Joinery by a competent Tutor. Drawing, Painting, and Shorthand are included in the curriculum. Full particulars on application with References, to parents of Pupils.

SURREY HOUSE, 52, CLAPTON COMMON, LONDON, N.E.

Entrance at any date, Fees in proportion.

LONDON.—First-class Education for the Daughters of Gentlemen, in an establishment of long standing, conducted by members of the Church of England, occupying a spacious house in a most healthy locality in the West-end. The pupils have the advantage of loving care and safe training while pursuing their studies under first-rate Professors, their health, individual temper, and disposition carefully and tenderly watched over, and the whole system based on Christian principles.—DELTA, Boddington's Library, Notting-hill-gate, W.

MAGNETIC TREATMENT.

WE have advocated the claims of Magnetic Treatment in these columns by such arguments as are always unanswerable where the subject advocated has passed beyond the theoretical into the proved and practical. We have endeavoured to put the arguments in intelligible language, such as any reflecting reader could comprehend; and we are encouraged by the fact that our labour has not been in vain; but there is yet a class of readers who are not to be convinced by argument or converted by statements of our patients unless made by persons known to them. For the satisfaction of this class of inquirers we have arranged to append a list of 1000 names, some of whom are readers of The Christian, and may be known to other subscribers; these have endorsed the following general statement, and have expressed themselves willing to confirm it by letter or personal interview:—

"We have great pleasure and satisfaction in acknowledging the economy and efficacy of Mr. B. COPSON GARRATT'S Treatment by Magnetism."

HOMES OF HOPE,
4, 5, & 6, Regent Square, Gray's Inn Road, London, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of Mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to associate with a lower class.

The applications for admission are painfully urgent.
Funds are greatly Needed.

BOOKS FOR ENQUIRERS AND CONVERTS.

Young Converts;
Or, Beginners in Zion's Ways. By Rev. R. BOYD, D.D. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

I have been continually asked by young converts where they could get a book in which they might find advice that would be helpful to them. This book seemed just the thing needed at this time. I have known the author, Rev. Dr. Boyd, for many years as a dear father in Israel. I have read his work carefully, and recommend it to all young Christians for prayerful meditation." D L Moody

The Way of Life.
A Book for Enquirers. By Rev. ROBERT BOYD, D.D. Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth Boards, 1s.

"About fifteen years ago this little book attracted my notice. I read it with interest, and felt so much profited that I re-read it several times, and then circulated hundreds of copies among the soldiers during the American war. The number that then seemed blessed through reading the book has induced me to ask Messrs. Morgan & Scott to republish it, hoping that it may be the means of good in this country, as it has been in America." D L Moody

All About Jesus.
Thoughts and Reflections on the Person and Work of Christ. By ALEXANDER DICKSON. This book was printed at the express desire of Mr. D. L. MOODY. Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"The volume sets forth Jesus very much in Scriptural language, for we have counted over 1340 passages of Holy Writ, chastely and lovingly interwoven in the discourses. Throughout, Jesus is the subject of delightful meditation, affection, and adoration."
The Methodist.

Addresses to Young Men.
By Rev. DANIEL BAKER. With Preface by D. L. MOODY. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"These discourses were designed to be of an awakening character. They were preached (in substance) in numerous revivals, and were blessed to the hopeful conversion of many precious souls, of whom some fifty or more have become ministers of the Gospel. May He who was pleased to bless these discourses when they came from the pulpit, bless them also now." AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

SCRIPTURAL HOLINESS NOT SINLESS PERFECTION.
By CHARLES GRAHAM,

Minister of Avenue-road Church, Shepherd's Bush; Author of "The Highway of Holiness," "The Coming Great Revival," "Memoir of Rev. John Graham," &c., &c.

The Sword and Trowel says:—"So far as we can see, this is a sound book. If this is all that the Holiness people have meant, we cannot make out why there has been so much noise over the matter. To us these new revelations are nothing but the common-places of experimental divinity. With considerable skill and sagacity Mr. GRAHAM has proved his title, and wheeled away much fanatical rubbish. Anything which will promote true holiness has all our heart."

The Christian.

THE SEVENTY WEEKS OF DANIEL

SHOWN TO BE COMPLETELY AND ACCURATELY FULFILLED, IN JEWISH LUNAR YEARS.

By DR. ALDER SMITH.

THERE has always been a great difference of opinion amongst commentators concerning the seventieth week of Daniel's well-known prophecy (Dan. ix.), some saying it is past, others that it is still future, and that a great gap of at least 1850 years intervenes between the end of the sixty-ninth and the commencement of the seventieth week. A few of those who hold the Historical view of prophetical interpretation think the seventieth week is future, while those who believe in Futurist views take this week as a foundation stone, and assume that it is demonstrable that a personal antichrist is to confirm a covenant with the Jews, and that he will then break the covenant in the middle of this week, and thus stop the restored sacrifice.

My object in this paper is to prove, by chronological evidence alone, that the seventieth week of Daniel is past; that the Messiah was crucified in the middle of it; that "He" caused "the sacrifice and the oblation to cease," by the offering of his body once for all, in the middle of the week, and that the true key to the problem of the seventy weeks is to be found in lunar measurement.

It would take far too much space to mention the proofs usually given by commentators to show that the seventieth week is past, and that the "He" who "shall confirm the covenant" (Dan. ix. 27), and who "shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease," must be the Messiah, who is the chief object of the prophecy. But I will quote one sentence from Dr. Pusey's work on Daniel:—

"He speaks not of a temporary suspension of sacrifices, but of the entire abolition of all which had been offered hitherto: the sacrifice, with the shedding of blood, and the oblation, the unbloody sacrifice which was its complement. These the Messiah was to make to cease three years and a half after that new covenant began."

Now, if the tenth chapter of Hebrews be carefully read up to the eighteenth verse, it will be seen that our Lord did cause the sacrifice to cease. For instance, "else would they not have ceased to be offered." "Then said I, Lo, I am come (In the roll of the book it is written of me), to do thy will, O God." "He taketh away the first, that He may establish the second. By which will we have been sanctified, through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ, once for all." "Now, where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin." *

In considering the subject of Daniel's seventy weeks, the difficulties to solve are: First, which was the decree "to restore and to build Jerusalem," from which the seventy weeks, or the 490 years (they are weeks of years), commence? Secondly, what is the date of this decree? The words of the prophecy are very clear: "Know, therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks: the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times." Some commentators take the decree given in the seventh year of Artaxerxes (Ezra vii. 1, 6, 7) as "the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem." Dr. Pusey says: "Ezra had full powers to settle it according to the law of his God." "This rebuilding of the city, and re-organisation of the polity begun by Ezra and carried on and perfected by Nehemiah, corresponds with the words in Daniel."

Sir Isaac Newton takes this one, and also Mr. Guinness; but I think it is clear that the reason why this decree has generally been considered to be the correct one is because the time seems to correspond in solar years. For, from the seventh of Artaxerxes, B.C. 457, to our Lord's ministry, A.D. 27, was 483 solar years, or 69 weeks.

Other commentators believe the decree was the one given in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes, mentioned in Nehemiah.
